Now let us examine the commission of Christ as recorded by the different evangelists and see what we can learn from them. Math. says, "teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Math. 28: 19. Mark says, "Go ye into all the the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark 16: 15, 16. Luke's record stands thus: "Thus it is written and thus it behoved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day, and that repentance and the remission of sin should be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem. Notice first that where Matt. and Mark uses the term baptize, that Luke makes use of the phrase remission of sins. Hence Luke understood that baptism was for the remission of sin.

Now let us see if the rest of the apostles under stood it in the same way. Remember that Christ says, as recorded by Luke, repentance and remission of sins shall be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. In the second chapter of Acts, the apostles says, that "they were all in one place with one accord, and suddenly there was heard the sound of a mighty rushing wind and it filled all of the house where they were sitting, and there appeared unto them cloven tongues as of fire and sat on them, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the spirit gave them utterance. When this was noised abroad the multitudes came together, and there was present devout men out of every nation under heaven. Some began to mock and say, they was drunken. But Peter stood up and preached Jesus that he was approved of God, and that they had taken him and crucified him. When they heard this they were pricked in their hearts and began ot say, "Men and brethren what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, repent every one of you and be baptized for the remi sion of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Peter did not say be baptized in the room of circumcision neither did he say to commemorate, his death, but for the remission of sins, hence baptism is for the remission of sins. The devout Ananias so understood it for he says, "And now why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized and wash away your sins calling upon the name of the Lord." Acts 22: 16. Hence we as a body believe that baptism is for the remission of sins, not that the water has any virtue with in itself, but by obedience to the command we secure the remission of our sins.

My dear reader I have dropped these thoughts for your own benefit. May you study them well, and by the assisting grace of God may you be brought to the true light of the gospel is my prayer. In our next we will notice the Christian Salutation. Yours in love.

JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

Personal Experience of the Promises to the Churches.

How hard it is to yield the natural will and come to the resolution of the repentant prodigal when he said, "I will arise and go unto my father, and will say unto him, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son, make me as one of thy hired servants." But to each who does so resolve, and not only resolve, but does arise and go to the Father, how free and gracious is his welcome. All the past is not only forgiven, but not even so much as mentioned against him. The old robe of or false righteousness is removed, and the best robe put on, and instead of being a hired servant he receives the adoption of son-ship. Being now reconciled to God by the death of his Son, he receives the spirit of adoption, and is saved by the Lord Jesus as his life. Having entered the way, he needs power to overcome his spiritual enemies, and to walk in the highway of holiness, and is encouraged to fight in faith by the promise to the church of Ephesus, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." In his journey he soon finds that one of his greatest enemies is self, and that he who will save his life shall lose it, but that he who will lose his life for Christ's sake shall find it, and he sees need to lay hold of the promise to the church of Smyrna. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I give thee a crown of life." But how often does the soul find it hard to die not only once, but to die daily, as did the Apostle. Having once surrendered to the Savior, the pressing temptations of the enemy, the lustful uprisings of the flesh, or the allurements of the world in their myriad forms may draw aside into sad falls, because of not watching unto prayer, and keeping the mind towards him who is a Savior near at hand, even in the heart. In this stage of experience, we may be often almost ready to give up the struggle, feeling it impossible to reach the desired haven, being impelled rather by fear of the second death to work the works of righteousness, than by love to him who so loved us that he gave himself for us. Again he renews us by his grace, leads us to hearty confession of our failure, washes away our sin of omission or commission, and cleanses us from all unrighteousness. Humbled by our experience, the blessed comforter teaches us anew to give all up to Christ, to take his yoke upon us, and accept the promise to Pergamos, and feed upon the hidden manna, and know the white stone and new name to be ours.

Now dwelling lowly and prayerfully with the Lord Jesus, knowing that we have been baptized into the likeness of his death, and keeping our eye of faith fixed upon him, we know also his resurrection power—we are led along as one in his triumph, and receive the promise to Thyatira. Through him who makes us more than conquerors, we have power over nations, or combined forces of sin and satan—the morning star rises in the heart in glorious fullness. As now we steadfastly walk in the light, as God is in the light, the blessed truth is sealed upon the heart and understanding, and through the cleansing from all sin by the blood of Jesus Christ, we can grasp the promise to Sardis, that our raiment is white and clean—that our names will not be blotted out of the book of life, and that we shall be confessed by the Lord Jesus before his Father and the holy angels. This state may be continually approached through our varied experiences as the eye is kept single. It is entered into and maintained by faith in the keeping power of Jesus, whenever the soul is willing and ready to receive it. A state in which there is no need of going back again to Horeb to receive the "fiery law," for the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made us free from the law of sin and death—the sanctifying power of God making us pillars in his temple which shall go no more out, having stamped upon us the name of God, and the name of the city of our God. He writes upon us his new name—"The Lord our righteousness." This is the promise to the abiding church at Philadelphia, and in the Lord our righteousness we may stand and rejoice for days, or months, or years, in the hope of the glory of God. Then when the time comes, whether sooner or later, by lingering disease, or sudden and unexpected death, we shall inherit the promise to the seventh church, and sit with the Lord Jesus on his throne in the kingdom of God. We shall be made like unto him, shall see his face, behold him as he is, and shall swell the song of redeeming love—Friend's Review.

Oyster Chistianity.

Why you don't think, Deacon, that it's, wicked to sell oysters and give the profits to the Church, do you?" said I.

"Not at all," he replied; "but my point is this: individual Christians may do many things which are beneath the dignity of the Church as an organization. There is unquestionably a wide difference between the rights and duties of the organized Church and those of the individual members thereof. Individual Christians ought to make money, all the money they can honestly, and give much of it to the Church; but Christ's kingdom as such has certainly not an appointment to make money, nor any right to go into trade and commerce and put itself in competition with the world as a rival for profits and gains. And if it has no right to do it all the year round, it has no right to do it once in two months, or once in ten years. Christ's kingdom is not of this world, and if his people were more diligent in business and more generous in giving, the apparent necessity of putting his Church in this false and dangerous attitude would not exist.

And the whole thing grows out of an erroneous view of Christian beneficence. Why does God call upon us to do and give to the support of his kingdom? Is it because his resources are exhausted and he needs our help? Certainly not. It is to our honor and for our good. We need to give our money far more than he needs to have it. And all this sugar-coating of duty, this bribing us to beneficence with a stick of candy and a piece of cake, not only implies a sinful reluctance and stinginess of which we should speedily repent, but is destructive of a precious means of grace, and is in the very face of God's own wise and kind appointment. Are we so ungrateful to him who though he was rich, for our sakes became poor, and so unwilling to be like God, the great Giver, that we must be tempted with fun and frolic and feasting before we will do what ought to be our sweet privilege and great delight? And more, the influence on the young is deceptive and ensnaring, making them believe that this is beneficence and serving God, when really they are having a good time and serving themselves.

But you have often told me that by this means we get money from outsiders, which we very much need, and can be obtained in no other. Now what a humiliating confession of feebleness and greed is this! We must beg from the world, and that too by doubtful devices to support the Church of Christ! Is not this bartering the other kingdom to mock our Master and despise us for our niggardliness toward our Savior who bought us with his blood?

This talk about developing the social element of the Church, and interesting the outside world by getting it to give something to the cause of Christ, is utterly insincere. The avarice of the old and the worldly gayety of the young lie at the bottom, and are the procuring cause of every festival in the Church."—Herald and Presbyter.

SINNERS WARNED.

What excuse will you have sinner? Stop and think for one moment. Do you know why you are living in the condition you are? Have you ever thought if I should be called away suddenly to meet my Judge, what excuse will I have for not preparing for that solemn event which I know will surely come? Or have you some trivulous excuse framed for which you are staying away from Christ? Is it because somebody that is in the Church does not in accordance with their profession? Or do you expect to come to Christ after you have served the enemy of your souls a little longer? Do you suppose these excuses will avail anything when you are called to give an account for your stewardship here? Remember our time and talents are the Lord's and he has given them to us to improve for his use. Friendly sinner, I fear such excuses will be of little value. Because somedody else does wrong I will stay away from Christ and be lost, eternaly lost. Oh! awful thought that we should be forever debarred from all the enjoyments of heaven, and not only so but be in continual torments forever and ever Oh! kind reader, let me entreat you to ponder these weighty matters well. Think of eternity and even think am I safe, should I be called away now? May God help us all to prepare for that solemn event which awaits us all.

When I say "one ought to bear malice," and then do all manner of evils to mine adversary, how shall I be able by words to win him, while by deeds I am fighting him away! Let us catch them then by our mode of life, and by their souls let us build up the church, and of these let us amass our wealth. There is nothing to weigh against our soul, not even the whole world.

It is a blessed provision of our nature that the mind forgets its sorrow and remembers its joys. Though the iron may enter into the soul, yet nature will heal those wounds, save for the memorial scar; and though the pillars of our hope be scattered, yet around those broken bases they gather the wild flowers and the clinging moss which veil deformity with beauty.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

As Bro H. B. B. expects to be absent two or three weeks, we will be pleased to have our contributors supply us with plenty of good essays, correspondence, &c. Our help at this time is hardly sufficient, and as we will have to spend some time at the ease, and attend to the business, we will be very busy, and should have plenty of manuscript from which to make selections. Please think of this brethren and sisters and let us have your best thoughts.

EVIDENCE OF CONVERSION.

The best evidence of genuine conversion is obedience. The Psalmist exclaimed, "Oh that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes!" Paul's inquiry after his conversion was, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" and years after this we hear him say, "I delight in the law after the inner man." Christ seems to put a higher estimate on obedient ones than his kindred according to the flesh. On one occasion when surrounded by a great crowd of persons, he was informed that his mother and brethren were without and desired to speak to him, and he answered: "My mother and my brethren are those which hear the word of God and do it." Christ certainly had a very warm affection for his mother, for while hanging on the cross he commended her to the care of the beloved disciple John; and we have no evidence to believe that he had not a kind regard for all his relations, yet on this occasion he seemed to affirm a higher relationship than those than of an earthly nature. Those who obeyed him were closer than a mother, a brother or sister. We may learn from this that a union to Christ may be formed by obedience to him that is more intimate and sacred than that of the flesh, that there is something in service that to Jesus surpasses that of affinity and consanguinity, and that we can attain to true discipleship and give evidence of it only by becoming "doers of the word," doing the whole will of Christ in sincerity and truth.

THE LORD WILL PROVIDE.

In a recent visit to our home in the country, in company with several others, one of them remarked while traveling over the hills and through the valley, "There are a great many "ups and downs." This remark reminded us of the nature of our journey through life. There are certainly a great many "ups and downs" in it, and just as it is necessary that there be ups and downs, rough and smooth places on the earth in order to adapt it to the wants of men, so it is necessary that the journey of life be interspersed with the rough and smooth. The Christian needs these rough and smooth places, he needs the mountains and hills to loom up before him, he needs trials and privations to exercise and strengthen the inner man just as the physical body needs to be exercised in order to strengthen it. Hence the apostle says, "We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." There is however a great consolation to the Christian heart that notwithstanding these tribulations are necessary, and that we must endure them in order to be fitted for an entrance into the kingdom, God always provides a way, and will not tempt or try us above that which we can bear.

We have on record many striking examples of the manner in which God provides for his children, and these should teach us while encountering the many privations of this life to put our dependence on him with a full assurance that he will deliver us. What an apparently unsurmountable obstacle must have been in the way of the three Hebrew children when they refused to bow to the golden image! Was not the thought of being cast into the fiery furnace enough to frighten them from the path of duty? Yea, verily so, but they trusted in God. He, they said, is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace and will deliver us from their hands, O king. They were delivered, the Lord provided for them, and Christian friends, how often are we called upon to bow to the god of this world, and what fiery trials we must often endure because we will not render obeisance. These are the "ups and downs" in the Christian's way that are sometimes apparently unsurmountable, but if we will put our confidence in God as did the Hebrew children, when about to be cast into the firery furnace, or as did Moses at the sea, the Lord will provide a way.

But the thought of these "ups and downs" in the Christian life contributing to our spiritual strength is a very pleasing thought. Strength of body is desirable, and this is acquired by use and exercise. Our situation in this world and the means by which we gain our subsistence is such as is intended to develop and give strength to the body. The Lord has provided for us in this respect, and so it is with us spiritually. Our trials, our tribulations in this life are the means God has provided to exercise our our souls, and give us strength for our day and trial. The Hebrew children were much stronger after they had been delivered from the fiery furnace than they were before; i. e. if there existed within them a distrust or fear, if they should have been called upon to endure trials of even larger magnitude in the future this would at least be diminished. It was a means provided to try them and give them spiritual strength. This is the light in which we should look at all the trials that we have to endure for Christ's sake in this life. The apostle Paul felt this when he exhorted the Corinthians to purity of life, and after commending them with great "boldness of speach" for the upright manner in which they lived, declares that he is filled with comfort, and exceedingly joyful in all tribulation. 2. Cor. 7: 4. Let us then, dear Christian friends, look upon all the trials and privations in the Christian life only as means provided to give us spiritual strength, and in view of the of the fact too, that God always provides a way of deliverence, should we not rejoice? Ah yes, let not your hearts be troubled, Christ has overcome the world, and has promised to to be with those who put their trust in him even unto the end of the world.

There is a means also provided to keep us on the way that leads to God. As the poet has expressed it,

"Dark and thorny is the desert,
Through which pilgrims make their way.
Yet beyond this vale of sorrow,
Lie the fields of endless day."

This field of endless day we are all striving to reach, yet without the presence of some one to guide us through this wilderness world, we should never reach the promised land. In this we are provided. As the angel in the pillar of cloud conducted Israel through the wilderness to the covenant inheritance, so the sacred presence of the Lord, though invisible, now leads and guides the true Israel in the right way to the heavenly Canaan. This pillar of cloud was to them a pledge of safety and so under the care and presence of almighty God we as Christians pursue our way to the New Jerusalem. What a glorious thought that we are thus provided with the presence and protection of God. Why should we fear? Let us place our feet firmly on the platform of right defying the enemy of souls to lead us where the light of the Lord never shines, and where apostate men and angels are plunged into the blackness of darkness forever. Let us ever be guided alone by the word of truth, and with this as a light to our path, and a lamp to our feet, we may eventually reach the heavenly Canaan that rest which remaineth for the people of God.

CHURCH COUNCIL.

Not forsaking the assembling ourselves together as the manner of some is: and so much the more as you see the day approaching.—Heb 10: 25.

Brother Brumbaugh:—As I am not able to work for a few days, I thought I would write you a few lines for your paper, and if you can see no good design in it, give no room.

Dear Brethren and sisters, I fear the passage of Scripture referred to is not carried out in this nineteenth century as the apostle Paul intended for the Hebrew brethren to do. We often hear the above text quoted when we meet together where there is to be public preaching, which I think is not quite what the apostle meant, for this reason: According to the instruction that he gave Timothy, the word must be divided, hence we should apply this to the members that they should meet together more frequently, not to tell our experience, over and over, but to exhort one another of what sin is, and the different ways that we may sin, especially, when there are new secret organizations springing up among us, so that we may have warning in time, and the ministers clear their skirts and the blood will not be required at their hands. I think I have seen, years ago the necessity of holding Church Meetings more frequently. We have what we call councils meetings; but they appear to increase in proportion to the amount of trouble in the Church. I am led to think sometimes that if we had no difficulties to settle, some members would think that that there would be no need of them. I differ with such. Remember Paul says, "exhorting one another." Some days the brethren do not get time to exhort as they should, to fill the demand of the text. It is necessary to have such meetings when there is no trouble.

There are many things to speak about that would not be suitable in public. In the four following verses. Paul is speaking to the members, and shows the necessity of exhorting one another, and says, "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries, and then refers to he fact that those who despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses." "Of how much sorer punishment suppose ye shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God and have counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith He was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite to the Spirit of Grace.?" Such texts as these would be good to consider in council. The same writer says to the Roman brethren: "How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein?" I will refer you to two kinds of sin. "And the priest shall make an atonement for the soul that sinneth ignorantly, when he sinneth by ignorance before the Lord, to make an atonement for him; and it shall be forgiven him. But the soul that doeth aught presumptuously, * * * and that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Because he hath despised the word of the Lord and hath broken his commandments, that soul shall be utterly cut off, his iniquity shall be upon him." Numbers 15: 28, 30, 31. Peter tells us what Moses said concerning Christ, after this manner, "And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that Prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." Now let us notice the directions that Christ gave to his disciples in a Church capacity, as I understand it. Matthew and Mark gives it, If their hands or feet offend them they should cut them off, but in the 5th chapter it makes it plainer by saying it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Paul in speaking about the Church says, "Now ye are the body of Christ," i. e., members in particular. So I understand the Savior to mean that when a member does a premeditated sin, he should be cut off from the Church as sooo as it can be proven on him. Christ has not left himself without a witness. We have at least two, namely, Ananias and Saphira his wife. Peter undoubtedly understood that it was his duty to cut them off without drawing out of them an acknowledgement for further testimony to us; God sanctioned it by his power, caused him to fall down and give up the ghost. Now I wish you to notice that the Church lost nothing by so doing, for believers were the more added unto the Lord, multitudes both of men and women. For the different kinds of sin we have rules given how to deal with them.

Paul tells us of another kind of sin that took place in the Corinthian church, and writes to them thus: "It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife.—1. Cor. 5: 12. He tells them the nature of that sin in the next chapter, "Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body." Now this appears to be a milder form of sin than the one we have been citing you to, yet he had to be delivered unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh. Notice how zealous Paul is for the purity of the Church. "But now I have written unto you, not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be called a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner: with such a one, no not to eat. He also wanted to know of them if they did not know that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump, and he tells them to purge out the old leaven that ye may be a new lump. There is more on my mind on this subject but must hasten on to another class of sins.

When Luke records the Lord's prayer he says, "And forgive us our sins as we forgive every one that is indebted to us." But in Matthew it reads thus, "And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." Then after his prayer he comments upon it and says, "for if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you." Then again in the 18th chapter he says, "Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee," &c., and in the last verse he says, "So likewise shall my Heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses. Now what is the true name of the sin? I have come to the conclusion to call it a trespass, according to the promise we all made, that if our brother would trespass against us, we would go and tell him his fault, &c. We all know how it reads. But the point in that is, we must acknowledge our faults before the brethren is under obligation to forgive us. Now if we would all live up to what we promised and commit no willfull sins, there would be but little labor for the Church to do in that direction. I fear that some have gone spiritually asleep, because love and mercy are ringing in their ears. The carnal mind is apt to think that they might do something wrong for gain, and if they are "churched for it they will justify themselves as long as they can, then if they can't prevail, they have only to acknowledge to what the Church puts upon them. Then the Council must hold him as a member again. But if he can only keep it out of the Church he will feel all right, on account of Love and Mercy, thathe heard preached so much. We are not allowed to be more merciful than God is. King Saul tried that and what was written aforetime was for our learning. Then learn something here, and do not save those who should be cut off. Our prophet may hear them bleating in the Church where they ought not to be, and you may be brought to account for it. you cannot clear yourselves by saying the people spared them. Brethren let us meet more frequently and get in advance of difficulties, that others may see our good works, and be encouraged to join with us, that God may be glorified, and we edified.

A PILGRIM.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

Dear Editor:—

As I feel somewhat unwell to-day and not able to work, I thought I would communicate a few thoughts to the PILGRIM, and if you think them worth a place in the PILGRIM, you may insert them.

As I was contemplating upon the goodness of God I thought I would drop a few lines in that direction. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him, should not perish but have eternal life. I thought how good was God, and how condescending the Savior in making a way possible for our salvation, when there was no eye to pity, and no arm to save. God in his wisdom provideth a way that fallen humanity might again be reinstated into his favor, and he has sent His dearly beloved Son into this lower world as a lamb without spot and without blemish, to deliver the perfect plan of salvation to a dying world; and while the world was emerged in sin and folly the Savior made his appearance and undertook our redemption. Though He well knew that He must give his life a ransom for the fallen sons and daughters of Adam, yat he did not refuse to do so. He never murmured nor complained; He was as a lamb led to the slaughter, so opened he not his mouth but calmly submitted his life a ransom for ours. What condescending love the Father has bestowed upon us!

While we contemplate the love of God our hearts overflow in gratitude to him for such condescending love, and methinks He has yet that same love to the fallen sons and daughters of men that he had when He was in His humiliation here below.

His great heart is yet overflowing with love to the sons and daughters of humanity because they are the ransom of his blood and I believe it is a source of joy to him when sinners leave their sinful ways and return to Him. For He say that angles in heaven rejoice over repenting sinners, and it seems to me that Jesus will much more rejoice since they are the price of His blood that he shed upon the rugged tree, on Calvary's Summit.

Dear sinner, will you not come unto Him that He may smile upon you and rejoice over you, as the purchase of His holy Blood. Hear him say, "Behold I stand at the door, and knock if any one hear my voice and open the door I will come unto him, and sup with him. He also says, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." My kind friends is it possible that some of you have grown old in sin, and the Savior has stood without all the time, pleading for admitance and you have not yet opened the door of your hearts, and suffered him to enter?

My dear and dying friends, You who are walking the downward road without Christ and without hope in the world, I call upon you, and entreat you as one that loves your soul, and the Redeemer's cause, do not put off the loving Savior any longer; do not bolt the door of your hearts against your best friend who has done so much for you, and so kindly cared for you, and has so often been pleading with you to give Him your heart. But you still put Him off. You have often grieved Him. Oh! do not grieve Him any longer, for remember that He has said My Spirit shall not always strive with man. I fear that the good Spirit may soon take his everlasting flight and leave you forever in the dark. Oh! what a lamentable condition that will be! How can you be so indifferent to your eternal interest!

How can you procrastinate any longer in view of the certainty and shortness of your lives? Will you risk it?

Can you endure the idea of meeting your Creator unprepared, with the frowns of a bleeding and dying Savior upon you? Jesus will then refuse to own you for hear his own word: "Whosoever is ashamed of Me and my words, in this sinful world, of him will I be ashamed, before God and the holy Angels." Then dear sinners hasten to embrace your loving Savior while the day of grace is being prolonged, while the invitation is extended ere the night of death overtakes you. Do not suffer him to plead in vain. Do not tramp His holy blood under your unholy feet any longer, but resolve at once to embrace your Savior. Open the door of your affections and suffer him to enter and reign there supremely. Oh! consider what he has done for you; how he has left the shining courts of Heaven, and come down into this lower world to shed his blood for you. Oh! don't you imagine you see him upon the Cross there bleeding and crying "Father forgive them," surrounded by a murderous mob who are railing, mocking, and deriding Him while the holy blood is trinkling down from his hands and feet, which were always engaged in works of mercy and benevolence to the human family. There he died for you and for me. He never murmured nor complained. I ask you the solemn question, dear sinner, do you not desire an interest in the blood of that dying Lamb of God? I entreat you once more in the name of Jesus to forsake your sinful ways and seek peace and pardon in the bleeding wounds of our Savior. The Angels of light and glory are watching your return with deep interest. Jesus is watching your return with great anxiety. To day if you hear his voice harden your hearts, but admit Him at once, invite Him into your house, ask Him to take full possession of your hearts, when you lie down to sleep ask Him to watch over you when you arise from your couch of repose, ask Him to go with you ask Him to go with you through all the meandering scenes of life, and finally when the day of life is drawing to a close ask Him to wind up all your sorrows in death and in eternity and save you with an everlasting salvation.

J. C. RICHER.

GREELY, COLORADO.
May 4th, 1874.

Editors Pilgrim:—

Having a little leasure I will drop a line from this place. I came up from Buffalo a few days ago, have just returned from Denver. In that City as well as here, emigrants are coming in daily, the hotels are doing good business, some of the emigrants go to the mountains, to the mines, some remain in the towns, and some go down to the Platt and elsewhere in quest of claims. Some of the many get disgusted with Colorado in a day or two, (especially if it should just happen to storm as it does here as well as elsewhere,) and return eastward but little wiser than before they came so far as Colorado is known to them. Such was the case with several brethren recently from Ind. They visited Denver and this place, and returned. A correct idea of Colorado cannot be formed by only visiting along near the base of the Rocky Mountains. And again we say to all that think of coming out to this Territory, if you expect to find good farms to preempt, in a thickly settled community, plenty of fruit and the conveniences of life all to hand, you will be sadly mistaken. Such things are yet in the future, in sections where free farms are to be had. Men and women of energy and courage may, and can succeed, such only should think of coming here, unless health is the object. Persons having good homes where they enjoy peace and plenty, should not be hasty in seeking to do better. Yet we can say the opening for capitalists here is good indeed.

Since coming here I have become acquainted with Bro. Beckner of Tennessee who is living here, and friend Reiman and sister Reiman, the latter is the daughter of Eld. Geo. Baker of Iowa. Bro. George's son, G. W. and family also live here. The firm of Baker and Reiman are doing a good business here, second probably to no other firm in general merchandise and groceries. They seem to be well pleased with Colorado.

There are busy times here now with the farmers. A large crop is being put in, small grain looks fine. The past week has been unusually warm and pleasant, just now we are having an exhibition of "winter lingering in the lap of Spring," it is blustery and cool. The mountains are full of snow which gives us the assuance thatt we shall have plenty of water this coming Summer.

The Indians here left the Platte Valley and have gone to their own reservation, and it is thought never more to return. Truly yours,

J. S. FLORY.

ANSWER TO INQUIRY.

Bro J. Wise:—I will try and answer your inquiries. I mean that the A. Meeting is the out growth of the Churches, and it is the prerogative of the Churches to say what shall constitute the Annual Meeting and give power, hence it being created by the Churches, it cannot out of its author or it destroys itself, or by limiting the privilige of the Churches, it weakens own power.

Now this we think has been the case when the committee was appointed to devise means to lessen the expense of the A. M. They took from the Churches the very germ of Annual Meeting's existence, for it existed by the Churches through delegation, but they said no representation of Churches but trusted to promiscuous numbers. Now that will do for an Annual Meeting of persons but not for a council of The Churches. Hence we said the Churches form the Annual Meeting.

2. We think it would be proper to continue the District Meeting to dispose all local questions, but in case any thing arises of a general or doctrinal character that concerns the intire Brotherhood it should be represented, as it has now gone beyond a local Church and such a delegate could be neutral as to his local connection.

3. How shall questions be decided by that body?

Ans. By any form that that body may adopt, by silence, by acclamation, or by a majorty suposing there would be wisdom enough to adopt the best.

4. We think such a body should possess wisdom and the spirit of Christianity sufficient to organize and appoint its own officers.

Yours in the bonds of love.

P. S. Meyers.

Dear Editors:—

I believe that I hall promised to give you, when I returned, a little sketch of my trip down South, which I hoped would be of some interest to the readers of the Pilgrim; but I fear I shall disappoint them, as I was so very sea-sick both going and coming, consequently I got to see but little of the country between here and San Louis Obispo, although we traveled near the coast most all the way down. I did not see much but rough, barren mountains, a few of which looked very green and pretty with some few trees dotted over them. Monterey and the surroundings were very pretty, the hills or mountains were covered with shrubbery and some very tall pines could be seen at a distance. The town itself is not large but old. There you can see a little cross put up to mark the place where the Spanish landed many, many years ago.

We also saw two dead whales there which was quite a sight for our little ones. We touched at Santa Cruz, but I was too sick to go out to look around and take notes. We also stopped a while at San Simeon which is not much more than a landing, a kind of a rough looking country around there. Next we got to San Louis Obispo landing, a still rougher place, if possible. No dwellings at all. We all stopped in a large warehouse or depot, about two hours, after which we were ushered into two narrow horse cars, and had to ride about 1½ miles over a very high and rough road that wound around the the bluffs of the ocean. I tell you it looked dangerous going over those high, narrow bridges. The road was a narrow guage railway. Our friends met us with conveyances and we were soon gliding over nice rolling hills, with their beautiful carpets of green. I was somewhat disappointed in the country. I expected to see large valleys, and vegetation, crops &c., much more forward there than here, but not so; our crops, flowers, vegetables &c., here in Suisum valley was ahead of theirs, but their feed range was better than ours, but then there is so little stock there that it is not eat off like here. The land there is very rolling and hilly with small valleys, and beautiful streams of water running almost on top of the ground with little or no banks. One drawback to that country, the land is most all under Grants, and consequently you cannot get a Government title, but they are coming into market. They say this fall there will be two or three of the grants bought into market and be sold out in pieces, to suit the buyer. There is some splendid stock country there, nun some very large dairies. We in our travels stopped at one very large dairy ranche, slept in an old house built a hundred years ago, and said to be haunted, but we did not see nor hear anything to frighten us, though we had the privilege of going all through it. We saw some very old Spanish relics. I must now tell you that we had the pleasure of going all through an old Spanish Mission, one-hundred and two years old, built by the Spaniards and Indians. There were at one time 10,000 indians at work on the building, doing the rough and heavy work. It is an adobe,* but of course there is a great deal of wood about it. The Catholic Priest was very kind in taking us all through the building. It is very large, 300 feet square. The furniture, pictures and flowers were very ancient, being brought from Spain and Mexico about 100 years ago.

There was an old Church organ turned by hand, with a drum inside. Many large and beautiful oil-paintings, mirrors and very many large bells in the windows. Old bureaus, chairs and many other pieces of furniture, real old fashioned and queer looking. By being somewhat inquisitive, I got to find out and see the "baptistry" and "confession" rooms. Oh, I thought, what an idea to go in to confess to a poor mortal man! How much beter to confess to God. They keep holy candles burning all the time. The candlesticks, I presume were gold. They were several feet high. Among the last things the Priest showed us was an old dressing case filled with the most costly satin robes, of pink, blue, black flowered, and of most all colors, trimmed with heavy gold laces and fringe and just as rich as they well could be and just like the other things of old. Just over the dressing case were some of the most frightful looking images I ever saw. It was Christ as he was crucified on the cross, with his head bowed down in agony, and blood running from his bleeding hands and feet where the rugged nails were pierced through his flesh, was all so natural that one could not look on it without the most profound feelings. It carried me back over 1800 years to the time when he was shamefully nailed to the cross. How vividly it brought everything to my mind. Of course we can and do think of Christ as he was crucified, but when we see it all before our eyes, justas natural as life, it causes a different feeling to come over us. The Mission and the grounds have gone to ruin a good deal but they are fixing them up again and they, the Spanish and Irish Catholics, still hold service there, there are a great many Spanish living in and around San Louis, but as the whites are fast settling up and the Spaniards are leaving. The town of San Louis is improving with good schools, several churches, a fine court house &c. It is a very pretty place with its nice olive groves and mild climate.

Railroad Arrangements.

I have made arrangements with the Chesapeake and Ohio R. R. for persons attending Annual Meeting as follows:

Round trip tickets to Springfield, Ill., which is not far from the place of the A. M., at the following rates:

From Richmond, Va., to Springfield and return, $25.40.

From Gordonsville to Springfield, and return, $23.15.

From Charlottsville to Springfield and return $22.40.

Ask for round trip tickets to Springfield, Ill., to attend the German Baptist's Conference. Passengers leaving the last three points mentioned in the morning, arrive at Cincinnati, O., the next morning, and Springfield the following day. The route is to Huntington, W. Va., by the way of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, thence by steamboat to Cincinnati, and thence by way of the Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Lafayette R. R. to Springfield, Ill.

The above rates are low indeed, but I am sorry that I did not get the arrangement completed sooner so as to give a more general knowledge of the arrangement. J. S. Flory.

NOTICE.

I was in Toledo to-day (May 6th,) and saw Mr. Parsons, the General Agent of the Toledo, Wabash and Great Western R. R. and the arrangement is complete. Pay full fare going asking no questions, and at the A. M. Bro. John Beechly will give you a pass to return home free. Brethren from Pennsylvania and northern Ohio should take the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne and Chicago R. R. at Pittsburg and run west to Ft. Wayne, and there change cars and take the Wabash Valley road to Springfield without a change of cars—fare, $10.70, and return trip free. And from Toledo—if any wish to go that way—the fair is $14.00. Return tickets good until June 5th. You must get Bro. H. D. Davy to send you tickets, or rather orders to get tickets with, from Pittsburg to Ft. Wayne, then you are all right for Springfield, Ill.

John P. Ebersole.

ADDRESSES WANTED.

Bro. John S. Miller wishes to know the whereabouts of James E. Benton, says he borrowed a watch of him while teaching school, and has left and taken the watch with him. Any person knowing where he is will confer a favor by dropping me a note containing his address. Also wishes the address of Bro. William Warner, having some business to transact with him.

Address John Selliler, Box 106, New Paris, Elkhart Co., Ind.

NOTICE.

All those coming to the Annual Meeting by way of Toledo, Wabash, & Western R. R. from the East, when you get to the city of Springfield, Ill., do not get off at the city depot or you will cause yourselves trouble, but keep your seats till the train again starts and runs a mile or more west of the city, which will be the proper place for you all to get off, at the St. Louis & Alton junction. Those coming from the West on that line will also watch and not let themselves be carried a mile past the place on up to the city.

Isaac Barnhart.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sister Kate Gambel of Cordelia, Cal. In a recent letter to us says, "Our prospects for fruit and a crop are excellent. Haying has commenced. Our men started out to work at the hay this morning.

Bro. A. Hutchinson's address is changed from Oak Hill, Fayette Co., W. Va., to Peterstown, Monroe Co., W. Va. He further says that his afflictions are such that forbid him to write for the paper. He wishes the work much success and asks an interest in the prayers of the faithful everywhere.

Bro. J. C. Richer of Peru, Ind. sends the money to pay for the Pilgrim the remainder of the year for a poor widow with the hope "that she may be persuaded to join in with the people of God's choice and walk with us hand in hand to the mountain of the Lord. To this end I desire the Pilgrim may continue to labor and bear upon its wings food both for saint and sinner, that each may receive a portion in due season. To this end may the Church labor, and to this end may the Brethren be engaged in prayer, is the desire of your weak brother."

Bro. J. H. Garman of Sinking Springs, Highland Co., Ohio, says, "The motto of the church with us is, onward and upward. The third Sunday of this month a number who had made the good confession, were buried with Christ in baptism, and rose to walk in newness of life. May the Lord speed the good work, till there be none found to advocate the cause of the wicked.

At this date, April 29, the weather is cold for the time of the year. Ice one fourth of an inch thick on the rain tub. The weather is very wet and cold here. Not much plowing done yet for corn. The ground having been too wet. Wheat bids fair for a good crop. There has been a great deal of typhoid fever in this part of the country the past winter, and a number of deaths. The measles have also been raging all over this part of the country."

Bro. John Barnhart of Ill. says, "Please insert a few lines in your valuable paper for the benefit of J. H. Moore's pamphlet entitled the "Perfect Plan of Salvation; or Safe Ground," a neat and well gotten up pamphlet of 25 pages of good reading matter, contending that it is safe to obey the word of God, which is the ground and pillar of the truth. Buy them brethren, buy a thousand and sell them to everybody. If you can't sell them, give them away. Jesus will never censure you for giving to his children good food. The Brethren have sustained Bro. Moore well in his little work on Trine Immersion. Now we hope the Brethren will be still more liberal in distributing his second work as it is much cheaper, only ten dollars per hundred copies. Let us do all the good we can for Jesus in public and private, give him the glory by contending for the Gospel as given to us by our Lord and Master, in his written word."

What the People say of us in Col.—The Buffalo Colony, under charge of the Rev. Mr. Flory, at Buffalo, something like 100 miles down the Platte, is likely to be prosperous. We learn that Mr. Flory went to Julesburg, a few days since, to receive five families. It will be news to most of our people that this is a colony of religious people, they being Dunkards, who, without doubt, are among the most thrifty and moral of all the denominations. There are several communities of these people in Pennsylvania and Ohio; they always make good citizens, and they are certain to become wealthy. They do not believe in war, nor in the necesisty of government, as they do not vote. The location they have chosen for their colony is represented as choice, and as they have the Platte to draw from, they have abundance of water. We welcome them to Colorado, and especially to our country of Weld.—Greely Tribune.

Bro Joseph Hart of Princeton Ind. says he has a daughter, and the only member to her knowledge living in Texas. She has not heard the Brethren preach for four years. She appreciates the Pilgrim very highly, and those of her neighbors to whom she has given it to read seem to be very much pleased with the Christian spirit which it manifests. Some of her neighbors have never heard of such an organization as the Brethren. Brother Hart wants to know why it is that the stone the Prophet saw cut out of the mountain without hands, was to roll on the feet and toes of the image, and destroy, and eventually fill the whole earth is making such slow progress? The Brethren organized in 1720 or 21, and the Methodists in 1784, and draw the contrast.

There is not a State or Territory in which they have not organizations, while there is some that we are unknown in name, principle, and practice. My humble opinion is, as long as the Church stands on the ground it does at present, it will never fill its destiny, but as soon as it begins to send out able brethren everywhere to preach, and support them in carrying out the world-wide commission, we may then look for many conversions to the Christian religion, and we need not look for it any sooner.

BAPTISM OF FIVE HONDRED NEGROES.—On Sunday last five hundred colored persons, recent converts, were immersed in the river Appomattox, at Petersburg, Va. Long before the ceremony commenced, the hillsides overlooking the river were covered with acres of colored people. The bridge, was densely crowded, and a large number of boats were anchored in the streams thronged with eager spectators. At one o'clock A. M. 1,000 voices chanted an anthem three or four feet between them. The ceremony began by passing the candidates from hand to hand from the shore to the clergyman, who stood to his waist in the river. The work went rapidly on until the the hundreds were plunged beneath the muddy waters. When each convert came out of the water he began the most extravagant manifestations of delight ecstatic joy ever witnessed and so violent were these demonstrations at times that it often required the strength of four or five able-bodied men to guide them. Immediately after the ordinance the converts were attired in a regular uniform and formed in line. A procession was then formed numbering about 10,000, who marched back to the church, where the jubilee continued amid the greatest enthusiasm.

DIED.

SMITH.—Martha Rosanna, wife of Peter Smith, and daughter of James and Martha Reynolds, aged 36 years, 5 months and 6 days.

Mrs Smith was married to Peter Smith, June 13th 1855, in San Joaquin Co., Cal. She was the mother of five children, 3 girls living and 2 sons dead. The writer preached the funeral discourse of the eldest son some two years ago, and the youngest with its mother's. I conversed with Mrs. Smith before she died. She seemed resigned to the will of God, believed in Jesus Christ that he was her Savior, with that hope she left all things here below, the Spirit returned to God who gave it and the body to the earth.

DENNIS.—In Yolo Co., Cal., on the 17th of April 1874, brother John Dennis, age not given.

He sent for the writer of this notice about two weeks before his death to be baptized, feeling very anxious to be baptized before his last days on earth. When baptized, he rejoiced much that he had in full faith complied with the terms of salvation. In about ten days after his baptism he left all things here below, rejoicing in the hope of a blessed immortality and eternal life beyond the grave. His body was interred in the Cottonwood cemetery. The writer preached the funeral discourse to a large concourse of people. Disease consumption.

ELD GEO. WOLFE.

FOSSE.—In the Ashland Church, Ashland Co., Ohio, March 28th 1874, sister Susan Fosse, wife of brother David H. Fosse, and daughter of brother Samuel and sister Elizabeth Flickinger, aged 27 years, 7 months, and 12 days.

The subject of this notice united with the church in Somerset county, Pa., at the early age of 14; was married March 18th 1867, and moved to this church soon after, accompanied by the love and best wishes of all who knew her. She had poor health during her entire stay with us, and at times was seeming very near the cold river of death. Her last illness continued about two months, in the latter part of which her bodily suffering was very great. She bore all her afflictions with Christian fortitude; and having been a true follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, she went down into the dark valley without fear, being fully resigned to the will of him who giveth us the victory.

With a desire to obey in all things and to use every means of grace the Lord has provided, she called upon the elders to annoint her as the gospel directs; and we feel that the church has lost a faithful and exemplary member. While her husband is bereft of a dear companion, her two little ones, of a loving mother, and the neighborhood of a peaceable and devoted Christian lady, we rest secure in the hope that one more has been added to the sainted number in Heaven. Her brother Samuel Flickinger and her two sisters, Catharine Lint and Eliza Fike from Dale City Penn'a, came a few days previous to her death and remained until after the funeral, the services of which were conducted by the writer and others, from 2 Timothy 4: 6—8.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

I WOULD GRIEVE MY MOTHER SO.

SELECTED BY E. N. STIFLER.

I cannot go with you to-night,
You well the reason know;
The scenes may all be fair and bright
But I am sure 'twould not be right,
To grieve my mother so.

I cannot speak the words you spoke
A half an hour ago,
I know you say 'tis but a joke.
But should e'en such words provoke,
'Twould grieve my mother so.

I cannot touch the cup you drain,
Though sparkling it may flow,
Your invitations are in vain,
'Twould only bring me grief and pain,
And grieve my mother so.

I care not for your scoffs and jeers,
Or names which you bestow;
I'd rather brave a thousand sneers
Than cause my mother any tears,
Or grieve her true heart so.

Better Whistle than Whine.

As I was taking a walk early in September, I noticed two little boys on their way to school. The smaller one tumbled and fell, and though he was not very much hurt, he began to whine in a babyish way—not in a regular roaring boy cry as though he was half-killed, but a little cross whine.

The older boy took his hand in a kind and fatherly way, and said:

"Oh, never mind, Jimmy; don't whine; it is a great deal better to whistle."

And he began in the merriest way a cheerful boy whistle.

Jimmy tried to join in the whistle.

"I can't whistle as nice as you, Charley," said he; "my lips won't pucker up good."

"Oh, that is because you have not got all the whine out yet," said Charlie, "but will you try a minute, and the whistle will drive the whine away."

So he did and that was the last I saw or heard of the little fellow, they were whistling away as earnestly as though it was the chief end of life. I learned a lesson which I hope I shall not soon forget, and it called out these few lines which may possibly cheer another whiner of mature years, as this class is by no means confined to the children.

It is better to whistle than whine;
It is better to laugh than to cry,
For though it be cloudy the sun will soon shine
Across the blue, beautiful sky.

It is better to whistle than whine.
O man, with the sorrowful brow,
Let the words of thy child scatter murmers of thine,
And gather his cheerful now.

It is better to whistle than whine.
Poor mother! so weary with care,
Thank God for the love and the peace that are thine,
And the joy of thy little ones share.

It is better to whistle than whine.
Though troubles you find in your way,
Remember that wise, little fellows of mine,
And whistle your whining away.

God bless the brave boy for the cheer
He brought to this sad heart of mine;
When tempted to murmur, that young voice I hear,
"It is better to whistle than whine!"

"IS FATHER ON DECK."

A number of years ago Captain D. commanded a vessel sailing from Liverpool to New York, and on one voyage he had all his family with him on board the ship.

One night when all was quietly asleep, there arose a sudden squall of wind which came sweeping over the water until it struck the vessel and instantly threw her on her side, tumbling and crashing everything that was moveable, and awaking the passengers to a consciousness that they were in imminent peril.

Every one on board was alarmed and uneasy; and some sprang from their berths and began to dress, that they might be ready for the worst.

Captain D. had a little girl on board, just eight years old, who of course, awoke with the rest.

"What's the matter?" said the frightened child.

They told her a squall had struck the ship.

"Is father on deck?" said she.

"Yes; Father's on deck."

The little thing dropped herself on her pillow again without a fear, and in a few moments was sleeping sweetly in spite of winds or waves.

Blessed child! How her confidence shames our doubts and fears and restless vague surmisings. She had faith in father and she had no room for fear. And how is it with us? We have our storms and troubles and temtations. We fear and tremble. What is the matter? Is it not our time to ask, "Is Father on deck?" Father understands all about the vessel, the winds, the waves, the storms, the squalls, the tempest. "Is Father on the deck?"

Yes, blessed be God, Father's "on deck" all the time. He that keepeth Israel shall not slumber nor sleep.' He is "on deck," for he says, "Lo, I am with you always." He is "on deck," for he said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Tempted, troubled, distressed and frightened souls, look up. Give to the winds thy fears. Rest in God's faithfulness and love. Cast every care upon his arm.

"Fear not the windy tempests wild,
Thy bark they shall not wreck;
Lay down and sleep, oh, helpless child,
Thy 'Father's on the deck.'"

THE BRAVE SAILOR-LAD.

A few days out from this city, a great ship was overtaken by a terrible storm which lasted nearly a week.

One day, at the height of the tempest, the rigging at the main-mast head got tangled, and some one had to go up and straighten it. The mate called a boy belonging to the ship and ordered him aloft.

The lad touched his cap, but hesitated a moment; cast one frightened glance up and down at the swaying mast and furious sea, rushed across the deck and down into the forecastle In about two minutes he appeared, and without a word seized the ratlins—the rope-ladders of the vessel—and flew up the rigging like a squirrel. With dizzy eyes the weather-beaten crew watched the poor boy at this fearful height. "He will come down alive," they said, to each other.

But in twenty minutes the perilous job was done, and the boy safely descended, and straightening himself up, with a smile on his face walked to the stern of the ship.

"What did you go below for when ordered aloft?" asked a passenger of the brave boy.

"I went—to pray," replied the boy with a blush, and a quiver of the lip.

WHEN IS MY TIME?—This question was asked by a bright little girl who was fond of talking at the close of the day to a busy father. When is my time! The query will carry its own moral to every parent who reads this. Let fathers and mothers whatever duties may seem imperative, find "a time for talking with the little ones." Their time! perhaps only fifteen minutes, but their time, exclusivly and cheerfully. How many homes would be brighter, and how many children counted saved, if this advice was followed.

As long as this life lasts there is effort and toil: nor unto them that undergo them can any consolations give more aid than those of patience. —Cyprian.

It is almost impossible to state any truth strongly without seeming to conflict with some other truths.—Emerson.

As a ship meets at sea, a moment together, when words of greeting must be spoken, and then away upon the deep, so men meet in this world; and I think we should cross no man's path without hailing him, and, if needs, giving him supplies.—Beecher.

No gift of God does or can contradict any other gift except by misuse or misdirection.—Coleridge.

LITERATURE.

THE SECOND SERIES OF PICTORIAL HISTORIES, for schools and families, By S. G. Goodrich, (Peter Parley,) comprising Eight Books,—Child's Pictorial History of the United States, England, France, Rome, Greece, of the World, and a Natural History. Published by J. H. Butler & Co., 723 Chestnut Street Philadelphia, Pa.

It is extreme folly to place into the hands of a child, or learner an inferior school or text book, when it is possible to occupy its place with one of superior merit. These Histotories though first written many years ago, have been kept fully up to the times, by subsequent and recent editions, so that no series in the market excells or even equals them. In them the great historical facts, eventful epochs, and important dates are presented in that lively and pleasing style which has even made Peter Parley's writings acceptable to the learner, and of which he is peculiarly the Master. The illustrations are profuse and in most instances well executed. The binding and mechanical execution of the volumes, is such as would commend them to the most fastidious—substantial and tasteful. No effort has been spared by this enterprising Publishing house to make every series of its text books worthy of the confidence of the public, and the patronage so liberally bestowed upon them. We have called the attention of our readers to some of the publications of this house, and recommend all interested in text books to address D. W. Proctor agent Huntingdon, Pa., for circulars, or terms for Introduction.

NO SEX IN EDUCATION; or an equal chance for both Girls and Boys. Being a review of Dr. E. H. Clark's "Sex in Education." By Mrs. E. B. Dudley, author of "What Women Should Know." 16 mo. cloth $1. J. M. Stoddard & Co, Philadelphia.

Few books issued of late years have elicited so much genuine feeling among the women, and called forth so much criticism as Dr. Clark's book. Many of his utterances are extremely impalatable to them, and the result has been that several volumes opposing his theories have appeared. Of all the replies, none has equalled in directness, and argumentative force the one by Mrs. Dudley. She is an unprofessional woman, possessed of the advantage of testing her theories by personal experience, attacking the position of a professional man on a subject which he is supposed to have thoroughly mastered. She appears in behalf of her sex, and demonstrates in a satisfactory manner that he is wrong in his premises, and that his deductions are not founded in fact. The book contains much that is valuable and interesting, and is well worth reading. Its arguments are based upon facts which it will be difficult to controvert. The whole subject is one that cannot be too carefully considered.

—Lippincott's Magazine for May contains its usual freshness and fineness commanding the interest and gratifying the taste of its readers. Every article in this number is full of attraction; and those who are interesting themselves in the discussions upon cremation, will be specially interested in the paper entitled "Burning and Burying in the East," by Fannie R. Feudge, giving much curious information in reference to the customs in Burmah, and among the Chinese, and the account of the manner of the disposal of the dead in that part of the world is just now exceedingly useful. Did our space admit we should like to give the readers of the PILGRIM extended quotations from the article. (J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia.)

—Scribner's Monthly opens with an illustrated poem. "The District School," well worth the cost of the number. Edward King leads us this month through the mountains of Tennessee, Georgia, and South Carolina, with excellent descriptions, illustrated with well executed engravings. E. C. Steadman's criticism on Tennyson, the poet laureate, represents a high degree of literary excellence. "The Doctor's Wife," by Mrs. Davis is a story of a life comprised in two pages, which for its brevity and merit commends itself and its author. This is an excellent number of an excellent periodical. (Scribner & Co., N. Y.)

—The Schoolday Magazine for May has an attractive table of contents. It is the best dollar magazine of which we have knowledge. (J. W. Daughaday & Co. Philadelphia, Pa.)

"HOUSEKEEPERS" OF HEALTH.

The living being the great depurating or blood cleaning organs of the system—set this great "housekeeper of our health" at work, and the full corruption which gender in the blood, and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled, from the system. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical discovery with very small daily doses of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents.

DOCTORS COULDEN'T HELP HIM.

MEIGSVILLE, Morgan Co., O., Mar. 24, '72.
Dear Dr. PIERCE:

When I was 12 or 15 years of age I took what is called King's Evil, and by constant doctoring it would heal in one place and break open in another. It also broke out in my left ear. I first found your name in the Christian Advocate, and sent 10 miles for the first bottle, which did me more good than all other medicines I ever used. I am 28 years old and doctored with five doctors, and not one of them helped me so much as your bottle of Discovery. I have got well and able to do a good day's work.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been, the Apostolic method. POETRY.

Salvation's Stream.

BY WESLEY.

Salvations stream so full and free,
From dark Golgotha rises;
Dispelling gloom's dark scenery,
Which mercy's form disguises.

The clouds roll down the mountain side,
And faith the scene illumines;
Behold Salvation's swelling tide,
Through lightless valleys foaming.

See, grouped about its lovely source,
Celestial flowers blooming;
Throughout the mystic river's source,
The nauseous air perfuming.

Anon upon its emerald bank,
Are seen repentant mortals;
Who long from stagnant pools have drank,
Hard by destruction's portals.

Whilst millions in its waters pure,
Their leprous forms are laving,
From Satan's direful hand secure,
Redemptions joys receiving.

Harmonion's strains unheard by men,
Athwart its waters quiver;
And echo through the fertile glens,
Which skirt Salvation's river.

I flows along through sin's dark valley,
Unstirred by hell's commotion;
Until it greets the heaving swell,
Of Love's unbounded ocean.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

JESUS, MARTHA AND MARY.

From the conversation between Jesus and Martha concerning Mary we may learn a very important lesson. Jesus no doubt was a very welcome visitor at the house of Martha and Mary and we can not think Martha was destitute of piety, or tha tshe cared nothing about the blessed truths taught by Jesus, but she seems to have been one of those women that cared so much for the temporal wants of her visitor as to go beyond prudence while Mary war so devoted to her Master as to choose the one thing needful, instruction from Jesus that she might have eternal life, and that should never be taken away from her. It seems to us Jesus by his gentle rebuke, wished to remind her that it would be better to choose the one thing needful—instruction from him, than to be cumbered about so many things that only tend to the carnal or temporal wants of guests.

We have many Marthas in this age of the world and church. See a prototype of Martha in the character of that brother that is so cumbered about many things to make money that he scarcly find time to go to church meeting, or public worship, especially if it is a few miles off, or would require the sacrifice of a few hours of precious time, and see too, how he spends hundreds of dollars to build and fit up a house for visitors! The only one thing needful, instruction from Jesus as taught in the Sanctuary neglected too much. Among the sisters we meet so many Marthas; dear, well meaning souls, that are so often cumbered about many things so as to serve her guests with an abundance of the dainties of life, and it may be their untiring devotion in this respect is too often publicly praised, rather than Jesus-like gently rebuked. If the one thing needful is neglected in preparing to entertain our guests, it would be wisdom to attempt a reform. However a reformation that strikes at the lusts of the appetites would be no more popular than a strike at the lusts of the eye. yet duty is the better course to follow.

We are a people that love to visit and mingle one with another, but due consideration should be used lest this pleasant intercoorse should tend more to our hurt than good. In no way could our time be more profitably employed while together, especially on the Lord's day, than to choose the one thing needful, and that is instruction from Jesus, which we can have by reading his word and exchanging sentiments and getting religious instructions from these that are experienced and informed. This can not be the privilege with "Martha," who is busy bringing from cellar, larder, store house and kitchen, and preparing for her guests a sumptuous steaming and smoking meal,—hours of tiresome labor employed, and that too on a day that should be a day of rest. We have frequently on such occasions hardly had time to spend even a few moments in conversation with sister "Martha." And should it be so with the heads of families? Mother and father can choose that one thing needful, Mary-like, in learning, instructing or imparting something interesting to their guests, while the daughter or domestic help loses the influence that otherwise might have exerted over their minds by their presence. The tendency in the direction of neglecting the one thing needful, is we fear, a growing evil. If instead of making the Sabbath day a feast for the fleshy appetite, we would make it rather a fast day and a feast to the soul, in way of brotherly love and instruction, we would come nearer chosing "the one thing needful."

We would not ask a total abstinence from food, but be satisfied with what was prepared the day before. At our communion meetings we feel satisfied bodily even with the "fragments" taken up, then why should our petted appetites require more at the houses of our brethren? We want a reform, if needed, such a reform that will work for good—tend to the spiritual benefit of the visited, such a reform that will give the whole family an opportunity to be benefited by the intercourse of visitors. Shall we hint that the dull sermons, dull head-aches and stupid demeanor is the result of too much serving on the part of sister "Martha" when "strange" brethren are around. Experience teaches lessons not easily forgotten. In way of admonition I would say let us all have the one thing needful, upon any occasion let us be willing to sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of him the way of eternal life, that that cannot be taken away. Mary's conduct was commendable in the eyes of the Lord, even under the fault-finding eye of her sister, she felt happy at the feet of Jesus, especially so under the sweet tones of her Master commending her conduct. And so with any sister "Mary" that loves to sit at the feet of Jesus, to learn of him. "Martha" may complain or find fault; no matter Jesus commends. All will be well in the abundance of God's love and mercy, the one thing needful will ever remain to enrich the soul.

J. S. FLORY.

THE TWO WITNESSES.

To Sister Margaret Deardorff.

In reading the PILGRIM I see that my explanation of the two witnesses was not satisfactory to your views, and that you supposed them to be two living beings, who have not yet made their appearance, &c.

Now I take the liberty to give you a clearer statement why I believe the two witnesses are the word of God, i. e. the Old and New Testaments. Please take notice that their prophecy is not limited to one thousand, two hundred, and three score days, but they shall prophesy that length of time clothed in sackcloth. These 1260 days are the same as the forty-two months spoken of in the second verse, and refer to the time when the Holy City shall be trodden under foot, I believe that has been fulfilled during the period of papal triumph 538—1798. During that time the witnesses were in a state of sackcloth, or obscurity, and God did give them power to endure and maintain their testimony through that dark and dismal period.

The word of God i. e. the Old and New Testaments, declare that all who corrupt, or oppose its testimony and turn people away from it shall be hurt, devoured, and killed. See Mal. 4: 1. Rev. 20: 15. 22: 18, 19.

By the word of God did Elijah shut the heavens that it rained not for three years and a half. By the word of God Moses turned the waters of Egypt to blood, and surely the two witnesses will "smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will;" i. e. as often as plagues are recorded on their pages to transpire. The world will yet have to experience the infliction of the seven last plagues, "When they shall have finished their testimony." Finished, when? Forever? No. In sackcloth "the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them," &c. In the 7th chapter of Daniel, and other places, we see that a beast in prophecy means a kingdom or power—"out of the bottomless pit," no foundation—an atheistical power, spiritually, Egypt, like Egypt. Ex. 5: 2.

France, about the year 1798, denied the being of a God. She made war on the Bible. They did do away with the Sabbath and the law, they took a vile Roman and set her up as the goddess of reason, and publicly worshipped her. Yes in France our Lord was crucified,—spiritually—in his members. At the massacre of St. Bartholomew in the night of the 24th and 25th of August 1572, under the reign of Charles IX were murdered not less than ten thousand, and within the space of one month, more than thirty thousand followers of Christ. The motto of the French infidels was "Crush the wretch," meaning Christ. I think it may be truly said "Where our Lord was crucified." Other nations who saw France make war against the Bible would not engage in it; they would not "suffer her to be put in graves," put out of sight among themselves, though she was oppressed in France three years and a half. Great was the joy of the infidels all over the world when they heard what France had done. But just three years and a half after the decree passed the French assembly suppressing the Bible, a resolution to supercede the decree was taken up and passed thus again.

The witnesses "stood upon their feet" and the joy of the infidels were turned into fear. Shortly after that the British and American Bible societies were organized; they scattered her everywhere. She has been translated in more than a hundred and eighty different languages. This way I believe the two witnesses have "ascended up to heaven in a cloud." In a cloud, i. e. heavenly dignity. The Bible is exalted above all praise, it is a most invaluable blessing of God to man. "Their enemies beheld them." See the infidels now, they are ashamed to speak against that book in decent company, they have to go down to the places of rum and infamy if they expect to find hearers to their mad frothings against the Bible.

WALDEMAR MEYERS.

Cordelia, Cal.

It is not always right to be too determined on having all our rights. It is better to "give a little" than to quarrel. If one "smite you on the right cheek," it is better to "turn the other also" than to strike back. Quarrelsome children are very likely to make quarrelsome men and women. "Leave off contention before it is meddled with," is a divine direction.

Wisdom consisteth not in knowing things, nor even in knowing them thoroughly; but in choosing and in following what conduces the most certainly to our lasting happiness and true glory. —Landor.

Give A Reason for What You Do

"But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear: Having a good conscience; that whereas they speak evil of you as evil-doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ." 1 Peter 3: 15, 16.

Men ought always, and at all times, be ready to give a reason for what they do. The Apostle here enjoins it a positive duty for Christians to do so in matters of religion. The injunction; "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh for a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear," implies also for faith and practice, as well as anything men may do in the name of religion. There are cases recorded in the Scriptures where individuals were asked for reasons for what they did, and failed to give any. And in testimony that men did, and still may do things religiously for which they can give no valid reason for when demanded, I will cite three cases, and in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. These three witnesses will prove my position.

1. "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come." (Luke 3: 7.) In this case the multitude came to John's baptism, among whom were the (common) people, the publicans, and the soldiers. John who waxed strong in spirit saw viper in them, and asked them in their true character, "O generation of vipers who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come." As much as to say, give a reason for your coming to my baptism. But they have no reason to give, nor answer to make more than saying within themselves, we have Abraham to our father. They are properly denied baptism unless they repent and bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, and give that as a reason for baptism.

2. "And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment. And he saith unto him, Friend how comest thou in hither not having on a wedding garment? And he was speechless." Matt. 22: 11, 12. This man having done this thing coolly and deliberately, certainly ought to have been both ready and willing to give a reason for this strange act whenever asked for; but when the master of the house, upon whom he had intruded himself, asked him for one, he had none to give.

3. "And he heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" In this case a man of mind, intelligence, and education is engaged in acts and deeds, the doing of which involved the peace, liberty, homes, property, and even the lives of his fellow creatures. Such a man certainly should be ever ready to give a reason promptly for doing such things; but when suddenly asked for one, he had none to give, and hence evaded an answer by asking who it was that asked him a reason.

The great majority of the patrons of religion in our age of the world are carried along by the current of popular opinion and society, as the generation of vipers in the days of John the baptist were by the multitude. John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, and this should be the reason why they came to his baptism; but because others went these vipers will go too whether they know why or not; whether they can give a reason or not, they think within themselves, we have Abraham for our father, and others are going we will go too. And the man will go to the king's son's marriage because there was a general invitation given in the high way. This was all right, and the king did not ask him for a reason of his coming to the wedding, but for coming in without having a wedding garment on. The wedding garments were all made at the king's expense, and were ready for the guests in the king's wardrobe. Why then did you come in here without having one on? Give a reason for it. But poor man, he did an act for which he can give no reason and must remain speechless. So with Saul, he was carried away by a zeal not according to knowledge, and has no reason to give, and breaks down under the knowledge of guilt, and cries for, and obtains mercy because he did it ignorantly in unbelief. The generation of vipers will be cut down and cast into the fire if they do not bring forth fruits worthy of repentance. What will be the end of those who in our age are similarly carried along? A young clergyman in a sect that recognizes infant sprinkling as valid baptism, not long ago said to one of our brethren, "I have no faith in infant baptism at all. I can get no light on it. I have administered it, but have no faith in it whatever, but must do it to gratify the parents." Is this a valid reason? I would fear greatly to meet the Lord with such a one.

The apostle enjoined it upon all Christians to sanctify the Lord God in their hearts, and to be always ready to give a reason for the hope that is in them; and the hope that is in the Brethren is the hope of salvation, and to give a reason for this hope I write this article, which is the substance of a sermon I preached on the subject not long since.

The hope that is in the Brethren being the hope of salvation, and the giving a reason for this hope will be the reason for our faith and practice.

Hope differs from wish or desire in this that it implies some expectation of obtaining the thing hoped for, or the possibility of posessing it upon the gracious and well founded promise of God. While to wish is a simple desire for what is, or is not supposed to be obtainable; having no promise to sustain us in wishing or deserving the thing wished or desired. The Brethren base their hope upon the sure promise of God, as revealed to us in the Scriptures by our Lord Jesus Christ. And whereas we believe and proclaim, that all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and his gospel, and repent of their sins, and are baptzed in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and remain steadfast in this doctrine, will be saved; and that to attain this grace of evangelical faith, repentance and baptism, a mourners bench excitement is not necessary, as it is not of God. And as this faith and practice of the Brethren is evil spoken of by gainsayers, and evil-doers, our reasons for it is herewith given as follows:

Matthew 28: 18–20, Jesus says, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Mark 16: 15, 16, Jesus says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

Luke 24: 46, 47. Jesus says, "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

Dear reader, here you have the reason why the Brethren teach, and baptize none but the taught, and hope to be saved in the faith of the gospel and baptism, because the Lord Jesus has positively promised salvation to the gospel believer in his baptism. Hence the hope that is in us is founded from the sure and gracious promise of God, in which hope we can never be made ashamed. And as there is no trace of a "mourners bench" here in the great commission of the Lord to teach the nations, and to baptize the believers for salvation, is a sufficient reason for the Brethren to reject it. But as the preaching of repentance and remission of sins among all nations must begin at Jerusalem, we will refer to the beginning of this great work by the apostles, and see whether we will find it there. For Jesus says to his disciples after he had told them that repentance and remission of sins should be preached among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, "And ye are witnesses of these things. And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endowed with power from on high." Luke 24: 48, 49. To these witnesses we refer you; and by reference to the first chapter of Acts you will find how they all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," &c. (read the second chapter.) This was the power the Lord had reference to when he said he would send the promise of his Father upon them for which they must tarry at Jerusalem. And as preaching repentance and remission of sins must begin there, the power to enable them to do it will there be given and they will be ready for their work. The apostles preached "Now when they heard this they were pricked in their hearts, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren what shall we do?" Acts 11: 37. Here is the effect of faithful preaching; no marshal song, nor vociferous shouting, or boisterous praying being employed; but a calm, deliberate setting forth of solemn truths with an application to the guilty. What must we do? implies distress, and anxiety of mind; and if there is any healing, or consoling balm in the mourners bench we certainly will find something of its use here. Let us see whether the apostles, who are now speaking directly under the influence of the Holy Ghost, will tell these heart-pricked ones to kneel at the altar and pray, and be prayed for until the Lord will bless them. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (verse 38) "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." (verse 41.) "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles doctrine and fellowship." (v. 49.) There being no trace of a bench here is the reason the Brethren do not employ any. And as the apostles preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sins is the reason why the Brethren do so still. And as only those who gladly received the word were baptized and added to the church, is the reason why the Brethren baptize, and add none to the church but such that do likewise.

Dear reader, in giving you a reason for the hope that is in us, as well for our faith and practice, we have thus far found no trace expressed or implied of any mourners bench in the commission of our Lord to teach all nations, and to baptize them. Nor of the apostles preaching repentance, and remission of sins among all nations. We will see whether they introduced it subsequently. A reference to the Scriptures will determine the matter.

"Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. But when they believed Philip's preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. See here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, and the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing." Acts 8: 12, 36–39. Here the apostles preached Christ and the things concerning the kingdom of God unto the people, and those that believed were baptized, and rejoiced after faith and baptism, without any mourners bench excitement. The Brethren so preach, and all true believers so believe and do.

"Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." Acts 10: 46–48. In this case, the Lord without any mourners bench in order to convince Peter and the Jews generally, that the Gentiles were included in the all nations to whom repentance and remission of sins should be preached in the name of Jesus, granted unto the Gentile hearers of the gospel, the gift of the Holy Spirit before baptism. But Peter a servant, will not depart from the injunction of his Lord to baptize the taught believer, and so commanded these to be baptized. The Brethren so preach, and do.

"Lord what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do; and they brought him to Damascus." Acts 9: 6, 8. "And one Ananias a devout man came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts 22: 12–16. Here is no "pray on brother" till the Lord will bless you and pardon your sins, but a simple direction to the promise of the Lord that they that believe and are baptized shall be saved. He bids him to be baptized and thereby wash away his sins. The Brethren so believe and do, preach and hope to be saved.

"And a certain woman named Lydia, who worshipped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul. And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house." Acts 19: 14, 15. "And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethreo, they comforted them."(verse 40.) When they saw the brethren of Lydia's household, not the infants, the apostles comforted them. No evidence of excitement here; all as calm as a summer's breeze.

"What must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. (On the same conditions certainly) and they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. * * * and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house." Acts 16: 30-34.

Here the apostles preached the word of the Lord for salvation, the people believed it, and according to its injunction were baptized, and all rejoiced in God, but not before baptism like mourners bench religion teaches. The Brethren so preach, so believe, and so rejoice, and hope to be saved. "Many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized." Acts 18: 8. "When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Acts 19: 5.

My dear readers, in thus giving you a reason for the hope that is in us, "The Brethren," I have set the Scriptures in order before you, and they being the power of God unto salvation unto all them that believe, and we, the Brethern, do believe them, and hope in the faith and practice of them, to be saved by the grace of God. And as all you who are familiar with the Brethren know that their faith and practice correspond exactly with the faith and practice of the apostles as set before you in the Scriptures refered to. I in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ before whom you and I must soon stand to have our faith and practice tried, I now ask you for a reason of your non-compliance with it. And you practice infant baptism and patronize "mourners bench" religion, neither of which are found in the Scriptures. What reason do you give for it?

With sincerity and respect I remain your well wishing friend.

EXPLANATORY.

"So the last shall be first, and the first shall be last; for many be called, but few chosen." Matt. 20: 16.

I believe I have seen nothing written in explanation of the above passage of Scripture, and I do not know that I am able to give correct views on the subject myself, but if I fail perhaps some of the brethren will correct me, and in that way I can learn something myself.

It appears that many shall be called and yet there will be but a small number chosen. Now the question appears very plain to me. All the human family is called; the gospel calls them, their own conscience tells them they do wrong. In the first place Christ's Gospel tells them in plain language what they are required to do in order to become a part of the chosen few. But on account of unbelief very few are willing to be obedient to the teachings and requirements of Christ's Gospel. They strive to think that it is not necessary that we should keep all the commandments, they reason within themselves and think, I can wear clothes made in the height of fashion, and be just as good a Christian as those who wear plain clothes; if the heart is right all is right. I know that my heart is all right for I feel happy and contented. If we are true believers we cannot think that we can be saved by keeping a part of Christ's commandments and say the balance are not essential. If we are not willing to live according to the teachings of the gospel, we cannot expect to be accepted by God. Then if we are not of the chosen few it is our own fault. God will reward us if we are obedient and keep his commandments. Then brethren and sisters, let us try and live in obedience to God's commandments, so that when we have to leave this world we may be so happy as to be among the chosen few, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Do We Need A School? Yes!!!

I submit a few thoughts to the consideration of the readers of the "Weekly Pilgrim," upon the above subject Sometimes we see some expressions on the above subject, which are so untenable, and show such a want of discretion that we wonder that they are ventured, yet when we consider who that they chiefly come from those have a very limited education, and had not the privileges in their former days as are now offered, make us the more charitable toward such. We think that if such had a more liberal education, they would not use some words that are used, but would be left unused, or when used, would be more appropriate. We will try to reason a little together, by noticing some points, presented as arguments against a school. "If a college was unsafe 21 years ago it is unsafe now." This is the pith of some articles. Let us follow this method of reasoning and see where it will lead us to. If taking interest for the use of money was wrong 91 years ago it is wrong now. If purchaing bank stock 24 years ago was wrong, it is wrong now. If lightning rods were wrong 23 years ago they are wrong now. If it was wrong to hold infares 47 years ago they are wrong now. If it was wrong to take a fee for solemnizing marriages 17 years ago it is wrong now. If carriages were wrong 34 year ago they are wrong now. And if carpets were wrong 47 years ago they are wrong now. We might multiply this kind of logic, but the above is sufficient to show the short-sightedness of such reasoning It is said the church prospered in former days without a school. This is only true as far as a supported school by the church as a body is concerned. The Church has always had men of learning even from the apostles until now. The Brethren has had from the earliest history clasical and scientific men. Through whose influence, when the ordinance of Feet-washing was perverted and observed after supper, instead of before supper as we now observe it, was it set aright but by a classical brother, one who was versed in the Greek language? Those who have defended the Lord's cause, the most successfully, and through whose efforts the borders of Zion has been enlarged, has been men of facts, skill and logic. While many of these received their education directly from schools and become scholars, others received it perhaps more disadvantageously, and were a much longer time in securing it, through associations with educational men, scientific and clasical books, and in the stern school of experience. We don't want a school because we believe, that we can give our children and the world a better education than can be obtained in schools as they now are, but we do claim and believe that we can secure for our children and friends, an education in a school conducted and taught by the brethren free from many of the vices and unhealthy influences, (spiritually) to which they are subject in many of the principal institutions of our country. Who a certain writer alludes to by "a few hasty brethren and that our old leaders in the church," I do not now, but hope he has not left himself out. As I do not intend to be lengthy in my remarks or enter into a discussion upon the above subject, but simply notice a few remarks that has made their apearance in our periodicals in opposition to to our proposed school, I will close, summitting them in love to all lovers of reason, judgment, and truth.

"HE HATH MADE EVERYTHING BEAUTIFUL."

God is the source of all that is beautiful in the world. There is beauty in the landscape, in the heavens, in the trees, in the flowers, in the human body, in mind, and in the truth with which the mind is nourished.

There is beauty too, in the written Revelation, in the services of God's house, in the plan of salvation, in the person and work of Christ, and in the effect of that work upon the heart.

All these beauties in the works of God ought to lead our thoughts upward to Him.

And especially should this be the case when we know that God is mindful of every beautiful thing. Every little bud spreading its beauties in the sunlight, receives its nourishment, and form, and color from God.

Since he cares for these, he is mindful of his intelligent creatures, and the beautiful flowers speak to us, not only of immortality, but also of God's watchful superintendence.

And all this beauty we see around us in spring time is only a faint picture of the beauty of the world to come. It will bear only a feeble comparison with the beauty of heaven.

Since the beauty now un-seen by us infinitely transcends any beauty of earth, we should secure a hope of beholding the heavenly beauty.

And in order to do this we must appreciate the beauty revealed in God's word, and cultivate the beautiful in our own characters, by living lives of faith upon the son of God. —New York Observer.

THE TWO ROADS.

There is a place where two roads meet. One is broad and smooth, and leads gently down hill. At first it looks pleasant, and has trees to shade it and flowers in the hedge-rows; but by degrees the trees become fewer, the flowers disappear, the road goes down steeper and steeper, so that you find it harder and harder to turn back, and at last, if you go on, it becomes a straight, crumbling cliff, and you find out too late that the road leads nowhere but to distruction, and you slip or fall forward, and are dashed into the sea below.

The other road is so narrw that there is hardly room for two to go together, and it is rough at first and steep up-hill, and for a long way you will find few flowers in it; but if you will only walk on steady a bit, you will find it becomes less steep and rough, and their are flowers in plenty, and at the top of the hill you will see a beautiful house, in which your Father is waiting to welcome you.

The broad road is the road to selfishness; the narrow road is the road to goodness. At first it seem easy and pleasand to be selfish, and hard and painful to be good. But selfishness leads to ruin in the end, while goodness leads us to our Father's house.

DILIGENCE.

We find in Scripture that most of the manifestations of the will of God ma le to iminent saints took place when they were busy. Moses is keeping his father's flock when he saw the burning bush; Joshua is going round about the city of Jerico when he meets the angels of the Lord; Jacob is in prayer, and the angel of God appears to him; Gideon is threshing, and Elisha is ploughing, when the Lord calls them; Matthew is at the receipt of custom when he is bidden to follow Jesus; and James and John are mending their nets. The Almighty Lover of the souls of men is not wont to manifest Himself to idle persons. He who is slothful and inactive, cannot expect to have the sweet company of the Savior.

If the bounties of heaven were given to man without prayer, they would be received without acknowledgement. Prayer, administering the perpetual lessons of humility, of hope, and of love, makes us feel our connection with heaven through every touch of our necessities; it binds us to Providence by a chain of daily benefits; it impresses the hearts of all with a perpetual remembrance of the God of all.—Croly.

No Christian will ever be good for anything without Christian courage, or, what is the same, Christian faith. Take it upon you readily, have it always as a law to be always doing great works—that is, works that are great to you, and this is the faith God so clearly justifies, that your ability will be as your works. Make large ventures. Trust God for great things. With your five loaves and two fishes he will show you a way to feed thousands.—Bushnell.

God is the fountain from which all the streams of goodness flow; the centre from which all the rays of blessedness diverge. All our actions are only good as they have a reference to him; the stream must revert back to their fountain, the rays must converge again to their centre.—Hannah More.

What is life?—Life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, in which smiles and kindness, and small obligations given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart, and secure comfort.

The True Way.—The true way to progress and improve is to be more lenient with the errors and shortcomings of others than with our own. Draw a close rein over self, but have charity for the faults of others.

—We have no right to speak evil of any man, or report any harm of him, no matter how true the report may be unless we have a just and benevolent end in view.

As long as this life lasts there is efforts and toils: nor unto them that undergo them can any consolation give more aid than those of patience. —Cyprian.

Belief.—The fruit of belief is made manifest by the love we bear to our neighbors, and by our patience in time of trouble!

Who?—Who is wise? he that learns from every one. Who is powerfull? he that governs his passions. Who is rich? he that is contented.

District Meeting of Middle Pennsylvania.

On Monday morning in company with Bro. Geo, Brumbaugh, we took the train for our District Conference. On the train at our station, we met the Clover Creek delegates, D. M. Holsinger and J. W. Brumbaugh, and by the time we reached Harrisburg our number was increased to a pretty fair delegation. As there was no direct connection at this place, we were necessitated to spend a few hours in the Capital We soon noticed that there was something more than usual about to transpire, as the street was nicely decorated with wreaths while the stars and stripes were showing their colors from every available point. Among other things we saw several banners bearing the inscription, "Honor to whom honor is due." We did not have any of that Haman spirit, but we did wonder who was to be the man until we bethought ourselves of the "army union," and were told that General Grant was to show his august person. The General no doubt, is worthy of his dues, but it makes us feel bad to see blind devotees fall down and worship at the shrine of a little worldly popularity while they not only refuse to walk in the footsteps of the Great King of Kings but really, by their conduct, tramp Him beneath their feet. But so goes the world, and I suppose we will be to submit, but when we have honor to give, we want King Jesus to have his honor also.

In the P. M. we got on board the N. C. R. R. for Hanover Junction. Thence we took the Baughman's Valley road to the place of meeting. On our araival we found a large number of people congregated and were informed that there was to be communion service in the evening, but as the space was already more than filled and the meeting to be conducted principally in German, we accepted an invitation for night lodging believing that there was a sufficient force to carry on the work without us. We were told that the meeting was uncomfortably large and the order by spectators not commendable. On this account our brethren on former occasions thought it best not to have Communion services at such times, and have since been told that our brethren of this place have come to a similar conclusion.

Tuesday morning the delegates met and the meeting was organized, when Grabill Myers was elected as Moderator, Geo. Brumbaugh, Clerk, and ourself Ass't Clerk. The business for the meeting was now presented and deliberated upon as is generally done on such occasions. The Missionary cause, change of holding the Annual Meeting, and having a full report of the proceedings were the principal topics for discussion. That the missionary spirit is growing 'mong the Brethren is evident, but a plan practical enough to insure success, has not yet been hit upon and in consequence the cause suffers.—sinners are starving for want of the Bread of Life.

Our present plan of conducting the Annual meeting does not meet the approbation of a large part of the membership, and in consequence there is a change called for. If every district were as unanimously in favor of a change as the Middle Penn'a, there would be no difficulty in obtaining it.

The reporting question was passed without a dissenting voice. The objections that were formerly urged against it are now vanishing away, and it is now thought that such brethren who have not a sufficient amount of self-controll, prudence and judgement to speak such things as are commendable had better hold their peace, the fact is, the Spirit of Christ will not prompt men to say things that we need to be ashamed of afterwards.

Our deliberations were characterized by an over-ruling of love and Christian forbearance, so much so that there was nothing manifest during the meeting to mar the sacredness of the occasion, and we have not the least doubt but all present went home feeling that it was good to be there.

There were some few petitions sent to the meeting to have the District divided, but when the brethren got together the cord of love and Christian fellowship drew so endearingly that the move was defeated amidst the shedding of tears for joy. No wonder that it has been said, "see how these Christians love each other." The object in petitioning for a division was to obtain a more equal representation at the A. M., and for convenience of travel, but as there was a petition before the meeting calling for a change which would give the desired equality, the leading cause for the petition was met, and the other advantages were not of sufficient weight to balance the loss which we would sustain in Christian fellowship.

Elds. Isaac Myers and J. R. Hanawalt were chosen delegates to the A. M. after which some financial business of the Confererce was attended to and the meeting closed about noon of the second day. Then came the time of parting—parting, perhaps no more to meet, for some of us until we strike hands in our Father's kingdom.

At 3 o'clock P. M. we took the B. V. R. R. homeward bound. This road tendered the Brethren half-fare tickets, for which they have the thanks of the meeting. It courses its way through a beautiful valley, and we are told has met with considerable prosperity.

From all appearances there will be no panic in York county, in the shape of eatables, as the pro-pects for the now growing crop is good.

In York, for want of connection, we were waylaid about four hours. This time we spent as best we could and that was good enough, as York is a beautiful place and would well deserve the name of a city, containing twelve or thirteen thousand inhabitants, but for reasons best known to themselves, they refuse to be a city, and live and prosper as two distinct towns. Some of our party stopped off with brother Auldman, some three miles South of York, and two went home with brother Grey who lives in the neighborhood of York which cut our number down to six. Bro. Grey kindly directed us to the Mitchell House, where we had the pleasure of partaking a very excellent supper at a moderate price. We mention this because good accommodations and moderate charges are seldom found in the same house—in cities and towns we mean. After supper, we in company with S. A. Moore concluded to hear a lecture, and as great men are generally found in great houses (?), we entered the best edifice we could find, but on entering we found it to contain a very small congregation, however we were pleased to learn that we were to hear a discourse from a Moravian minister. The discourse was short and good we suppose, but could hear much of it on account of the large—emptiness of the house—and minister. At 8 o'clock the same night we arrived safe at home with brother Geo. B. and James R. Lane who sojourned with us until next morning. We are now preparing for our trip to Nebraska and A. M., an account of which our readers may expect if the Lord prospers our journey, and permits us to return home again.

JOTTINGS BY THE WAY.

In the absence of the cheif editor of the PILGRIM, I will offer a few jottings for our reader. The work in which we as ministers and Eds. are engaged, is an important and solemn one; Preach the word, preach it everywhere! Preach to every body, whether in season or out of serson; preach it boldly, faithfully, cry aloud, and spare not, neither shun to declare the whole council of God. Ah, yes, souls are starving for the want of pure gospel food. Thousands are dieing from the effect of adulteration, being poisoned by a mixture of truth and error; Christian principels are being destroyed, love and confidence lost and general corruption follows in the rear; hence the demand preach the word; because it is able to make wise the soul, even wise unto salvation, and will ultimately bring light out of darkness.

It was our duty to-day, May 17, to preach in what we cal ltue Haun congregation, some six miles east of where we live. On arriving at the place we found the congregation rather small, on account of a report going out that we would not be there, having contemplated a trip to the west, in company with our Bro. H. B. Brumbaugh, which by the way was on our mind until our return from District Meeting. The subject of a change in the manner of holding our A. M. being again before that body embracing the idea of lessning the crowd, and reducing the expences of the meeting, changed our mind somewhat in reference to going west, having no special business at the Meeting, being favorable as we are to such a change, we concluded to lessen the crowd one by staying away, and attending to our duties at home. In the mean time imploring divine aid to those whose duty it may be to labor there in the promotion of our holy religion, and in the establishment of the principles of peace and love among the members of our blessed Brotherhood, hoping as we do, that God will wisely guide the great work.

Our subject to-day was our relation to God, and to Jesus Christ, through the process of regeneration or the new birth, with a view to that blessed heirship that will finally bring us unto an inheritance of those mansions in our Father's kingdom; maintaining that as a violation of devine law broke up that relation the creature orriginaly with God, alienated and disinherited him, so in like manner an obedience to the law of the gospel, will restore and reinherit the creature again to God, make him or her heirs and joint heirs with Christ.

Our congregation was attentive and seemed to drink in deeply from this fountain of truth. Brethren let us labor in the might of God that souls may be snatched as brands from the eternal burning, that our skirts may be cleared in the day of final account.

THE DRY VALLEY MEETING.

We have just returned from the Dry Valley Lovefeast and although our time is limited, we cannot refrain from giving our readers a brief report. Public services commenced on Sabbath morning at 10, continued until noon and then concluded until 4, in the afternoon. Bro. D. M. Holsinger and J. W. Brumbaugh of Clover Creek congregation with the addition of the Spring Run brethren, Eld. Joseph Hanawalt, Geo. Swigart and John Hanawalt, constituted the ministerial force besides those of their own congregation. The assembly in the forenoon and also in the evening was large, and an apparent interest manifested. After services in the afternoon the multitude resorted to the water's side and there witnessed the burial of five precious souls in baptism. What a wonderful thing the immersion of a believer is in the eyes of the timid, pleasure-loving prodigal, and even to the faithless would-be professor! "I cannot be baptized that way it is enough to kill them," was the remark of several, and such too, as seemed to bear the mark of intelligence. What! cannot endure so much for the sake of Jesus? Oh that such thoughtless expressions would not be chronicled in the book of God's remembrance, or if they should be, in such a way that they may be erased, and that the thought of what Jesus has done for us may wipe them out clear and clean.

During the afternoon an election was also held for a minister. The lot fell on Bro. John M. Mohler, and after the evening services was installed into office. Bro. Wm. Howe was also advanced to the office of bishop, and Bro. Andrew Spanogle to the second degree in the ministry. Bro. Jacob Mohler is the aged bishop of this congregation and one too that is loved by all the flock. We had the pleasure of spending a short season with this aged father and his companion, and we can truly say that we cannot have any more pleasant associations in this life.

On Monday morning there was preaching again, and after a season of singing and prayer, Bro. D. M. Holsinger arose and announced as his text the following question: "Are there few that be saved?" We did did not have the pleasure of hearing much of the discourse as we had to take the early train for home. The meeting was a good one and will be remembered by us as one of the bright spots in this wilderness world. During this meeting we had the pleasure of meeting a number of our young friends whose acquaintance we formed several years ago. Some of them we were happy to meet as brethren and sisters while some are yet without the church. May God help all such to see the importance of securing their soul's salvation before it is eternally too late.

SELECTIONS.

THE PALACE OF TEARS.

Rise, rainbow-arched and cloud-embraced,
Pale palace of my dream,
Whose misty outline once I traced
Afar, by night's chill gleam,
And, by some spirit earthward strayed,
Whose home the moon enspheres,
Was drawn a shade through halls of shade,
Where glistened only tears.

The dripping dome like silver glowed;
The walls with briny pearls
Were crusted o'er; the floor I strode
With countless eddying whirls
Of diamond-water-drops spun round;
I moved a ghost, unheard—
Not freer from pursuit of sound
The shadow of a bird.

And moving on, an open court
Appeared, where tossed and caught
Their molten gems in sullen sport
Dark fountains, jewel-fraught;
I stooped—my lips recoiled in haste:
The Lethean flow of years
Can never wash away that taste,
That bitter taste of tears.

As if by that one draught of dole,
My vision cleared, and lo!
The iron entered in my soul,
While in a wizard show
The weary, weary weeping train
Of mortal miseries,
The pilgrimage of human pain,
Defiled before my eyes.

And I, who grief had known in name
And sympathy in form,
Now trembled through my inmost frame,
A shaken reed in storm.
But, fascinated, in my fear
I saw each pallid face,
Where sorrow's burning, branding tear
Had left its ashen trace.

And, drawn resistless to the throng
By answering chords of pain,
I joined my minor to the song,
My trouble to the train;
And still from hall to hall we trod,
And still our numbers swelled
The wild, weird labyrinth: yet, O God,
Thy clue our fingers held.

Religious Character.

Count yourself no Christian because you like thoughts and discourses about God. Be jealous of any gospel that merely pleases you, and puts your natural sentiments aglow. See God in the flowers if you will; but ask no gospel made up of flowers. Look after a sinner's gospel, one that brings you God himself. Doubtless you are hungry; therefore you want bread and not any mere feelings after it. Understand the tragic p rils of your sin, and think nothing strong enough for you but a tragic salvation. Require a transforming religion, not a pleasing. Be enticed by no flattering sentimentalities, which the children of nature are everywhere taking for a religion. Refuse to sail in the shallows of the sea; strike out into the deep waters where the surges roll heavily, as in God's majesty, and the gales of the Spirit blow. Man your piety as a great expedition against God's enemies and yours, and hope for no delicate salvation, not to be won by great sacrifices and perils. Let me add in this connection, also, a word of necessary caution respecting a certain form of unbelief that is now common. How many are beginning to say, and have it for a fine discovery, that there is no such thing as a distinction of kind among men. Are we not all religious, all good? Some a little, some more, and some very good? Even where there is no pretense of piety, where there is great wrong, corruption, brutality of life, is there not still a little sense of God that only wants to be increased? Some tender yearning after God, however suppressed? What have we, then, but distinctions of degrees, and no distinction of kind? Let this fiction go; it is time now to be clear of it. No great gulf fixed was ever thought of that is wider, or deeper, or more absolute. It is the distinction between a religious nature and a religious character. We all have such a nature, feeling after God; but we have not all found him. We have our religious sentiments, desires, yearnings; but how many never choose a religious end! How many, in fact, never did anything in the practical life but trample the sentiments, desires, yearnings of their natures, in lives of disobedience and a fight of rejection against God and every holy thing! No, my friends, the gospel distinctions are not gone by; the heaven and hell of the Scripture are not yet antiquated. Here they stand, based in the everlasting distinction of kind; darkness and light, chaos and order, falsehood and truth, are not more opposite, more impossible to be reconciled. A religious nature signifies nothing where there is no religious character; nothing, I mean, but the greater wrong, and wrath the more deserved.—The Christian Standard.

The Troubles of the Saints.

God's people in every age of the world have had their troubles. Indeed, we must all through much tribulation enter the kingdom of of God. But we are not to conclude that sinners are therefore exempt from sufferings and from tears. It is written, "many are the afflictions of the righteous; but is is not written, "few are the afflictions of the wicked." No, no; this is not the contrast presented; it is something widely different;—"Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of them all." The advantage here is not with the sinner, but with the saint. Many sinners fare much worse in this life than do persons who serve God. Satan has nothing to boast of in the way he treats his servants. God giveth us "all things richly to enjoy." Godliness hath "the promise of the life that now is. Saints and sinners are alike subject to the ordinary conditions of fallen humanity, and in all innocent and lawful enjoyments, the right and lot of the people of God is not inferior to that of the ungodly. It is true that sinners have some joys, and Christians some sorrows, which are especially their own. But the pleasures of sin are for a season; and all that Christians are debarred from, sinners would be better off without; and the bitterest pang a faithful Christian ever knows in the service of his master, is sweeter than the highest joy found in the ways of disobedience. Underneath the storms that vex a Christian's life, there lies the unfathomed depth of an everlasting calm. Troubles may come upon us, but we have a sanctuary to which we flee. "God is our refuge and strength," that is, by his grace he enables us to bear the trouble; by his power he carries us through it. We sometimes think, how shall we bear this or that trouble when it comes upon us? We do not know what we can bear till the trouble comes. We do not know what strength God can give us, or what a strong God he can be to us. O, what a blessed thing it is that we have this to comfort us when under any trouble; that we have a refuge to which to flee, and strength to enable us to flee there, and the power of God to keep us safe when we shall have reached it.

Fiery trials are among "all things" that work together for the Christian's good. Chastening yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby. For the tempted, a faithful God always provides a way of escape; and he not only turns the temptations to our present spiritual good, but blesses the man that endureth, and promises him a crown of life at last. The weeping is but for a night, but joy cometh in the morning; the world passeth away; the light affliction is but for a moment, but it worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things that are seen, but at the things which are unseen, for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal.—The Christian.

SHUT DOWN THE GATES.

In a wild ravine on the outskirt of the village where my boyhood was spent, stood an idle mill. It was a favorite pastime of the boys to go into the wheel house of this mill and geting inside the immence water-wheel—each standing at the outer end of one of its broad arms, to turn by our weight the wheel. By skilfully changing from one of the these to another, we could make the entire revolution, and the operation had just spice enough of danger to make it peculiarly fascinating.

One day a daring scamp-grace of our number, no longer satisfied with what had become easy through practice, proposed to let the water on, and offerd himself to "take the wheel." Accordingly one of the company went to the head of the "race," and lifting the board that shut out the water of the stream it was soon pouring on the wheel. For a while the motion was so slow that the young acrobat could not go through the changes nessary to keep his upright position. Every moment, however this become more difficult until at length the water-wheel acquired a velocity that fairly shook the building and poor "Rut," we called him, could only cling with death-like grasp to an arm on the wheel—a giant arm that seemed to be raised to dash him to pieces.

Amid the crowd with terrot-sricken lads who stood gazing on the fearful spectacle, one boy kept his head sufficiently to climb up between the wheel and the main building, and, creeping through a hole seized the gate and shut it. The great wheel slowly came to a rest, and the allmost lifeless boy was rescued.

I am always reminded of that taeacherous water-wheel when I see men trifling with forces which they can not control.

That moderate drinker in his tripling walk out on what seems a stationary plank. He finds it the arm of a wheel. But as the motion produces only a pleasant whirl of excitement he is not alarmed. He does not realize that the sluice gate of an over-mastering appetite has been opened, and that while he is feeling so secure, his friends see that he is revolving with an eccelerated velocity which will soon toss him into a nameless grave.

The man who means to take his fill of wealth, of honor, or of pleasure, and in some convenient seasons attend to his soul treads a fatal wheel. Evil habits, like a rushing strerm, pours on its steady current, and its spiritual life is fast ebbing away. Against that accumulrting power a devine agency can alone enterpose.

Upon the great machinery of our government has been turned a siwft, silent under shot current whose sluice-gate is at Rome. It is swolen by inexhaustible tributaries, and menaces not only our Puritan Sabbath, our open Bible and our public schools, but the very existence of our free government. Against this sinister and growing power evangelical Christians of every name should be invited into a firm alliance.—Rev B. F. Millard.

DRAWING NIGH TO GOD.

The divine instruction, "Drawing nigh to God," seems very simple yet it is wonderful. Shall we draw nigh to the Infinite? Shall we approach the throne of Omnipotence? Shall populated sinners come into the presence of spotless purity? What wonderful condescension is manifest in the command, "Draw nigh to God." It is too wonderful for us to comprehend; and still it but opens to the soul the supply of its greatest need. It needs instruction, life, purification, communion,—all of which can only be found by coming to God for them. Can the soul bear exposure to the all-searching eye? Can it bear the divine illumination which will show its own appalling character? If shielded by divine forgivness can it at last render due gratitude to a sin-bearing God? Shall not its incompleteness provoke the wrath of him that sitteth upon the throne? Remembering that our completeness is in him who redeemed us with his own blood, we may secure in him. Hence our approach to God may be in peace and with the most absolute confidence

There is abundant reason why we should draw nigh to God. We need peace and communion to allay our soul's fear and satisfy the cravings of intelligences formed for holy companionship and immortal existence. We find these, through Christ, in our Father's presence. In him we find beauty, love, usefulness, happines, and elevation in the scale of existence. This drawing nigh to God, though averse to fallen nature of man, accords entirely with his primitive condition; hence he who is stirred by that Spirit which was banished by the fall, is deeply moved with longing to approach the Author of that spirit—and well he might be, for there is peace, and true wealth, and salvation in no other. All are lost that stay away from God.

How happy is the condition of him who draws nigh to God and there abides continually. He need not depart from him. There we may abide—there rejoice. What sunshine does his presence afford! What a glorious hope in the light of his countenance! What strength is imparted by his vitality! In the sunshine of his grace, irrigated by the stream of life, how does every virtue flourish, and every heavenly fruit grow and ripen. What comfort, what happiness, what security, is afforded! What triumph over sin, what victory over death and what a glorious hope of immortality cheer him who thus draws nigh to God! Useful in life, victorious in death, he shall at last be richly endowed with eternal life in God's presence, where there is fullness of joy, at his right hand, where there are pleasure, for evermore.—Religious Telescope.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Near PLYMOUTH, Ind., }
May 17th 2874. }

We took the train at Huntingdon for a flying trip West, with the understanding to meet brother S. A. Moore at Altoona, who was to be our associate in travel. With the prairies on the brain and the prospect of good company, we felt rather good and enjoyed the cool evening breeze as quite an acceptable change from office duties, but our best and brightest prospects sometimes come to a very sudden terminus, and so did ours on this occasion as at Altoona our Bro. S. A. Moore was nowhere to be seen. This was a severe disappointment, but we have learned long ago, that when we fail in one project to take advantage of the next best that is presented—and that was to go right along. We then concluded to take a sleeping berth and sleep away our disappointment, but in this we failed as the Pullman conductor politely informed us that they were "filled." In making this arrangement we lost our seat and had no choice left but to stand or go to the smoking car. In the smoking car we were offered a seat all alone, which we concluded to accept and "hard it through." It was just after supper and they soon began to puff in every direction until things became almost unendurable. By a favoring Providence in sending a strong west wind, at an open window, we managed to get an occasional breathing of air. In this predicament we could not in any way manage to get our mind fixed on pleasant subjects. Smoking, in our estimation, was a decided nuisance, and we came to the conclusion that such gentlemen(?) should not only have a separate car but a separate train should be run for them, keeping at a respectable distance from all other trains, or else have it understood that it is gross imposition to place "non-smokers" among them. At Pittsburg we had better success and began to take things with a better grace, and concluded to take a nap, in which we succeeded so well that we did not awaken until we arrived at Sandusky, Ohio. From this on we enjoyed the ride very much, passing through some very fine lands and beautiful towns. The towns along this line are not so close together as they are in the East, but are more sizable, and, as a general thing, present a fine and comely appearance. The prospects for wheat in the first part of Ohio are pretty good, but we found as we got farther west the fields began to look badly, as do they also in the first part of Indiana. Orchards along the line were numerous and in full bloom, as were also the peaches. If no frost interferes there will be a heavy fruit crop. We were informed by the way that it has been quite dry during the spring, but the oats looks right well and only needs a favorable season to give a good crop. Onward bound the Iron horse sped his way, passing towns and cities in rapid succession until at last Plymouth, our proposed stopping place was called, where we got out and found our esteemed Elder and brother John Knisley awaiting our arrival. His was the first familiar face we saw since leaving home, and we were truly glad to meet him. After a short and pleasant drive we arrived at his residence where we met his kind wife with whom we were accquainted in the East, where brother John formed her acquaintance and took her along home with him as his wife. We were glad to find them so well fixed and living so happily together. Sister K. enjoys her new home hugely, and if we ever felt at home when abroad it was at this place. So much for kind and Christian hearts. After receiving every care and attention and an agreeable rehearsal of some of our past meetings, we were shown to bed and enjoyed a night of quiet and peaceful repose.

In the morning we learned that it had rained during the night and it was still raining, which was somewhat of a disappointment as we intended to meet the brethren and sisters at 10 o'clock A. M., in public worship, but about 9 o'clock it cleared off, the sun came out, and soon we were on our way to Church. When we arrived we found a goodly number had gathered and they continued to come until we had quite a congregation. As we were a stranger of course it fell to our lot to preach. This we done with the ability given, which did not seem to us sufficient for the occasion, but as all things work together for good, we suppose this was for good too. At 3 P. M. we met again for Sunday School at the close of which we were called upon to give a short lecture, after which there was a short intermission when we again preached another sermon. The meetings were largely attended as was also the Sabbath School. We were much pleased with the congregation and seldom enjoyed ourself as well as we did during these meetings. Their love, zeal and unity reflects credit to their Elder, John Knisly under whose charge they worship. When coming home after the P. M. services, imagine our agreeable surprise in meeting our traveling companion, S. A. Moore. Such meetings we seldom have but it was a meeting indeed. Thanks to electricity and Prof. Morse, for through his genius this goodly arrangement was brought about. Thus we met and we suppose our readers will not care to know the "whys" and "wherefores" no matter how important they may have been to us.

This evening we are in the house of brother and sister Keighbrick's, also have with us brother and sister Knisley who just now say, "give our love and Christian regard to the PILGRIM family and all who may know them as being of the household of the faithful. What we have received of them and the brethren and sisters in the way of practical Christian charity may others receive through prayer in the Spirit. We say, God bless the Union Church of Ind., as well as all others who labor to keep their lamps burning. We would be pleased to personate a number of other brethren and sisters of this place who kindly urged us to share their hospitality, but their names have slipped our memory. We think kindly of you all and hope we may have the pleasure of meeting you again, if not on this side, may it be over there in the bright forevermore. To-morrow, the Lord willing, we expect to take the train again for westward bound and when an opportunity presents itself you will hear from us again.

Yours, H. B. B.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The seats in the Frst Reformed Protestant Episcopal Church rents for $7,000 per annum. The choice seat in the body of the building rents for $200.

The minutes of the D. M. will not be published until bother H. B. B. returns from the Annual Meeting. With our present force we cannot find time to put them out any sooner.

JOHN W. FITZGERALD of Bealington Barbour county, Va., says, "The Church here is in a very good condition. So far as I know all is love and union. Four years ago we only numbered about 18 members, and now we number upwards of 80. Had some 13 accessions during the past year, and the prospects are favorable for still a greater number. Our D M. is over. Some favorable impressions were made by the brethren.

Our seasons have been very early, but this Spring farmers are backward with heir Spring work. The weather however, at this time is more favorable.

The N Y. Observer says there are only two blocks in the way of the union of all Christians. These are the denial of the ordination of non-Episcopal ministers and the denial of the baptism of non-immersed believers. This may be so but they are blocks that cannot easily be removed. It is a stubborn fact that the immersion of a believer in water only constitutes baptism and therefore all persons with a true, and living faith will ever let it remain in the way, as a block firm and unmovable.

A correspondent to the Observer in speaking of the effects of a great revival in St. Louis says, "Taking the city as a whole, it must be confessed there is no great perceptible change for the better. In some of its aspects it would even seem viler than before. The unclean spirit having for a while gone out, he has returned, bringing with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and so the last state is worse than the first." Christ did say that when the house is once garnished and swept and then the good Spirit departs, the condition of that house is worse than at first, but then it seems to us that among such a vast number of garnished and swept houses there ought to be an observable difference at least. There are many spirits gone out in the world and might it not be possible that the good Spirit had not entered at all? It would be well to need the divine injunction, "Try them."

MENNONITE IMMIGRANTS.—On the 7th inst. a party of forty Mennonites left New York city for Dakotah, where a new colony is being formed. It would seem that the Russian government has forbidden the the departure of the Menoon ites from Russia to Poland, in consequence of the manner in which the people have been treated on their arrival here by unscrupulous agents. Last year a large number arrived, having made arrangements with an agent for forming a colony on some lands belonging to the Western Pacific Railroad Company. When the people arrived in New York they were left to their own resources, no person turning up to take them to their destination, and it was then discovered that they had been heartlessly swindled out of the money they had paid for land. Tecy were howeever, forwarded to some Mennonites in Kansas by two Mennonite missionaries in this city. The Russian edict will remain in force until the authorities or Emigration Commission secure to this class protection from swindlers.

Report of Travels to District Meeting.

Bro. S A. Moore and myself started April 24, 1874, in a private conveyance, had meeting that evening at Aston's school-house, Fulton Co. Apr. 25, went to brother S. Sulleeberger's, Back Creek Church, Franklin county, Pa. Small meeting on account of sleet, rain and snow. 26th, meeting at 10, A. M., at Brandt's M. H. In the evening at the Upton M. H. 27th, Bro. Shank's M. H. near Greencastle. This church is under the care of Elder John Shank. 28th, went to Falling Spring branch formerly under the care of Elder. Wm. Boyer, dec'd. That evening meeting at the Shady Grove S. H. 30th attended funeral of brother Jacob Etter at the Falling Spring M. H., it it being the same time of our appointment at 10 A. M. Large funeral and good attendance. That same evening in the Mount Zion M. H. near Quincy May 1st went to the Antietam branch, under the care of Eld. Jacob Price; in the evening at Price's M. H. 2nd meeting at the the same meeting house at 10 A. M. The same evening in the Waynesboro M. H. 3rd, at 10 A. M. in the former place, and in the evening at the latter. This closed our labors in Franklin county. 4th, went to Marsh Creek branch Adams county, Pa. This was until lately, under under the care of Elder David Bosserman. Appointment that evening in their M. H. but on account of much rain thought it better to have a little meeting at the house of brother Pfoutz. The old brother and sister both being old and feeble and some afflicted, seemed to be much revived, as they could not come to meeting. May 5th, meeting in the evening in Gettysburg, had no meeting in the day time as we took a view of the late battle ground and national cemetery. 6th, went to Conewago branch, Elder Adam Brown has the care of this branch. In the evening, meeting at J. Trostle's M. H. 8th at 10 A. M. meeting in, the same place, and in the evening at the Latimore M. H. 9th, went to the Mummert M. H., meeting there in the evening. 10th, A. M. at the same place, in the P. M. went to Bro Huff's at he place of the District Meeting in York county Pa., Upper Coloras branch under the oversight of Eld. Andrew Miller. Evening meeting in the barn. 11th, meeting at 9 A. M. and 2 P. M., two overseers of the poor, chosen. Communion in in the evening. 12th, Council commenced, organized at 8 A. M. and closed on the 13th at 12.30 P. M, disposed of the exercises without much controversy. Returned 26 miles that afternoon, stayed all night at brother Utz's, near Gettysburg. 14th, went 47 miles to sister Marten in McConnellsburg. 15th, went home—40 miles—found all well, being absent 22 days and enjoyed good health all the time. Thank God for His favor and goodness, traveled about 422 miles and attended 24 meetings and visited a number of sick and had prayer with them. We omit the names of the brethren with whom we stopped as it would lengthen the report, and suffice it to say that wherever we stopped we were kindly treated, much beyond our deserving. May the Lord reward them in the resurrection of the just. We rejoiced with the members and their children. May we all live a life devoted to God that we may meet where parting shall be no more, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ.

LEONARD FURRY.

New Enterprise, Pa.

HUNTINGDON, May 14, 1874.

Dear Bro. Editors:—

I will give you a brief report of my recent visit to Eastern Maryland by request of the brethren there. I landed at the Pipe Creek meeting house in the evening of the 2nd day of May in time for Lovefeast. Found the church well represented, and good order. Had some four meetings in this branch of the church. From here I went to the Bush Creek branch and had two meetings in a new meeting house not altogether finished. The church is in charge of Jacob Trostle. From here I went to the Beaver Dam branch, had three meetings and thence to Monockosy branch in charge of D. P. Sayler and had three appointments. This visit was somewhat of a flying one and the first time for me. I made acquaintances and enjoyed myself well among the brethren and sisters. Found much brotherly kindness, and the brethren and sisters alive unto duty.

On Monday morning, the 11th, I left Double Pipe Creek for the D. M. of middle Pa., and am now this far on my return home, expecting to leave this place, Huntingdon, about noon. I am well for which I thank the Lord. My hearts desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved. GRABILL MYERS.

QUERY.

Dear Pilgrim:—

Will some brother give an explanation on the 9th verse of the 3rd chapter of 1. John, which reads, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin." Do the scriptures teach "once in grace always in grace," or is it possible for a regenerated person to sin, and receive forgiveness again through the merits of Jesus?

J. C. RICKER.

MARRIED.

REPLOGLE—SNOWBERGER.—By the undersigned, at the house of the house of the bride's parents, near New Enterprise, Bedford Co., Pa., May 17, 1874, Mr. Andrew Z. Replogle to Miss. Nancy Snowberger, both of Bedford county.

LEONARD FURRY.

DIED.

CORL.—In the Yellow Creek church, Bedford Co., Pa., May 14, 1874, sister Elizabeth Corl, aged about 82 years, and 2 months. Occasion improved by the brethren, from Heb. 13:14.

She was annointed about four weeks previous to her death, and died in full assurance of faith, and a glorious hope of a happy acceptance in the land of bliss, to realize a full fruition of eternal joy and everlasting blessedness. Farewell daughter, farewell grand-children. Prepare to meet me in heaven. LEONARD FURRY.

LATHAM.—on the 13th of April 1874, sister Betty Eatham, formerly Betty Bowers age not given.

Sister Betty was truly a devoted Christian, a zealous member of the Church about ten years. She was beloved by all who knew her. Speaking for Jesus was one of her chief characteristics. She leaves a kind husband who is not a member, and five step-children; one sister who is a member and a brother who is not a member, and a large circle of relatives and friends who mourn their loss; but they do not mourn as those who have no hope. J. W. FILZGERALD.

ELLER.—On the 29th of April, 1874, after a long and patient season of suffering, of desease of the heart, brother, ABRAHAM ELLER of Roanoke county, Virginia in the 74th year of his age. Occasion improved by the writer, from the last clause of the 10th verse of the 23rd chapter of Numbers.

The unusually large congregation present at the funeral, of all classes and of all religious persuasions, is evidence of the high esteem in which of our brother was held by all who knew him. Truly blessed are they that die in the Lord.

B. F. MOOMAW.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

Let go that Bush.

A young man was walking with some gay companions in a dark forest. They were not sure that they knew the exact course they were going, and yet the laugh, the story and the song beguiled their way. They hoped to come out of the woods at the right place, and thus get home safely.

But suddenly the sky grew dark, the birds ceased their singing, and in the distance they heard the howling of the hungry beasts of prey. Soon one of the young men stumbled over somethiog, and down, down he fell, with a piereing cry of horror. His companions saw him as he fell down the steep and fearful precipice. Their fears soon gave place to joy; for they saw that, instead of going to the bottom, he had caught hold of a bush half-way down. They called out to him; "Hang on, and we will save you!" They soon made a long rope, which seemed very strong, but, alas! it was made of a material which may be called "self-righteousness," and had no strength at all. It looked as if they could never break it, and so, they let it down to him, he seized it with all his might. They called to him from above: "Hold on, and we will draw you up!" But they did not lift him an inch before it broke all to pieces.

"Oh," he shouted, "the rope is broken; give me something stronger. Be quick for my hands ache dreadfully!"

Then they made another. It seemed very hard, and they said it must hold. It was made of "morality."

"Now," said, "they take hold of this rope, and we will draw you to the top." But they scarcely moved him before it snapped like the other.

Again he cried: "Give me something stronger, or I shall fall and be killed!"

While they were making a third rope, the poor fellow turned his eyes downward, but could see nothing but darkness. Suddenly he heard a sweet voice saying: "Fall, fall; I will save thee. My arms will catch thee. LET GO THAT BUSH."

His friends on the brink above did not hear his sweet voice; so they kept busily at work till they had finished a third rope, made of very common material which they found near at hand, twisted together, and called "good resolution."

"Now," said his friends, "we have a rope which you can never break."

No sooner had these words sounded in his ears than he again heard that calm, mysterious voice from below: "Fall into my arms! I am mighty to save." But like many proud hearts, he again seized the rope, though with almost nerveless hands. He was at the same time greatly frightened at what should have rejoiced his heart; for he thought he saw a sword ("the sword of the spirit") cutting off the root of of the bush.

"Hold on we will soon get you to the top. It's the last rope we can give you!" And so they pulled with all their might, but, like the other three, it broke as if it were a cotton thread. There he hung, but with little strength left, and yet again he heard that pleading voice: "Fall, fall, and I will save thee!" "But it's dark and I cannot see you; I am so heavy you cannot hold me." "Trust my word and see. Let go at once!" And again his foolish companion shouted: "Hold on, hold on! but the bush at last gave away, being cut entirly by that strange sword. And as he felt his strength all gone, he faitnly cried: "Lord, save, or I perish! What was his joy, when he found himself firmly clasped in the mighty arms of Him "who is able to save unto the utmost all them that come unto God by him!"

Now, my dear young friends, is not this a picture of the way you have been trying to climb up to heaven? Have you not often felt that you could by your own good works merit a home in the mansion above! This you can never do. Give up every other hope, and trust only in Jesus. "Let go the bush," and fall into Jesus' arms, and you will be as happy as that young man and the little girl who was led by this simple story to see the only way salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ.

"TAKE MY COAT."

Once there was a little boy attending a large Sunday-School in Brooklin, New York, who was much interested in bringing in children. He went about, week after, week getting new scholars. One day he brought a number of little boys to school, and when he got up to the door, one of the boys refused to go up stairs.

"Well, my little friend, why won't you go up stairs?"

It was a long time before the little fellow would give an answer; at last he said he did not want to go up stairs because he had no coat on.

"Is that all?" said the little missionary; "if that is all you want, take my coat."

In time he became one of their best scholars.

KIND WORDS are blessed things. Speak them every day. Scatter them like sunbeams everywhere. They will bless others and then return to bless your own heart.

"Most people drift. To do this is easy. It costs neither thought nor effort. On the other hand, it resists the tide one must have principle and resolution. He must watch and pray and struggle continually. And yet no thoughtful person, who cares for his own soul, will dare to drift."

TRUE DEVOTION does not consist in a long face, regulation sighs, and penitent words; it consists in devout deeds, in charitable words, in a sweet, tender, elevated, pure life that influences and betters every one who inhales the same atmosphere.

LITERATURE.

Oliver Optic's Magazine, for May closes the fifteenth volume. It is a highly successful home monthly and wherever taken in a family becomes a favorite with the boys and girls. Three of the serials are closed in this number. It also contains beautiful poems, many interesting articles and several full page illustrations. For the next volume we are promised new attractions and many of them continued serials by Oliver Optic, Elijah Kellogg, Miss Virginia F. Townsend and others. $3.00 per year. (Lee and Shepherd, Boston, Mass.)

Lippincott's Magazine for June presents a charming variety of subjects, treated with the ability so characteristic of this favorite monthly. The New Hyperion continues, as entertaining as usual. Vignettes from the Schuylkill Valley is an attractive feature of this number. The unpublished letters of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, will be found interesting and enjoyable. The number contains several fine poems, besides its usual variety of articles, monthly gossip, book notices &c (Lippincott & Co., Phil.)

Hearth and Home still comes to us well filled with an abundant variety of articles, items, engravings &c., all of interest and value to the household. The Orange Judd Company knows how to minister to the wants of its many patrons. The books published by it are all of special interest to the rural classes as well as to others. We may be able to give notices of some of them for the benefit and satisfaction of our readers in the future. The beautiful chromo—The Strawberry Girl—given free with the Hearth and Home is an appropriate picture for home adornment.

The Atlantic Monthly not only continues to represent the literary taste of New England, but has in its April number opened a department intended to represent the Educational interests of the same section of our great country, and as the same interests apply to all other sections the subjects there treated will be of great value to teachers and friends of education anywhere. This department will continue from month to month, and will be devoted to the "examination of problems which are exercising the minds of teachers of various ranks," and the editor promises to spare no effort "to render this department of real service to those who are engaged in educational work." The Atlantic always presents the best thought in the country, and is worthy of the most extended patronage. (H. O. Houghton & Co., Cambridge, Mass.)

No periodical of the country has gained so rapidly, and so nearly become a necessity with the class of readers for whom it was intended, as the Popular Science Monthly. In it every scientific subject is carefully treated, not with speculative theories, but by men of mature judgement, with deliberation treading in the sure path of experience and induction. The fifth volume commenced with the May number, opening with a well written and profusely illustrated paper on the Grape Phylloxera, which is continued in the June number, giving more about the grape vine pest. The author, Charles V. Riley, M. A., Ph. D., gives the results of many years' experience and observation. He divides the vines or species into classes, and considers each according to its liability to be effected by either gall-making or root-inhabiting insects. Some varieties are more subject to one type of insect, and others to the other, and he proposes to overcome the difficulty by grafting a hardy leaf and vine variety on a hardy root variety. Besides this article this number contains eleven valuable articles. 50 cts per No. $5.00 per year. (D. Appleton & Co., N. Y.)

HARLEMVILLE, Columbia Co., N. Y. July 9, 1873. R V PIERCE, M D:

Dear Sir—Your favor is just received. I intended to have written to you several weeks since concerning the improvement in my health, which is now very apparent. I have used one bottle of Favorite Prescription with the best results, although I will admit that I was somewhat discouraged after its use for a short time only). I took it under very disadvantageous circumstances—having the supervision of the house and during the season of "house cleaning" I was obliged, through the incompetency of help, to do more than I ought, and, of course, suffered dreadfully, lifted when I ought not to have raised my hand, and did all I could to bring order out of chaos,—but upon laying aside all cares and continuing the remedy I find after using less than one bottle, to be so much benefitted that I have discontinued the use, with no return of symptoms of which I wrote to you. I have suffered terribly and what added to my distress was the consciousness of not procuring relief from ordinary sources at times it seemed about impossible to stand so great was the distress. All of those severe neuralgic pains have disappeared, they were so bad at times that I could hardly walk without some external pressure. They seem to have left me like magic, suddenly, and have had no return; all other symptoms have been removed. The severe weakness and faintness have disappeared, and I can go up stairs with comparative ease now. I would have informed you ere this of my improvement, for I appreciated it, but I was fearful it was only transient benefit I was receiving, but I think sufficient time has elapsed to consider the beneficial results permanent. Accept my best wishes for for your future success and your kindness, in advising me. Very truly,
MRS. M. NETTIE SNYDER.

POETRY.

THE REFUGE OF PEACE.

BY WESLEY.

When dangers assemble,
And hope's powers tremble,
From fear 'tis a speedy release,
To cease our endeavors—
For vain are man's efforts,
And fly to the refuge of peace.

The merit of Jesus
Alone, can release us,
And bid our misgivings all cease;
Blest Calvary's mountain,
Redemption's sweet fountain,
Oh this is the refuge of peace.

Surrounded by dangers,
Lone pilgrims, and strangers
To earthly indulgence and ease;
We'll soon gain the portal
And hail all immortal,
Eternity's refuge of peace.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

"Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Psalms 50: 3, 4, 5.

The second personal coming of the Son of God into this world is a truth taught by himself while among men on earth, and attested to by heavenly witnesses. When on earth he frequently alluded to his coming again, and of the manner of his coming he says, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24: 27. Luke 17: 24. And of the state of society in the world at his coming he says, "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark. And knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. Matt. 24: 37–39. Luke 16: 26-29. But of the time of his coming he says, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." Matt. 24. 36. Mark 12: 32. Of the certainty of his personal coming the heavenly witnesses say, "While they (the disciples) looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel. Which also said, 'Ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up into heaven.'" Acts 1: 10, 11. And in the text it is said, He shall come. Let this suffice for the certainty; of Christ's personal coming, and for the certainty that man cannot know the exact time of his coming.

While in the flesh he said, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Luke 19: 10. Matt. 18: 11. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that through him the world might be saved." St. John 3: 17. The salvation of the human race being the object of God in sending his Son in the flesh, the question arises in the minds of some, Why then did not the Son finish the work whereunto the Father sent him while he was here on earth? Why the necessity of his coming again? Answer. The salvation of man is a great work, much was lost, and much must be restored, and is not the work of a day. The coming of the Son of God in the flesh was only the beginning of this great work. His part in the work then was to deliver the will of his Father to man, and to lay down a system, a form of doctrine; which if man will obey from the heart, he will be made free from sin, and become the servant of righteousness. He must establish a church against which the gates of hell cannot prevail; which is his body on earth, the ground and pillar of the truth, having the gospel which is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. And then to make the great atonement, the sacrifice of himself, leaving our sins in his body on the tree, and shedding his blood that men might have the remission of sins, and thus dying he might, through the grace of God, taste death for every man, and rising again that repentance and remission of sins might be preached in his name to all nations, and in his resurrection from the dead beget men again to a lively hope. And giving gifts unto men, with a charge to preach salvation upon the terms of the gospel to all nations, it became expedient for him to ascend to the Father, who in his name will send the Holy Ghost; and he will convince the world of sin, of righteousnes, and of judgement to come, and will lead believers into all truth, and bring to their remembrance all things commanded them, while the Son, the mediator between God and man, as man's advocate with the Father, pleads their cause at the throne of grace. And hence the scheme of salvation is as thoroughly carried on as in the days in which the Son was on earth in his humiliation.

And in order to secure salvation we must now become the sons of God according to gospel, by faith, repentance, and baptism. But it does not yet appear what we shall be, because with all our faith and repentance, with all our faith, hope, and charity; yes with all the religion the gospel can give, Man must die, and the soul, spirit and body, must be separated, and if there be no resurrection, what becomes of all our religion; for says the apostle, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." God made man a compound being of soul, spirit, and body. And man can only enjoy life and perfect happiness when they are united. In death they are separated, and much as preachers, or others may may say of the happiness of the disembodied spirits of the just, while the body is in the grave, their happiness cannot be complete, and hence it does not yet appear what we shall be; but when the Lord shall come then we shall see him as he is, and shall be like him in his glory and resurrected body.

While the bodies of all the faithful Christians are held in countless millions of graves, death is not swallowed up in victory, and still has its sting, and the grave triumphs in victory. Hence Christ must continue in his work until he has put all rule and authority under his feet, and after the last enemy death is destroyed, salvation will be complete; and to do this involves the necessity of his coming to earth again. I deem it not pertinent to the text to go into details and speak of his inaugurating, and holding a thousand years reign of peace on earth, and settling the Jews in Palestine the land of promise to their fathers, &c., all of which he will do while personally on earth. All these being preliminaries to accomplish the great end and object of his coming to seek and to save that which was lost in a complete and perfect salvation.

"I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 3. "And, behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be," (Rev. 22: 12.) is the end and object of the whole scheme and plan of salvation, but the closing scenes of it will be taught with wonders. To some it will be a scene of joy, full of pleasure and delight; while to others horror and consternation will take hold of them and fill their souls with distress and anguish; for to render the righteous happy He must separate the wicked from the just. And hence.

Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence. His voice shall be heard in all the earth. While on earth he kept silent, a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief. "When he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not," and when accused before Pilate of many things, he opened not his mouth. As a lamb dumb before his shearers, so he opened not his mouth. And now at the throne of God he pleads his people's cause, he looks in silence down on earth and sees sinners revel in sin. He sees the righteous and the unrighteous afar off. He sees the gay, the fashionable, the proud, living in their sins, spurning and setting at nought the counsels of God, with the tears, prayers, and earnest entreaties of his people all in silence, causing the sun to shine alike on the good and bad, and lets the rain fall on the just and on the unjust; but the time of his silence will have an end. He will descend from heaven with a shout that will pierce the sinner through and through, and every eye shall see him, and they that pierced him shall see him, and the kindreds of the earth will wail because of him. He will come with the voice of an archangel, and with the trump of God that all that are in the graves, and the great deep shall hear and must come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation. But the good who died in Christ shall rise first, while the good yet living in Christ on earth shall be changed into immortality in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall ever be with the Lord. Great will be the rejoicing with these, when the Lord will no longer remain silent, but proclaim aloud. These are they who confessed me before men in their faith and obedience. I now confess them before my Father and his holy angels. Not so with the ungodly, they shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous; but be like the chaff which the wind bloweth away. And not only the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have there part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone; which is the second death. But all sinners, with all nations that forget God, will be driven into hell. And all that know not God, nor obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ shall be banished with an everlasting destruction, from the presence of God, and from the glory of his power.

Dear reader, are you ready, and prepared to meet the coming of our God, whose coming will be most terrible. A fire shall devour before him. The Lord says his coming shall be like the lightning; not only like it in the suddenness of its coming, but like it in the intensity of its heat and devouring in its character. The apostle says, "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burnt up. Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." (2 Peter 3: 10, 12.) Surely a fire will devour before him.

And it shall be very tempestuous round about him. "The sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and looking after these things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. The heaven will depart like a scroll when it is rolled together, and every mountain and island will be moved out of their place. Add to this the consternation of the sinner and the ungodly," and the tempest will be very great. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men and every bondman, and every freeman, will hide themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains. And will say to the mountains and rocks, Fall upon us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: For the great day of his wrath has come, and who shall be able to stand." Truly it will be very tempestous round about him.

"He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth; and all that dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth shall hear his voice. The Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations and kindreds of the earth. The sea shall deliver up the dead that are in it, and death and hell shall give up their dead. And the dead both small and great shall stand before God. And the books shall be opened, and all will be judged by the things that are written in the books according to their works. And all whose names are not written in the book of life will be cast into the lake of fire." Thus will all men be judged.

Gather my saints together unto me. "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory." For "I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also, and where I am, there shall also my servant be. When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me on my throne. While the dead in Christ (his saints) shall rise first, and the living saints at his command shall be changed (into immortality) in a moment, in the twinkling of an ed saints to meet Him in the air, and ever be with the Lord. While the fire devours before him, and the tempest be very great round about, the saints will be safe with the Lord in glory. And while the kindreds of the earth will wail because of him; the saints will rejoice. And they that are cast out seeing Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with all the saints of God, in the kingdom of life and glory, will weep, and wail, and gnash their teeth in torment. "Then shall the righteous stand in great boldness before the face of such as have afflicted him, and made no account of his labors. But when the wicked shall see it, they shall be troubled with terrible fear, and shall be amazed at the strangeness of his salvation, so far beyond all that they looked for. And they repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit shall say within themselves, This was he, whom we had sometimes in derision, and a proverb of reproach. We fools accounted his life madness, and his end to be without honor. Now is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints. Therefore have we erred from the way of truth, and the light of righteousness hath not shined unto us, and the Son of righteousness rose not upon us. We wearied ourselves in the way of wickedness and destruction. Yea, we have gone through deserts, where there lay no way; but as for the way of the Lord we have not known it. What hath pride profited us? Or what good hath riches with one wanting brought us? All those things have passed away like a shadow, and as a post that hasteth by."

My dear readers, having set before you the certainty, with the design and object of the coming of our God, we have seen what disposition will be made of the saint and the sinner. It only remains for us to know what constitutes a saint or a sinner, and we will know which we are, and what part we will have in the great drama.

The saints, as declared in the text, are those who have made a covenant with God by sacrifice. And the apostle tells us that the sacrifice must be our living bodies to God, as in them the soul and spirit dwell, and the body must become the temple of God, who by the Holy Ghost will dwell in them so that we be not conformed to the world, but be transformed by the renewing of our minds and not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers, but to come out from among them, and to be separated, not touching the unclean thing; and God will receive us and be unto us a Father, and we shall be his sons and daughters saith the Lord. And being baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, we enter into covenant with him to obey him in all things, and become the partners to all the promises of God, and are the saints of God and will be ever with the Lord.

And sin is the transgression of the law of God, and the transgressor is a sinner; while he that knows to do good and does it not is sin, and he is a sinner. Hence the disobedient, as well as the transgressor is a sinner, and will be dealt with, and disposed of as seen above.

You my dear readers who have gone into the service of the world, and are become fathers and mothers of children whom the law of the Lord requires you to bring up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, while you yourselves are living in open and continued transgression of the law of God that requires you to righteousness, how do you expect to escape when our God shall come?

And you my dear friends who have the advantage of a Christian parentage, who have brought you up in the knowledge of the truth from your infancy, and knowing the truth ever since you have had knowledge to comprehend anything, know that the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe it, and you would take it as an insult to be told that you did not believe it. You defend it by argument, and rejoice when others obey it; yet you yourself have never been baptized, although the Son of God makes it upon your faith in the gospel a condition of your salvation. How do you think it will be with you when our God shall come and find you in your present condition? When a fire shall devour before him, and be very tempestuous round about him, and he will call to the heavens above, and to the earth beneath to judge the people, and to gather his saints to him. Where, O where, will the disobedient be! God help you to believe and obey the truth. Amen. D. P. SAYLER.

THE SABBATH DAY.

Is the Jewish Sabbath binding upon us under the Gospel despensation? I say no.

Seeing the Subbath question agitated I thought I would give my view on that subject, in as few words as I can. I think the majority of the brethren with myself believe the seventh day or Jewish sabbath to be a type of the millennium or seven thousand years. But I consider it is no type for the saint under the Gospel dispensation. All the faithful saints will take part in the "first resurrection." See Rev. 20: 6. Then how long will they rest? Just a thousand years? I say no. There is no cessation to their rest. Then how can any one apply the type to their rest? But it is a type for the Jews. The Jews will all return to Palestine before the Savior's coming, and have a Sabbath or rest for a thousand years: and the saints will be kings and priests over the twelve tribes of Israel during the thousand years. See Luke 22: 29, 30. "And hast made us unto our God kings, priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 10.

Could any one suppose that the saint's rest will cease at the end of the millennium? I hope no one will have such an idea. At the close of the millennium satan will be left in his prison to try the Jews. Then their labor commences again and their Sabbath is ended. But the saint's Sabbath never ends; they will reign as kings and priests with Christ until all enemies are brought under their feet. Therefore the Jewish Sabbath is a type for the Jew and not for the saint. This ought to convince the brethren and sisters on the Jewish Sabbath question.

The Savior was accused by the Jews of breaking the Sabbath. But he replied "I am Lord of the Sabbath." This is true, he is Lord of it. He hath all power in heaven and on earth and under the earth. Who is it that gives the Jews that rest of a thousand years, but the Savior? Therefore he is Lord of it, and over it. He will send an angel and cast Satan into the bottomless pit; and at the expiration of the thousand years will leave him out again. Then the antetype of the Jews is fulfilled and their Sabbath is ended, of which the Jewish Sabbath was a type. But the Saint's Sabbath never ends. They are the first fruits unto God. The Savior is the king of kings and Lord of Lords. The saints will be kings and priests not for a thousand years but for ever.

Most of those who advocate the Jewish Sabbath refer us to Rev. 1: 10, where he says "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day." This is a very appropriate term, "the Lord's day." The Savior is Lord of that day; he is the disposer of it; he gives the Jews that rest of a thousand years. So many ask will there be Gentiles on the earth at that time? Undoubtedly there will be. See Zech. 14: 18. Many of our Jewish Sabbath advocates hold the idea that Saint and Jew hold an equal position in the millennium; but they are under a sad mistake. The saints are kings and priests unto God, and will reign over the house of Israel during the millennium. Satan will then be left out of his prison to try or prove those that the saints reigned over during the thousand years; but he is not permitted to try the saints. They have power over satan and their rest never ends. Therefore the Jewish Sabbath is no type for the saint, but it is for the Jew. Therefore the Savior has never said "thou shalt keep the Sabbath day holy," as it was said under the law. We have more Scripture for keeping the first day of the week than for the seventh. See Acts 20: 7 "And upon the first day of the week when the disciples came together to to break bread &c." 1st Cor. 16: 2. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store &c." Romans 13: 1 "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but that of God: the powers that be are ordained of God." The higher powers or rulers of our country have set the first day of the week for public worship. This I consider binding upon us under the gospel dispensation; because the seventh day is not commanded by the Savior. The first day of the week is more appropriate for the saints. They are the first fruits unto God.

We have no right to add to or diminish from the law of Christ. He has given us all that we need for the salvation of our souls. Let us be engaged in searching the scripture and live in obedience to it that we may take part in the first resurrection, and become kings and priests unto God until all enemies are brought under our feet.

CRUCIFIXION.

There is a crucifixion which I should desire and seek after. First that the world may be crucified unto me, and second that I may be crucified unto the world. It is a noble figure representing the Christian's full and free disentanglement from the world, to break the connection and break assunder the bands between two persons of the closest friendship, sameness of sentiment and oneness of interest enough that one party be crucified for the other, may still have affections and feelings after the mangled, though one's amiable companion. But where both are crucified all bands are broken, and all ties are dissolved. When one becomes obnoxious to society, an enemy to the commonwealth, and a rebel against just authority, then he merits such an igoominious death as crucifixion. Well then the world is an enemy to the life Divine obnoxious to the welfare of my soul, and a rebel against the authority of heaven. Therefore I should earnestly seek to have it crucified to my affections, and my affections to it. When a person is crucified, his friends need expect no favor from him, and his foes need fear no harm at his hand, so if the world be crucified to me, I shall neither court its smiles, nor fear its frowns. I shall never expect anything, and I shall never be disappointed. I shall dread nothing, and I shall never be in danger. He that would win heaven must crucify the world, for while the world lives in affection it will always roll itself between the soul and heaven. Now what a mighty mountain, what a steep ascent is this! The sad experience of unhappy thousands can tell who never could climb over the terrestrial globe to the heavenly land. But intoxicated with pleasure, choked with cares, and crushed with the ponderous mass, sinks down to endless woe.

Again, as a crucified man whose extremities are bored through, and his countenance disfigured in death, is a very moving spectacle to every feeling beholder, so that the world crucified to the believing soul will appear vain, empty, vile, and loathsome, for the fond embraces of mental affection, and as a dead body soon becomes stinking carrion, so a crucified world in the nostrils of a renewed soul can send nothing up but an ill savor, all its perishing pleasures which are rich perfumes to carnal minds, will be only like open graves to gracious souls. Finally I shall be a gainer by this double crucifixion, for as no man will hoard up human skull bones for a treasure, so the world thus crucified, and all its vanities should be the object of our deepest contempt, and loathing, while things spiritually, heavenly, and divine, shall share our whole esteem and enrich my soul for eternity.

A LITTLE TOO LATE.

In matters of such importance as that of religion we should never be "too late" if in our power to avoid it; but so it is, we are prone to neglect and forget. We will notice how we are often a little too late, in things of great importance. Very often people will assemble at the place appointed time for worship, and wait half an hour and sometimes longer, even till their patience becomes wearied, consequently are not prepared to hear, just because the preacher was a little too late. The minister to mend the matter apologizes somewhat, making his discourse longer than it would otherwise have been. The next time several seats are vacant, only because the minister was a little too late. Brethren these things ought not so to be. Let ministers always be at the place of service at the appointed time, and commence at the appointed time, and soon the people will learn to be there also at the appointed time. This is the best, and in fact only right way to pursue in these things. Brethren if possible, never be a little too late.

Reader are you still pursuing the ways of vice? Then remember that destruction awaits those who put off their return to God "a little too late". The antediluvians were all buried in the watery grave, just because they did not repent until it was a little too late. Esau after he had sold his birthright, and would have inherited a blessing was rejected, just because he was a little too late. O repent dear sinner "to-day" the jews said let every man repent one day before his death, and lest he die tomorrow, let him repent to-day. So reader repent to day, for to-morrow may be a little too late.

LOVE.

Nature says love thyself, but Christ says love one another. Love is so essential a part of religion that there is no possibility of being a Christian without it. John 3: 10. Dear brethren and sisters, let us often read the 15th chapter of St. John and obey its teachings. Where love dwells peace will reign in families and neighborhood, and this will make heaven on earth.

By love Christ's servants will be distinguished from men of the world, who love none but themselves. The Savior says, "By this shall ye know that ye are my disciples if ye have love for one another." Any one can know for himself whether he is a disciple of Christ. Their doubts will remove if the true love is in their heart. Those who are destitute of love, are ignorant of its true value. Love enables us to be patient under trouble, slow to anger, to forgive injuries, to be kind to our enemies, to deny ourselves, to do good to our neighbors, to mourn over the faults and afflictions of others, to be kind, bear with the infirmities of all, and makes the present life a little heaven.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us watch and pray, and follow peace at home, and with all men as far as in us lieth, for we know not how soon we may be called away, and if we have not peace with one another how can we think to have peace with God. And if we have not peace with God, how do we think to have part with him? I want to meet all my dear friends and brethren and sisters in our Father's kingdom above, where we can ever be together and part no more. My love to all the brethren and sisters and friends that may read these few lines.

DISTRICT MEETING OF N. W. OHIO.

According to arrangments the above meeting convened on the 2nd, inst. at the Sugar Creek Brethren's church near Lima, O. The meeting was opened by brother Ebersole, after which the 15th chapter of Acts was read by the writer, following which the object of the meeteng was briefly stated, by brother Brower. There are nineteen congregations composing the above district all of which save one, were represented at this meeting. In addition to the delegates from each branch they were accompanied by quite a number of other members which rendered the meeting a full one and of some interest; besides the vicinity in which the meeting was held is thickly dotted with the comfortable homes of our beloved brethren all of which seemed to spare no pains to render all comfortable. Brother Daniel Brower is elder in charge aided by the assistant eldership of brother Daniel Miller; under their care they have a very humble and zealous corps of laboring brethren. May the Lord preserve their humility and zeal, for of this class alone, will those be who stand acquitted at the coming tribunal of Jehovah.

There was nothing of very marked interest brought before the meeting. The first query of much attention was relative to the propriety of brethren calling for aid through our periodicals in building churches and alleviating the losses of brethren occasioned by fire. Considered that such practice should not be encouraged; not because such help is not needed but for several reasons. 1. Calls in this way are too general and thus fail to be responded to. 2. They have become so frequent, that they fail to make the impression they should. 3d. The A. M. as far back as 1788, provides that brethren in want shall not go from church to church nor from house to house, to collect alms, but shall first apply to the congregation in which the want exists; if not relieved a written application is to be made to the next congregation and so on until the desired help is obtained.

It was thought best by the brethren that the calls attended to should be governed by the above and similar decisions of the A. M.

The want of our Russian Mennonite Brethren was also considered and met with a unanimous response. The delegates act in collecting in their respective congregations; while brother Brower was assigned the labor of collecting for the district. This call should certainly receive the prompt attention of the Brotherhood. The meeting was also visited by the enterprise of the home missionary appeal. Arrangements were affected to have a colony of members in Mercer Co. visited once a month by different ministering brethren; but the subject in general did not receive the attention that its merits demand. There is a very marked disposition among our brethren to emigrate, colonize and settle together. This is a very desirable trait yet when excessive may prove not at all times the best. Ministering brethren when seeking homes, should, we think seek them where they find the tender lambs of the fold without a shepherd, and there erect the ensign of the Redeemer. The habit of ministers moving into congregations where circumstances do not sufficiently invite them to do so does not unfrequently result unfavorably to the interests of the work. The last business of the meeting was to select two delegates to send to the A. M. Brother Brower announced that the illness of his wife forbade his leaving home. The brethren J. P. Ebersole and John Brillhart were chosen; the former as committee-man the latter to represent the district. While the work was in progress a messenger came with two items of sad intelligence, one for brother Brower that his wife, it was thought was dying, the other for the writer that sister Snider whom we had anointed the evening before we left had fallen asleep. We immediately turned steps homeward deeply impressed with the church's present great loss and her future gain. When we arrived at the place of funeral service we found one of the largest gatherings of the kind we ever attended. We improved the occasion from the words "Man goeth to his long home."

SAD INTELLIGENCE.

Dear Pilgrim:—Through your columns I will give notice to our friends of the death of sister Francis Sell, wife of brother Daniel B. Sell. She died this morning, May 18th at five o'clock. Funeral at 3 o'clock P. M. to-morrow. Such was the message received from Brother Witwer this morning, and truly we can say how sad!

Just two months ago I preached my farewell discourse in that arm of the Church, from 2. Cor. 13: 11. After meeting my brother Daniel and sister Frances and their children in company with some other brethren went with us home. Spent several hours in pleasant conversation, but as time is constantly on the wing it soon brought the solemn time of parting, and with tearful eyes we gazed upon one another, and I then remarked to my companion, "we are now all well and have partook in the enjoyment of health, but how soon may sickness and death overtake us and we may never meet each other again on earth," and so it is. Only two months and 18 days brings us the sad intelligence that our sister Frances is now lying in the cold and silent grave. But the comforting and consoling thought, we need not mourn as those who have no hope, but rest assured that sister Frances has gone to rest.

I so well remember of meeting at Brother Daniel's house, and when the hour of prayer arrived, sister Frances was heard adoring the Lord who has called her from this stage of action to wait for those who now do mourn. Since we read that the Lord's ways are not our ways, neither are his thoughts our thoughts, but as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are His ways and thoughts higher than ours, so also shall all things work together for good to those who love the Lord and are called according to His purpose. God is all wise and too kind to do injuries, so He may have our present and future good in view in all His dealings with the children of men.

We have thought of those kind ones whom our dear sister has left behind, who are not yet gathered into the fold of Christ. To you dear brothers and sisters, I now feel like addressing a few words out of deep love and concern for your spiritual welfare. I do believe that you all loved your sister, I do believe that you thought and believed she was a Christian and has died in peace. Now since all are liable to die at any time, should it have been your lot, would you have been prepared? Ask yourselves the solemn question. Believe me I feel interested in your spiritual welfare. Oft have I heard father and mother petitioning God to convict and convince you, now is the time, to-day is the day of Salvation, avail yourselves of the opportunity ere it be too late. Oh, accept the Savior's invitation, "come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

An Unspotted Character.—Money is a good thing, especially in these hard times, but there is something a thousand-fold more valuable. It is character—the consciousness of a pure and honorable life. This it should be a man's aim to preserve at any cost. In times of commercial distress, while some are proved and found wanting, others come forth tried as by fire. Here and there one comes out of that furnace far more of a man than before. Amid the wreck of his fortune he stands erect—a noble specimen of manhood. We have occasionally witnessed an example of courage in such a crisis, of moral trepidity which deserves all honor. Let it be the aim of every business man above all things else to keep his purity unstained. This is his best possession—this is a capital that can never be taken from him—this is the richest inheritance which he can leave his children.

Had it been an evil thing to suffer wrongs, God would not have enjoined it upon us. Know ye not that he is the king of glory, and therefore He commanded us to suffer wrongs, and doth all to withdraw us from worldly things and to convince us what is glory, and what shame; what loss, and what gain.—Chrysostom.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

To our agents and friends.—Bro. H. B. B. is now in attendance at annual conference and will soon return when we expect to commence the publication of the proceedings in full. This will be attended with considerable expense, and all for the benefit of our readers. In view of this we hope our patrons will make every effort to enlarge our subscription. It has been thought by some that the editors are anxious to publish the proceedings of annual Conference in order to increase their subscription list and enhance their pecuniary interests. What may have been the moving cause originally we cannot say, but if it should have been for that purpose, we are now prepared to say, from experience, that it was a very great mistake. The expense of procuring a reporter, &c., far over balances all we receive in return, and we have concluded, considering the low price asked for our papers, and the economy we have to use in order to make ends meet, that it is not really fair that we should go to all this trouble and expense and not be remunerated for it. Our readers should help to bear these expenses and we have thought seriously of adopting some method by which they might do so, and we believe our patrons are enough interested in the success of our periodicals to do so without raising any objections. We have however, with our brethren of the press, concluded not to make such an arrangement at present, and now as we go to all this trouble for nothing—and indeed lose by it—will not all our patrons feel it their duty to assist us in every possible way. If you will go to work and procure for us some new subscribers it will help us much, and this can easily be done. We should have several hundred new subscribers now. Please get to work immediately and see what can be done for us.

Then too we would have our friends work with a motive still higher than with a view to lighten our pecuniary burdens. It seems to us that it is time for an onward movement, an enlargement in our field of operations. The enemy is in pursuit, and the command is, "Go forward." Christian friends, let this be our motto. Let us all move onward together and although the sea may be wild and boisterous, and Peter-like we may begin to sink, yet if we are faithful ever laboring for the upholding of Christ's kingdom, the good work must move onward. Think of the cause. Is there aoything that should call more loudly and more reasonably for your greatest endeavors?

"Up! Let all the soul within you
For the truths sake go abroad."

Be Temperate in all Things—A friend remarked to us the other day that he could not see how women who were destroying their lives by tight lacing and dressed in the height of fashion can consistently attempt to banish the liquor traffic. We thought some of this afterwards and could not help but conclude that he was in the main about right. Intemperance is not confined to the use of intoxicating drinks. We can be intemperate in eating and dressing as well as in drinking, and it is certainly true that those who would be successful in refuting intemperance should themselves be temperate in all things. Drunkenness is a heinous sin and so is tight lacing and unnecessary adornment of the body in way of dress. May not the intemperate man with propriety say "Physician go heal thyself"? It does look some like the blind trying to lead the blind, and the probability is they will all fall into the ditch. We are inclined to look favorably upon any effort to banish the demon, intemperance, but it is in the temperance war as in every conflict, the combatants should be properly equipped i. e. they should have on the breast-plate of righteousness and the shield of faith. Righteousness consists in doing right, and as long as women persist in imparing their health, and even destroying their life in order to pay homage to the godess of fashion, they are not doing right and are utterly unfit for the great contest. How many there are to day engaged in this conflict whose adorning is such as the apostle plainly forbids, such as the plaiting of hair, the wearing of gold, and the putting on of apparel, while the adornment of a meek and quiet spirit, which is of great price in the sight of God, is wanting. Are not such persons intemperate? Yes, they are beastly drunk, and we not sure that this kind of intemperance will not send as many souls to perdition as any other. Let the war against intemperance be waged with power, but the enemy should be watched at all points least he, by the secret avenue of pride or some other evil, enter the soul and destroy it.

Church Festivals.—At almost every street corner for the last few days we are hailed with "Don't you want a ticket to the —— Festival?" We are always inclined to assist in any laudable effort to obtain money intended for the advancement of the good cause, but from our knowledge of right we cannot conscientiously give any other answer than an emphasized no. We believe that Christians ought to make all the money they can honestly, and give much of it to the church, but the church certainly has not an appointment to make money, nor has any right to go into such measures as are now resorted to, to obtain it. Christ's kingdom is not of this world, and if its subjects are governed by the principles of that kingdom there will be no necessity of putting the church in this false attitude. Does not God call upon us to give to the support of his kingdom, and must we be bribed to duty with a stick of candy and a piece of cake? This certainly implies stinginess of which we should repent, and further it is destructive of a precious means of grace. It is God's own wise appointment that we should give, and therefore we should do it willingly without being bribed to it.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Chicago, May 18, 1874.
At the "Commercial," 4 o'clock P. M.

This morning we were kindly conveyed to Plymouth for the 9 o'clock train west. In our last we said nothing of the country surrounding Plymouth, not because we thought it unworthy of notice, but for want of time. We saw much beautiful land in the first part of Ind., but for some cause the grain looked distressingly poor until we arrived in the neighborhood of Plymouth, when we noticed a great change in this respect, and in fact between Plymouth and where Bro. Knisely lives, the wheat looks better than any we saw this spring. If nothing happens, the average crop of Marshall Co. will be large. The land lies very nicely and consists generally of a deep, rich and black sandy loam, and is exceedingly productive yielding, when crops are good, an average of about 34 bushels of wheat, and 75 of shelled corn to the acre. After being farmed several times it gets very mellow, and is tilled with a very small amount of labor and cost. It really seems strange that our eastern men should continue to toil and toil among the stones and hills without getting a satisfactory reward for their labors when thousands of acres of the best of land is lying here untilled for the want of laborers. The only drawbacks we noticed in this neighborhood are some swamps or marshes, but the larger part of these can be drained, which then makes their most valuable land. After leaving Plymouth for Chicago the country rapidly changes for worse, and in fact we saw thousands of acres by the way that we would not accept as a gift. If there is anything in it we failed to see it unless it would be profitable for pasturage, and even for this it is too wet and cannot be drained on account of being too level.

As we approached Chicago we entered a barren region of white sandy knolls dotted with scrubby pines. This has an average width of some fourteen miles and can never be worth anything unless it comes from beneath.

In approaching the "Great City" you feel that you are there a long time before entering it proper, as the suburbs extend far into the country. Although it is large now, yet there seems to be no limit to its borders especially east and southward. That it is now the great mart of the western part of the United States is admitted and from surrounding circumstances, it is probable that its laurels cannot be stolen. We spent the greater portion of the day in examining its location and business advantages and find it second to no city that we have as yet visited.

In passing over the burnt districts we could not help but feel sadly, especially when we saw what was once solid blocks of the most costly structure now lie in a mass of hopeless ruin and their owners prospects blasted for life. There they stand as living sepulchres of the dead that lie buried beneath the crumbling walls and rubbish. It is true that their flesh and bones lie not there but what is still worse their God—their soul. Though the devastating current passed over it and left destruction and ruin behind, yet to-day we can only see the traces of it. Money, energy, and enterprise has had its power and in many instances the glory of the last houses exceeds that of the former.

We shall not pretend to give an idea of the greatness and wealth of this city as it is truly astonishing to think of it. There are single houses that cost more money than it would take to buy some of our country towns root and branch. But while prosperity and enterprise seems to be advancing the interests of its citizens, sin is also doing its works and like a Ninevah of old, is becoming rife in wickedness and badly needs a Jonah to cry out against its growing pollutions.

To-night at 10 o'clock we expect to start for Omaha when you may hear from us again. H. B. B.

SELECTIONS.

Christ Was Weary.

He was weary—Christ the master,
As the morning me the noon-tide,
On His journey when He tarred, Resting Jacobs well beside.

He was weary—Christ Emanuel,
As a human form he trod,
Sunny vales and lonely mountains,
Canaan's consecrated sod.

He was weary—Christ the Savior,
As he bore on earth the sin,
That the ransomed might with rapture,
Enter pearly gates within.

He was weary—Christ Messiah,
Types and shadows, solemn feasts,
Haste away, behold the dawning
Of the day-star in the East.

He was weary—Lord of Glory,
Though the angels from on high,
Would have left the mansions heavenly,
Had he bidden them draw nigh.

He was weary—Christ anointed,
Laid His kingly sceptre down,
That the white-robed, conquering thousands,
Might take up a harp and crown.

Christ was weary—Christian pilgrims,
Will you murmer by the way,
Or grow faint because life's burdens
Are so heavy day by day?

A few days you may not number,
Then among the saints and blest,
You shall dwell with Christ the risen,
"Where the weary are at rest."

A REAL GENTLEMAN.

The following from the Phrenological Journal is a brief summing up of what constitutes a real gentleman, and as it comes precisely in harmony with our views on the subject, we copy it for the benefit of our readers.

Our idea of a real gentleman is this: He is intelligent, courteous, polite, temperate, kindly, just, charitable, respectful, mindful of others, self-controlling and self-denying. He is clean in his personal habbits; uses no obscene, profane, or vulgar language; dresses, not like a dandy or a fop, but according to good taste and common sense; neither chews, nor snuffs, nor smokes tobacco, and does not drink alcoholic liquors of any sort. He is above a mean thing. He can not stoop to a mean fraud. He invades no secret in the keeping of another. He betrays no secret confided to his keeping. He never boasts nor struts about in borrowed plumage. He never takes selfish advantages of our mistakes. He uses no ignoble weapons in controversy. He never stabs in the dark. If by accident he comes in possession of his neighbor's council, he passes upon them an act of instant oblivion. He bears sealed packages without tampering with wax. Papers not meant for his eyes, whether they flutter at the windows or lie before them in unguarded exposure, are sacred to him. He invades no privacy of others, however the sentry sleeps. Bolts and bars, locks and keys, hedges and pickets, hounds and securities, police and prisons, notices to trespassers, are none of them for him. He may be trusted alone out of sight, near the thinnest partition—anywhere. He buys no offices, he sells none, he intrigues for none. He would rather fail of his rights than win them through dishonor. He will eat honest bread. He tramples on no one's feelings carelessly. He insults no man. If he have rebuke for another he is straight forward, open, manly; he cannot descend to scurrility." In short, whatever he judges honorable he practices toward every man.

Ambition and emulation have a selfish root. Aspiration for improvement and usefulness is laudable. He is the best gentleman, who is the least selfish, and who has the fewest faults and most graces. As a rule, though a gentlman cannot be pretty, he may be noble, and in its best sense handsome or beautiful and grand. His actions will be gentle: his expression attractive, and the whole aspect of his person will be impressive. He who is clean, temperate, healthy, intelligent, manly, and strives to "DO AS HE WOULD BE DONE BY," will not come far short of realizing our idea of a REAL GENTLEMAN.

RELIGION AND MONEY.

Though "the love of money is the root of all evil," the right use of it is a sign and a means of grace. So Jesus taught. "He that is faithful in the least," in money-making and money-spending, "is faithful also in much," i. e., in spiritual and eternal concerns. This is invariably true. The man who acts on Christain principles in money matters will be true to God everywhere; and he who violates them in money-making and money-using, cannot be trusted anywhere. Praying, and singing, and public testimony are good evidences of piety, but making and using money for the glory of God is still better. Selfishness is dislodged from the heart with great difficulty, and clings to the citadel of greed, after every other section of the soul is surrendered. It is much easier to induce men to pray than to pay; to worship than to be honest; to sing psalms than to give alms; to draw nigh to God with their lips, than to consecrate to him their gold.

But where religion does sanctify a man's business, it becomes exceedingly precious. He makes money for Jesus, works, trades, invests, contrives, invents, toils as a Christain duty, with Christian motive. He no longer does up his religion in the church on Sunday, or in his closet, at the family altar, or in the prayer meeting, and then drops down to selfserving, mere drudgery for the flesh. All that he does is worship, and serve the Lord; he is God's steward, and cares for farm, his shop, his merchandise, his person, his family, as a duty to his Lord. He has no exclusively secular work, never loses the inspiration of high religious purposes, never leaves the presence of his God. This is position of great strength and comfort, and the only true Christian position. Not that he need think of God contantly, any more than he thinks of an earthly friend, or employer to whose interest he is devoted; but he has a controlling principle, a ruling motive, a general and well-settled purpose, which gives character to all subordinate purposes, and stimulates his faculties to fidelity in prosecuting them.

When a man does business under such an inspiration, he will be honest, because that will please God, and to cheat will offend him. Gain is a motive but not his chief and controlling motive, and he will not sacrifice the the latter for the former; no possible gain can compensate him for the loss of the divine favor, for the object for which he makes money is to please and honor God. The money is a means, and God wishes and works the end. Hence he is delivered from the temptation to wrong his neighbor, for in doing so he wrongs himself, and and sins against his own cherished purposes still more.

There is a joy in business done in this spirit. Every hour of industry is worship. This high motive sweetens toils, lightens burdens, fills the soul with constant sunshine and makes hardships, sufferings and disappointments a luxury. Sowing and reaping, building and trading all the cares and trials of commerce, becomes means of grace strengthing virtue, enlarging the heart, elevating the thoughts and feelings, and changing the whole man more and more into the image of the Lord. Intercourse even with vile men, conflict with deceivers and crafty tricksters, elevates, braces up, adds strength to moral convictions, and develops all Christian grace. All things work together for good to men of such motives.

When men make money on Christian principles they will use it for good purposes. Temporal needs will not be neglected, but spiritual interest will be preferred, because God prefers them. They will not disdain to dress the body, but will still more carefully adorn the soul; they will feed the bodies and still more diligently educate and train the souls of men. They will be eager to make money, that they may give largely to save sinners. They will be more enterprising, industrious and saving than other men, that they may have more to give to elevate the degraded and save the lost.

Such business men are always active and useful in the church. They keep the fires of devotion burning, are never cold, stupid and uninterested, never lukewarm or backslidden They love the prayer meeting, and all who pray rejoice in their presence. Blessed is the man who makes and uses money rightly.—Baptist Union.

COME!

If you have led a sinful life, and are now ashamed and weary of it—if you arise and go to God, He will receive you graciously, and will abundantly pardon. All His assurances are to the same affecting tenor. "He is long suffering, not willing that any one should perish." "As I live saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his evil ways and live. Turn ye, turn from your evil ways." And here he is represented as the merciful Father, whose pity survives the longest provocation, and whose love is such that when the prodigal at last returns he presses him to his bosom. Such is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and if you are wise, you will let no cold suspicious or subtle causistry cheat you out of the strong consolation. You cannot err in believing what the Lord Jesus says: you cannot err in doing as he directs, be assured that God is as kindly disposed as in the parable of the Prodigal Son He is represented to be. The calls, invitations, promises which he has given us in the Gospel menu the utmost of what they express; and God is as earnestly desirous that sinners should return, as the strongest language of the Gospel declares.—*James Hamilton. SUN RISE.

Have you ever witnessed that superb spetacle which the rising sun daily affords? Or has indolence, the love of sleep, or absolute indifference, prevented your contemplating this splendid phenomenon of nature! Perhaps you are of that class of beings who prefer the indulgence of a few hours more sleep to the gratification of seeing the east illumined by the first rays of the sun; or you are of the opinion of those who satisfied that the sun is present to enlighten and to cheer the earth, never trouble themselves with reflecting upon the course of such an effect. Or perhaps you are like millions of people who daily see this grand spectacle without emotion, and with out forming any idea of it, but who pass it by without regard or reflection. To whichever class you belong, suffer yourself at length to be roused from your state of insensibility, and learn what thoughts the view of rising sun ought to excite in your mind.

There is no spectacle in nature more grand and beautiful than the rising sun, before which, the most magnificent dress that human art can prepare, the most splendid decorations and ornamental designs of costly places, fade away and are as nothing. At first the eastern region of heaven, clothed in the purple of Aurora announces the approach of the sun. The sky gradually assumes the tints of the roses, and soon flames with a fiery brilliancy; then the rays of the light piercing the clouds, the whole horizon becomes luminous, and the sun opens upon us in unrivaled splendor gradually rising in the heavens; whilst every creature rejoicing seems to receive new life and being; the face of the earth is smiling and the music of the birds fills the air; every animal is in motion and expresses its joy by playful gambols and increased animation.

May the aspiration of my soul be raised to the throne of God and the song of my praise ascend up to Heaven, the seat of Him at whose command the sun first rose, and whose hand still directs his annual and diurnal courses; from which result the revolution of day and night and the regular succession of the season. Rise thyself O my soul! to the Father of glorys celebrate his majesty; acknowledge thy dependence upon him, and celebrate his praise by actions which are pleasing in his sight! Behold! all nature proclaims order and harmonious regularity. The sun and and all the stars accomplish their course: each season brings forth its fruit, and every day renews the spleudor of the sun; and shall we be the only creatures who neglect to praise the creator, by the virtue of our actions and the integrity of our conduct! Let the propriety of our lives and the ferveney of our piety exalt the goodness of God and teach the infidel how great and worthy of admiration is that Diety which he professes to despise; and let the peaceful calm, and purity of our minds teach the vicious man the beauty of holiness, and the mild and merciful nature of that God before whom he trembled. Let us act toward our fellow creature as God does to us, and be to them what the sun is to the whole universe. As he daily diffuses his benign influence over the earth; as he shines upon the ungrateful as upon the righteous, and as he gilds the bosom of the valley as well as the lofty summit of the mountain, so let our lives be useful, beneficent and conselatory to our fellow creature. May each returning day renew the charitable emotion of our heart, and may we do all the good in our power and endeavor to love and to net, that our lives shall be a blessing to mankind.

Giving Reproof.

Reproof, to do good, must be given in earnest. If administered in a trifling spirit, in a jesting manner, it will be likely to result in very little good. Them that sin rebuke sharply.

No matter with what kind of feelings a reproof may be given, it is very natural that the person receiving it should think that it was given in a wrong spirit. It is not very often that punishment is inflicted to the satisfaction of the culprit, no matter how deserving he may be of his sentence. The Pharisees never admired the style in which the Savior addressed them. His words of warning roused their fiercest indignation.

When you are reproved, no matter how it is done, see if you cannot derive some benefit from it. It is lawful to learn, even of an enemy. Gold is seldom found so pure that it can go through the fire without losing some of its dross. Get some good out of reproof. Even if you do not deserve it at all, you may by quiet endurance, reap a great spiritual blessing. If when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you. —Earnest Christian.

RECEIVING CHRIST.—Remember that in receiving the memorials of his death, or in any contemplation of it, you receive Jesus crucified, only to crucify yourself with him, that you may thence form and live with him.

His patience, his meekness, his submission, his deadness to the world, his love to God and man transferred to our hearts—these are fruits of his cross, whenever rightfully contemplated.—Fenelon.

PRAYER is not only requests made to God, but converse had with Him. It is the expression of desire to Him so as to purify it; of purpose, so as to steady it; of hope, so as to brighten it. It is the bringing of one's heart into the sunshine, so that, like a plant, its inner life may thrive for an outward development.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

OMAHA, NEB., May 22, 1874.

Dear Pilgrim :—

After squaring our bills at the Chicago Commercial, which, by the way, is a considerable house, but indulges style at the expense of the stomach, we engaged a sleeping berth on the train West at 10:30 P. M. We then committed ourselves to the care of him who "careth for us," and slept soundly until we got into the neighborhood of Burlington, Iowa, and as a consequence, we know nothing about the country through which we passed during that time. From Burlington we took notes of the towns and general appearance of the country through which we passed, but we found such a sameness that we do not feel it to be of sufficient interest to burden our colums with it. The land along this route, is decidedly beautiful and exceeded our expectations. The broad prairie stretched out as far as the eye can carry, dotted with neat little farm houses surrounded with beautiful groves and thrifty looking orchards, formed the grandest sight we ever had the pleasure of beholding. In beauty and location the East is "nowhere." The lands are all laid out in sections which are divided into farms of 40, 80, and 160 acres Around these sections are the roads. The farms through this part of the State, have an Eastern appearance, being divided into sizable fields with rail, board, and hedge fence. As we approach the streams the surface becomes more rolling and tolerably well timbered. The streams are not very inactive, the water presenting generally a very black muddy appearance, and is so level that you can scarcely determine which way it runs. Although, a few years ago there were thousands upon thousands of acres twigless the country to-day looks to be tolerably well timbered. This change has been brought about by planting groves and extensive orchards. The groves are largely cottonwood, soft maple, and ash which grow rapidly and form excellent wind brakes, make good fire wood, and used, to some extent, for fencing. On the South side, or among these groves, the houses are situated, which gives them a home-like and pleasant appearance in many cases far beyond that of the East.

The towns are generally pleasantly located and laid out, rather indifferently built, being largely of wood and very much scattered. It it utterly impossible to get a correct idea of their population from residents. At different points we stopped off to make inquiry, and in every instance found that our informants grossly exaggerated. At Ottumwa, a place we supposed to contain some 2500 inhabitants, we were told that it really contained 20,000. The train stopped 20 minutes which gave us sufficient time to look over the whole of it, and very much confirmed our former estimate. This persistent spirit of having large places seems universal in western towns. The cities and towns are certainly very large for their age, do a large amount of business and are exceedingly fast—fast horses, and fast people,—but like Jonah's gourd, some of them are dying on their feet. The land along this route belongs to the Burlington Rail-road Company, and is being rapidly sold, but of this we will speak at another time.

On Tuesday evening we stopped off at Red Oak, the junction of a road that runs down to Nebraska City. This is the county seat of Montgomery, but does not show a very great degree of prosperity. On Monday morning we started for Omaha and arrived about noon. Having a desire to pay a flying visit to some brethren in Washington Co., Neb., we took the U. P. R. R. and run out to Fremont. Then took the Sioux City & Pacific R. R. to Nickinson where we landed. From here, we walked two miles to Fonteville and there was told that we had yet five miles to the place we wished to go. Having become sick of car riding and being a little proud of our walking abilities, we concluded to foot it. Bro. S. A. Moore says N. E. and N. E. we go. We are now in one of the prettiest rolling prairies that the world can afford. After walking about three miles we concluded to make some inquiry, and were told we had about two miles. This we tho't was doing well enough and went ahead for the "two miles," at the end of which we had no recognition of the place of our stop. We inquired again and were informed that it was "two miles." The sun was now according to old astronomy, about sinking in its hole in the west, and we, extremely hungry and foot-sore, but the two miles were before us, and as we were to be at Fremont by noon the next day there was no other way and on we went, At the end of these two miles we found the empty house and home of our Bro. D. O. Brumbaugh, who had a short time ago left for Kansas. At this point we felt like scolding but as there was nobody there we concluded to defer it. We did not expect to meet D. O. B. but were not disappointed as we had the pleasure of meeting him after all.*

The land is good, yielding from 30 to 35 bushels of wheat per acre. The yield of corn is enormous but we do not just now remember the average. Oats and barley also gives abundant crops for which they have a ready cash market at fair prices. Wheat is now selling for $1.00. The wheat is of a good quality and makes a fine flour. When we take into consideration the facility with which the ground is cultivated, and its inexhaustible fertility, it really seems strange that Eastern people will continue to be contented their, in many instances unproductive hills. But there was never a truer saying than that, "Contentment gives a crown where fortune hath oft denied it." This is the secret of the cause of the dissatisfaction west. Going and living west must, in many cases be the means of severing of the ties of home, relations and friends, of dear ones and kindred spirits. Supply these essentials to make life enjoyable and in a few years the West will teem with its millions of the most happy people in the world, unless there are many local and natural disadvantages which we have failed to see. There are some we know. One is that it is not always Springtime nor harvest. The winters are sometimes rather cold but art assisted by nature, will, in a short time, do much in modifying these.

The brethren at this place had formed a small colony, having regular preaching and fair prospects, D. Brumbaugh being their minister. But he having now for reasons best known to himself, deserted them, the little band seems somewhat discouraged and feel to some extent as a flock without a shepherd. This appears unfortunate, yet it might be worse, as they will still have preaching every fourth Sunday. It occurs to us that some of our ministering brethren in want of a home, could not do better than move in among them. After paying brother and sister Brumbaugh a short visit, brother Shuss hooked his horses to the wagon and took us to Fremont a distance of some fourteen miles. On our way we had the pleasure of seeing numbers of prairie chickens We also captured a weasel and a prairie squirrel. We felt all over for a chance at those prairie chickens but time would not admit and it was also out of season for kill. We felt many times sorry that we took so extensive a visit on such limited time. The members were more than anxious to have us remain and preach some for them and we would gladly have done it under different circumstances. Hope the time may come when we can give our brethren of Washington Co., Neb., a more satisfactory visit.

In due time we arrived at Fremont and from thence to Omaha where we were necessitated to lay over till the next day. This was in no way desirable as the place does not strike the stranger very favorably, especially if he has any regard for morality or religion—but more of this in our next.

Correspondence.

Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Bro. Editors :—

Having just returned from meeting, I thought I would pen you a few thoughts for the readers of the PILGRIM. The preaching to-day was done by brother E. Anvil, our Elder. Bro. Anvil is not a very eloquent preacher, but preaches the plain word sowing the precious seed of the word broadcast.

Well I will jest say that we had a little meeting at the house of Bro. J. P. Yeager's commencing on March 6th. The next evening Brethren J. W. Fitzgerald and Solomon C. Green came to our assistance. The main preaching was done by Bro. J. W. Fitzgerald, and was very interesting. We truly felt that it was good to be there. Considering the coldness of the weather and the open house, we had good attendance and the best of order. The meeting lasted until the night of the 10th. May God bless our dear brother, and may he cease not to cry aloud and "spare not." As I notice in the PILGRIM a call from a friend in Kentucky, I will just remark that he is a brother in the flesh to our Bro. J. W. Fitzgerald. He calls for preaching. Our Bro. J. W. F. desires to respond to the call. Now the query is, can he go? It necessarily takes money to go so great a distance, and as Bro. F. is limited in circumstances, would it not be commendable for the brethren of the Valley Run Church to bear his expenses? Brethren think of this; give him sufficient to bear his expenses. He says he wants to go, but without help he cannot go. Brethren you are all acquainted with our dear brother's circumstances, lend a helping hand, and he may rescue precious souls from the thralldom of error. Think of poor souls famished in a distant land, starving and calling for the bread of life, and when you have thus reflected for a short time, you will not hesitate a moment to rescue them from this dilemma. The Word says to the minister, "Go," hence the minister feels the force of this language, but the danger is in preaching and at the same time being worse than an infidel, and denying the faith. Taking these things into consideration, the brethren cannot help but see the propriety of sending our poor brethren to feed the hungry. "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn." So by keeping the precious dollar in our pocket when such stern necessity demands it, the danger is of breaking this command, which command the apostle says was for our sakes.—Deut 25: 4 and 1. Cor. 9: 9, and the connection.

Fraternally yours, J. M. WELLS.

My Dear Brethren and Sisters :—

I feel like saying a few words through the PILGRIM, as some of you perhaps are not aware that the Brethren are scattered so far south-west in Kansas. Since this church (called the Cany Church) was started, it has prospered, only being about one year since it was organized. Bro. Joseph Michael has labored earnestly in the cause, but cannot fill near all the calls. I have observed as many as three and four step up to him after preaching and say: "When can you come over and preach at our school-house?" He would hardly have time to tell them that he could not fill all the calls already made, until another would step up and ask the same question. The call is all over the vicinity, "come and preach the Gospel to us." Dear brethren, you that can be spared in the east, how can you refuse to come and preach the Gospel to them? As the Scripture says, "truly the harvest is great, but the laborers are few." The fields are now white all ready to harvest, and any who thinks of coming west, I do not think they can do better than to settle here, as land is very cheap. There are good quarter sections that can be bought for $400, with some improvements on. There are some good claims here to be preempted at $1.25 per acre The country is healthy and looks as if it might become a wealthy country in a few years. If any one wants information concerning the country, address, BURGESS A. HADSELL.

Union Center, Howard Co., Kan.

To all Whom it may Concern.

To those brethren who have written to me wishing to know whether with small means they can buy a home in this part of Mo., I will say, according to my judgment they can do as well in this part of Mo. as any where else in the Western States. There is now a farm for sale 3 miles east of Craig, and 6 miles south-east of where I live, and 2 miles south of brother Isaac Zeigler, containing 220 acres or more, tolerably well improved, good house and barn, a good bearing orchard of apples and peaches. It can be bought for $30 per acre and will give possession the first of next September. The land can be conveniently divided into two tracts of 110 acres each, with plenty of timber &c. We would be glad if some brother would come and buy it. Any one wanting any further information can have it by writing to me.

We will build our meeting house between now and next Spring. The building material will cost us $1000 as estimated by brother Isaac Zeigler who is a carpenter. The church has made up $815, and we have received from the brethren and sisters of other churches $96, making altogether $911. We still lack $89 of the cost of material, besides the cost of putting the house up. We would be thankful for a little more aid. We are now sure to build if there be no providential hinderance. This is the last call we will make to our dear brethren for help to build this house. We will now risk it. A house we must have.

DIED.

ERB.—In the hope of a blessed immortality, in the Crooked Creek church, Johnson co., Iowa, sister Mary Erb, consort of John Erb, deceased, formerly of Lancaster Co., Pa., aged 82 years, 7 months, and 10 days. Funeral sermon by the writer, from Job 14:14, to a very attentive congregation.

JOHN THOMAS.

BROWER.—In the Sugar creek congregation, Allen county, Ohio, May 7th, 1874, sister Elizabeth, wife of Daniel Brower, aged 51 years, 6 months, and 28 days. Disease, consumption.

She took sick about the first of August, 1872; from that time on she suffered much from violent coughing. She would revive by spells so that she could attend meeting and visit an afflicted daughter. She bore all her afflictions with fortitude and Christian resignation unto the end, and when asked whether she was willing and prepared to die, she said, "I am not only willing to die, but I am waiting for my change to come, for I feel that all is well with me."

In her death the church lost a mother in Israel, and the neighborhood an obliging friend. She was much concerned about the welfare of the church, and the peace of all around her. But above all her loss is most deeply felt by the bereaved husband, with whom she had lived about 33 years and shared together with him the joys and sorrows of life, and the dear children that are now left without a mother; but she left them a rich legacy in her instruction, and especially in a brief but feeling sermon delivered to them just before she departed this life. She told them how they should live and be good children and obey their father and meet her in heaven. During her sickness she called for the elders of the church and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. She was born and raised in Rockingham county Va., and emigrated with her husband to Allen county, Ohio, in the year 1844. She was a faithful member of the church about 29 years.

On the 8th her remains were followed to the grave near the Brethren's meeting-house by a very large concourse of friends. Funeral services by the Brethren from 2 Corinthians 5:1.

DAVID EARLY.

KAUFFMAN.—Near Madisonb'g, Wayne Co., O., on May 15, '74, Catharine A. wife of William Kauffman, aged 24 years 1 months and 15 days.

Funeral services conducted by Elder Jno. K. Yoder, an Amish minister and the writer. The deceased was a member of the Amish Church. She was born in Mifflin Co., Pa., from whence she removed with her husband to this State about six weeks previous to her death. She leaves behind with a sorrowing husband, a little boy about three years old who is a deaf mute. May the Lord comfort the husband and care for the child in their sad bereavement.

E. L. YODER.

DEWALT.—In the Salamoney district, on the 24th of May, '04, sister Sarah Dewalt, age not given.

She had poor health for several years, and suffered much in the few last days of her life, but bore it all with Christian fortitude. She leaves a husband and one little son to mourn their loss. They have no near relatives in this country. She was born in Pa. Her maiden name was Black. Funeral occasion by the writer, assisted as below.

EIKENBERRY.—In the same district, on March 25, sister Mary Eikenberry. She was born in 1790 near Fredericksburg, Maryland.

She was a member of the Church for 67 years. She died in the triumph of faith. She was buried in Wabash county by the side of her husband who died a few years since. Funeral by the writer, DRAVENSTOT.—In the same district on May 4th, sister Caroline Dravenstot aged 33 years, 1 month and 24 days. Disease lingering consumption.

She had a desire once more to commune with the brethren; so we made arrangements and met at their house on the evening of the 26th of April, when she once more communed with the members. After the services of the communion she was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. On the day above mentioned she passed over the Jordan of death and left behind a husband and 6 children to mourn their loss. We are glad we need not sorrow as those who have no hope. Funeral by the writer.

SILING.—In the Salamoney district Huntington county Ind., on April 22, 1874, Sister Catharine Siling, aged 65 years, 3 months and 4 days.

She was sick but a few days, she leaves a husband and several children and grandchildren to mourn their loss which we hope is her eternal gain. Funeral in our meeting house on the 24th of May, by the writer assisted by brothers Shidler and G. Gemet, from Matt. 24: 44. SAM'L MURRAY.

BOWSER.—In the Chippewa congregation Wayne county, O, on May the 2nd, 1874, Mary Catharine Bowser aged 20 years and 16 days.

Funeral improved by Eld. J. B. Shoemaker and the writer from 1. Pet 24, 25. The deceased was highly beloved and esteemed by her family and friends for her amiability and morality. A short time previous to her death she sent for the writer desiring spiritual consolation. After the reading and the prayer she expressed a desire to be baptized, but intimated that she was now too weak which was evidently true. She then revived somewhat and earnestly exhorted her friends to their duty then gradually growing weaker she expired. Although we deeply mourn her early departure we are happy to record that her dying words and influence have proved instrumental through the grace of God, to bring into the fold of Christ, the father, grand-father, brother and uncle of the deceased. May they all prove faithful and eventually be able to realize their hope of meeting their beloved in the Paradise of God.

BOTTORF.—In the Union Church, Marshall county, Ind., on May 20, '74, sister Elisabeth Bottorf the wife of Eli Bottorf, aged 25 years, 3 months and 18 days.

She leaves a kind husband and three children, the youngest not 8 weeks old when the mother died. Just before she died she said at her funeral they should sing the 683 hymn and that she was going to a good place, and that the young should be admonished to prepare to meet their God. Funeral sermon by Adam Appleman and the writer from Rev. 14: 13. JOHN KNISLY.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

Learning Things out of School.

Every child ought to try to teach itself, in addition to learning its lessons; and I do not want boys or girls to overwork themselves. Nor will they do so if they do a little of their own free will, in ways of their own inventing, in addition to their lessons. For one thing they will—some of them, at least—so much improve their own power of learning, and understanding things, that their lessons will become easier to them. And for another, one sort of study helps another in ways which only those who have tried can conceive. There is another thing. Every wise parent is on the watch with the children to see how their minds grow, and what they seem likely to be fit for when they grow up; and nothing helps them so much in forming an opinion of what comes out in what the children do to teach themselves. In some things, any particular cleverness a child may have is almost sure to come out easily—for instance, if it can draw well, or sing well, or invent machinery. But in some other things children will keep much alike for a number of years, learning the same lessons, and one being about as clever as the other, so far as we can judge—unless they do something for themselves. Then we begin to know more about them; for, of course, they pick out, as we all do, the things they like best, and can do most easily.

Let us take such simple matter as reading, writing and spelling, and we will suppose that you are very young indeed. It will be of no use to you as long as you live, and it will actually make your lessons much easier if you will only take, of your own free will, a little trouble in addition to that of learning the lessons that are set you. Suppose, now, you take some book of poetry, and learn a verse or two by heart, just what pleases you. Then put the book and put it away, and write out as well as you can, from memory, what you have been learning by heart. Then go to the book again, and compare your writing with the print. You will then see what mistake you have made, if any, in spelling or in putting in stops. To tell you the truth, you ought not to make any mistakes in copying, but it is pretty certain you will; and you are sure to make some at first when you write out from memory. Next time take a sentence or two of prose, out of a book of history, or geography, or out of a story book and so on. You will pick up knowledge faster than you know; you will do some thing every time you try, towards making yourself more clever; and your usual lessons, reading, writing, and spelling will come all the easier to you.

A good plan is to keep a diary, in which you put down how you have passed the day. This is exercise in writing, spelling, and composition, and you will find it very amusing in deed.

When you ask some boys whether they can do certain things, they will make some such answer as, "No, I have not been taught yet; I have not got as far as that." But you may depend upon it that no boy ever learned much who did not sometimes go faster than his lesson. Take geography. How very, very stupid it sound to hear a healthy lively boy, who is learning geography, says he has never been taught to make maps; or, perhapes that he can't make a map just to show the different great divisons of the world because he has not got a pair of compasses. Why, a common dinner-plate will do beautifully to begin with. Get a plate as near the size of your map as you can, and make your first round with a pencil—you can ink it afterwards. Then draw one line across the middle for the equator, and another across the middle the other way for central meridian of longitude. You can easily fix the middle, and, in fact, measure all distances by a piece of paper marked with a pencil. Now measure off with your piece of paper the degrees of latitude by tens and, as you find them on the map you are copying from. You will not be able to draw these lines exactly across the circle with out the help of a pair of compasses, but you can come very near, if you take pains. Then draw the two tropics, and the meridian of longitude. After this, you will find it easier to draw the inner rim of the great circle, (I am supposing that you have no plate that fits,) because the parallels of latitude will help you. When once you have made the lines of latitude and longitude, and figured the degrees round the margin, there will be no difficulty whatever in making your map correct. And when you have done it you will have learned more geography than many people who have spent many years at school carry in their heads all their lives long.

I will now suppose that I am speaking to boys and girls who have got some way on in arithmetic. Let me assure you that you will find your lessons much more interesting if you sometimes, of your own accord, go out of the rule you are in, and try to do things that are more advanced. It is rather tedious to do 22 tons 13 cwt. 1 qrs. 6 lbs. at £7 9. 3 4 per ton. Suppose you go a little way a head, and look into an easy book on Algebra. "If A can do a piece of work in nine days, and B could do it in twelve days, how long would they be in doing it together?" That is a much more interesting question; and when you have managed to find out how to answer it, you have done yourself a great deal of good and gone some way towards making your other work easier.

Young people not so far advanced as to do sums of this kind may yet help on their own education as well as that of their younger brothers and sisters, if they have these, by given them easy lessons in arithmetic,—I mean now and then, almost as an amusment, and not in a stiff, formal way.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE Southern Baptist Convention, which meets this year in Jefferson, Texas, represents more than a million believers, about twice that number of Baptists in the Northern States.

THE old discussion over the use of fermented wines at the communion table appears to have taken a practical turn in the case of the First Congregational Church at Peru, Ill., which has voted to discontinue their use as inconsistent with the spirit of Christ's teachings in the needs and exigencies of the present day. When it is impossible to obtain unfermented wine the deacons are instructed to furnish cold water instead.

THE LOUISIANA FLOODS.—The Mississippi has fallen and the worst of the inundation is believed to have passed. A man of th flooded district shows tha 14,000 square miles of territory in Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas are covered with water, the flooded territory embracing some of the best cotton lands in these States. The destitution is great and liberal contributions to meet it are being subscribed from various cities.

There are fifteen Protestant Episcopal Communities in the United States called sisterhoods or associations of deaconesses. Some of these are conducted in a very rigorous manner, and a recent Protestant writer says: "The work and religious life are strikingly similar to that of the Roman Catholic Sisterhoods." The leader of the system is the Rev. Dr. Dix, of Trinity Church, New York, The Chaplain of the Sisters of Mary.

The missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church comprise: Missionaries 207, assistants 163, teachers 310, members 13,170, probationers 2,757, churches 111; day-schools 180, pupils 5,320; Sabbath-schools 426, Pupils 18,971. The appropriations for 1873, amount to $373,825.75. There are also missions among the indians of our own country, for which the appropriations are $6,650. The missions in Mexico and Japan are new—commenced in 1872.

The Episcopal Church in Virginia is discussing quite earnestly the future position of its clergy in regard to questions of Church doctrine and polity. A journal of that State declares that there is no expectation that the movement of Bish'p Cummings will be followed, but it is not impossible that a more important and effective protest against the new sacerdotalism which is represented by a Bishop of Illinois and his sympathisers will be made.

The report of the Burmese Baptist Missionary convention for the last year gives interesting facts respecting the Christian work among the Burmese, Karens and Shans. The statistics show that there are 18,546 baptised Christians in 356 churches, with 82 ordained and 329 unordained preachers. There are 85 schools with 4,874 pupils, some of them in a theological college. The annual contributions, chiefly of the Sgau Karens, amounted to the large sum of $23,000. The number baptized during the year was 777.

The Rev. Mr. Macintyre, U. P. missionary to North China, has followed one of the best ways of mastering the language of the country. He has plunged into the midst of the people and traveled far and near among them. Not being able as yet to preach in the chinese, he has done the work of a colporteur. He speaks with enthusiasm of the kindness he has received from the people, and their readiness to read the Gospels, as well as William Burn's translation of the "Peep of day" and similar works. Everywhere he was unmolested, and the fact that he was bearing "good books for the instruction of the people," a phrase often repeated in his hearing, made every one ready to answer to his inquiries in a friendly manner. In the single city of Tsining-Chow he sold 3,000 copies of the Gospels, and the demand was still brisk when his stock was exhausted.

HACK! HACK! COUGH, COUGH.

Cough is a symptom by which various diseased conditions of the throat, bronchial tubes and lungs manifest themselves. But whether it arises from irritation produced in the throat and larnyx by taking cold, from an attack of bronchitis, from incipient consumption, or from various other causes, nothing will allay it more speedily nor cure it more permanently than Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It does not matter whether it be a recent attack or a lingering cough, the discovery is in either case equally adapted for its relief and permanent cure. In fact it will cure it in one-half the time required to cure it with any other medicine, and it does it, not by drying it up, but by removing the cause, subduing the irritation, and healing the affected parts. No time should be lost in commencing the use of a proper medicine for the relief of a Cough, for unless this course is pursued, serious and dangerous disease of the lungs is liable to result.

DOCTORS SOON LEARN ITS VALUE.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1870.

DR. PIERCE.—For the past six months I have used your Golden Medical Discovery in my practice, and that time I have tested its merrits in most severe coughs, both acute and chronic, in chronic disease of the throat, severe cases of bronchitis, general derangement of the system, constipated condition of the bowels, and wherever a thorough alterative has been indicated. In all cases I have found it to act gently yet thoroughly and effectually in removing the various diseased conditions and bringing about a healthy action of the system.

Yours fraternally, H. L. HALL, M. D.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been, the Apostolic method. Single copy, $0.50. Four copies, $1.50. Sent post-paid. Address

MEDITATIONS.

—BY—

J. S. FLORY.

—o—

Beautiful morn, bright and gay,
While I think of dear ones far away,
The sun, in Splendor, lights the sky;
My soul, in love, would mount on high.
My dear Saviour look down and bless
A world lying in wretchedness;
Kindle a flame of sacred fire
That may mount higher and higher.
Awake the dead with voice of love,
That they may long for bliss above.
In love and union ever keep
Dear ones with whom we had to weep.
In sorrow we sow—in memory keep
Joys we hope in future to reap.
Harvest is coming—it makes haste;
All shall be gathered, none to waste;
Sheves full of love, heavy and bright,
Gathered home by Herven's pure light,
Into the garner of God's store,
Where we shall live and want no more.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

VANITY.

Humanity is the same to-day as it was in the days of Solomon, when he said: "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." We are, to-day the same degenerate plants of a strange vine' "We go astray as soon as we are born." This is proven by the earliest days of our life, yea "the days of our infancy prove the corruption from which we spring." Vanity manifests itself in multifarious ways at the present day: vanity in dress, vanity in speach, vanity in riches, vanity in labor, and vanity in all the wandering desires of mankind. It is a mirage that will bitterly betray all who indulge in it; it will only prove to be a terrible mockery to those who listen to its siren song. Human greatness is evanescent and all the labors of man decay, our safety therefore lies in being ready to part with all things but our hope of salvation. An observant person cannot fail but see that vanity and its attendants—pride, worldly ambition &c. tends to lead the mind away from the love of God and things divine. Take for instance the "Woman of the period," enameled and painted, with her chignon, her curls and bustle,—her white jeweled hands have never labored for the good of suffering humanity, and it is doubtful whether they have ever been clasped in prayer and thanksgiving to Him who is the source of every blessing, both temporal and spiritual. Solomon complained of the vanity insinuated in the divine service of God; and at the present day it is a deplorable fact that vanity has in a subnascent manner insinuated itself into the so called christian churches until the true followers of a "meek and lowly Jesus" are denounced as "ignorant, deluded, and altogether behind the age."

But let the church of God guard against the innovations of vanity, and follow Christ in the manner of his appearing, who testifies of himself, that he is "meek and lowly of heart"—who bore a living testimony against all manner of vanity and pride, and then in due time we shall reap a "heavenly harvest for our toil."

When we behold those sapient expounders of popular Christianity we must exclaim with the poet:

"Religious pride,
In all the pomp of method and of art,
When men display to congregations wide,
Devotions very grave, except the heart."

Now in conclusion let me yet appeal to the intelligence and reason of the better portion of every community to condemn vanity and pride. Parents, guard your children, keep them from vanity, teach them that amiability, kindness, and moral and intellectual attainments are the inestimable graces that induced the wise man to confer on the women under their influences a "value whose price is above rubies;" and he invested her with this endearing attribute that "she opened her mouth with wisdom, and her tongue is the law of kindness," Teach your children that vanity in dress, will never win the respect of persons of sense. But rather that kindness, modesty, benevolence, humility, politeness, and neatness, are the graces that will win the admiration and respect of every one whose favor is worth winning.

JOHN J. BROWN

Hampton, Pa.

IS IT A NEW DEPARTURE?

At the A. D. Meeting of the N. E. District of Ohio of 1874, the delegate from the Chippewa congregation presented a request for the A. M. to give a form for installing ministers of the first and second degree.

With unanimity the request was stoutly opposed. We believe the delegate presenting it alone, stood in its defence.

Forms were altogether out of order with a Church that stood on the platform that the Bible was a perfect law. We need nothing of the kind. Creeds and disciplines lead to cold formalities while we are to worship God in spirit and and in truth. These and similar arguments were advanced in opposition and they did not seem strange or new, for we have the same assertion repeatedly by prominent members of the church. We have been present when these principles were carefully explained to applicants for church membership and we thought if there was any one point of doctrine that we understood better than another it was this one that the brethren eschewed all forms of discipline believing that the Bible is broad and explicit enough as a law and discipline without the intervention of human creed or human legislation. Viewing the action of the above D. M. from this standpoint, its decision was certainly in harmony with established principles, and can answer the question heading this article negatively, and say it was no New Departure for the D. M. to reject a proposition looking toward the establishment of a discipline or ritual.

But now let us view this question from another stand point. The decisions of our Annual Conference although we believe only pretending to be advisory, are yet regarded with much respect, and in some places more frequently quoted than the Bible when any point of Church government is at issue. The decisions have not only laid down a form for the cut of the coat and the style of the hair among the official members of the church; a style of covering for the sisters while praying and prophesying, but also a form of question to be used by the deacons on their annual visits, and a form of questions to be asked in the administration of baptism. Now if these decisions are right (and who will dare say they are not?) We cannot see the propriety of said District Meeting opposing the request for the A. Conference to add one more harmless form to those already established.

Are not uniformity and consistency precious in the estimation of the Brethren? Is not a form of dress advocated in order to maintain uniformity? Certainly there must be a form before there can be a uniform. And if it is expendient and consistent to have a form for dress, a form of questions in visiting and baptizing we cannot see why the church might not consistently continue establisting forms untill we would have a discipline as complete and entire, and a ritual as elaborate and arbitrary as any high churchman could desire.

We believe in uniformity but it seems that the first toward it is a decision of the question involved in this. Untill we are decided whether we want forms at all or not it seems to be an idle waste of words to talk about uniformity. Therefore I conclude as I began by asking the question, was the position maintained by the N. E. District of O a New Departure? Or was it simply a returning from Departures already made?

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

Much good has doubtless been done by the untiring labors of the brethren upon the above subject, but it is probable that even yet some good honest minds remain in a measure shackled; and for the purpose of endeavoring, at least, to satisfy the minds of some who may be disposed to be troubled by those of the circumcision of the law, I will relate in the abstract a conversation which I had with some of those who have written for the PILGRIM on the subject of the seventh day as the Christian Sabbath: claiming as they did that the apostles to the Hebrews, 4: 4—17 had in view the keepers of the seventh day. But upon being convinced of the fact that "Jesus" in the eighth verse should read "Joshua" and that the apostle had in view another and greater end, they referred me to the Decalogue as having been reiterated and preached by Christ and the apostles. Having however shown them the same propriety in abstaining totally from swine's flesh, as in keeping the Jewish Sabbath they then also claimed that for the same reason it should be abstained from and what they did. I then proceeded to show them that they had on their person, clothing, as strictly forbidden as the former things, and that with equal propriety and in the same law; which is, a garment of which the warp and the woof is not the the same material.

Now seeing the impropriety of their position they wished then to know how a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, could be proven.

For want of more time I referred them to the brethren's articles on the subject, and promised to talk more on the subject at a more leasure time. I wish to say in behalf of some who have written in favor of the "seventh day" that it should be remembered what some are good honest members, tho are seeking after the "ancient landmarks" I know of one who address us as "dear brethren," and he is answered as "friend," while I are in possession of certificate of membership, and that a good one; and is so far as I know in union and full fellowship with the church, except he has fallen in the hands of the "slight of men and cunning craftiness where by they lie in wait to deceive," and hence is unfortunately about to be tossed to and fro into another current of doctrine. So brethren let us heed the injunction of the apotsles who says. "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please our neighbor for his good to edification." Rom. 15: 12. And again, 'support the weak, and be patient toward all men."

And my dear brethren and sisters and friend who advocate the keeping of the "seventh day," I would say, for Christ's sake and for the sake of the of the good of your, and other souls, see well to it that if you change your membership to society that you loose not more than you gain. Note well your leaders and teachers and all the principles of their posession.

Observe well and see whether they "shun not to declare all the councels of God." First know whether they walk in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord blameless. Do they act out that principle of faith "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, or do they desire to recieve you with your apostolic baptism and they themselves baptized with another. Remember beloved, that the apostles "esteemed not one day above another" so far as regarded the law, but he esteemed and praised those who kept the ordinance as he delivered them unto them. C. C. THE FOWLER AND THE DECOY DUCK.

"Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence." Psalms 91: 3.

The Psalmist here in our text makes use of something natural in order to teach us or to bring our minds to something of a spiritual nature. The fowler spoken of, in a natural point, is a man or person engaged in catching or trapping birds. This fowler in order to allure or draw the birds into his trap or net, will put on baits. This will not only aid him in catching birds, but will draw them together from far and near, and in order to lead these birds into his trap or net, he goes to work and makes an artificial bird. This bird is used mostly in decoying fowls in a net, on a river, or lake, hence it is known by the name of decoy duck. This fowler will tie a string, or cord to his decoy duck, and lets it go afloat on the lake, and about the time a drove of fowls collects together around this decoy duck, the fowler begins to draw his decoy duck in towards his net, and of course those wild fowls will follow right along, thinking of no harm. By this process whole droves of fowls may be decoyed into a trap or net. This is now a natural history of this fowler spoken of in our text.

Now I will try and give the spiritual import of it. I understand this fowler, in a spiritual point, to be the old serpent, the devil, the adversary of our soul, which we are told, goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. We learn that this old serpent is very crafty. We read in the Bible that he was more subtile or crafty, than any beast of the field, which the Lord God had made, and that satan does not yet exist, and has influence over the human family to induce them to engage and to follow things that are calculated to keep them from doing good, and to lead them from the simplicity that is in Christ Jesus, cannot be gainsayed. If true as some people say, that satan is chained in darkness, and has no power over the human family at this time, looking at the abominable wickedness that is in the world now, what will satan do if he ever gets loose.

Those who maintain such an idea are compelled to set aside the Millennium, or else admit that we are in that period of time now, which cannot be, according to the prophet Isaiah. He says, "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calt and the young lion shall lie together; and a little child shall feed them." Isaiah 11: 6, 7.

But not only the beasts of the earth will be at peace with one another, but the human family will also be at peace with each other. We read that they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Isaiah 2: 4.

Satan will be bound during these thousand years, and peace, love, and harmony will prevail. All the jarring and discord concerning Sabbath schools, and washing one anothers feet will be done away with, nothing but peace and love shall prevail from sea to sea, and from pole to pole.

Now looking at these passages of Scripture, it is an evident fact that we are not in the Millennium period at this time, therefore I am safe to say, or affirm, that satan does yet exist, and it is equally plainly set forth that he has the power to mislead and tempt men to commit sin. Paul says that satan himself was transformed into an angel of light, therefore it is no great thing for his ministers also to be transformed as the ministers of righteousness. Now looking at this passage of Scripture, it is plain that there are men in the world who are under the influence and power of satan, and these men in order to draw away disciples after them will come under the cloak of religion. The Savior speaks of such characters and says, "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are raving wolves." Matt. 7: 15. Paul says, "For I know this, that after my departure, shall grevious wolves enter in amongst you, not sparing the flock: also of your own self shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them."

Brethren and sisters, let us be on our guard. These false and deceitful workers did not only prevail in the days of the apostles, but they have also made their apperrance among us, and have drawn away disciples after them, I think if there ever was a time that we should watch and pray it is at this time. If satan and his ministers can only succeed in getting us divided and destroy the union and love which binds us together, he has gained the victory. Let us then hold together, bear with one another until we come in the unity of the spirit. Let us bear in mind. "United we stand, divided we fall." If satan cannot succeed in destroying the union and love among us, he will put out some baits. We sometimes see them published in newspapers, and handbills posted up along the highway. He puts forth great inducements, so as to draw together all the young people from far and near, and if possible give a special invitation to those young and tender branches of the true vine, and strange as it may seem, to some, as soon as one begins to nibble at those baits, they will begin to wither and become unfruitful. And now that we may show those dangerous and poisonous baits, I will name some of them. They are generally known by the name of picnics, Sunday school celebrations, State and county fairs, and all such like gatherings. All such gatherings are intended to lead the followers of Christ into the snares of the devil, and one who makes a practice of tending such places, is just as sure to fall a victim to satan, as those wild fowls fell victims to the fowler spoken of in the begining of our article. O, says the young brother or sister, there can be no harm in going to those places, because generally, about half of the crowd are professors of religion, and there is our neighbor, he is a praying man, and a professor of religion. He tends all these places, and he thinks there is no harm in going, for there we can hear the news of the day besides all this, learn many things. But stop a little my friend, let me examine, or weigh your good neighbor in the gospel scales, and see whether you are safe to take him as a guide.

Jeremiah says, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm." Jer. 17: 55. The Savior says, "If the blind lead the blind, they both fall into the ditch." From this you can learn that it is not safe to take man as our guide in these things. Your good neighbor may be a decoy duck, or under the influence of satan. Hence he is drawing by the cord of sin; his religion is vain, and by your following him he will lead you on in that broad road that leads to destruction. Such men or women seldom tell us about the abominable wickedness that is going on at such places. They don't tell us of the pride that is planted in the children at those picnics, Sunday school celebrations, and fair grounds. By our tending those places we bid them God's speed and thereby become partakers of their evil deeds.

I have now tried in my weakness to show the inducements that are held out by the ageucy of satan, and the arguments that are made use of by those agents or decoy ducks, in order to lead us from the simplicity that is in Christ. I will now come to a close by yet saying, let us draw nigh unto God with a full assurance of faith, and let us put on the whole armor of God, so that we may be able to stand against the viles of the devil. Paul says that God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that which ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye be able to bear it. Seeing then that we have such a faithful and merciful God, let us draw nigh unto him, and he will draw nigh unto us. Surely he shall deliver us from the hands of the fowler and the noisome pestilence. L. F. WAGONER.

Thou Shalt not Tempt the Lord.

"Jesus said unto him, It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." Matt. 4: 7.

This was the language of the Savior in answer to one of those great temptations. Acording to Matthew it was the second temptation, but Luke gives it as the third. Luke 4: 12. In the first temptation the adversary came in a doubting way, rather doubting whether he was the Son of God, or not, perhaps thinking he could get the Savior to perform a miracle to prove that he was the Son of God, Next he showed him the kingdom of this world and the glory of them. "Just fall down and worship me and all will be thine." But the Savior meets him with the written word, and says, "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Well you are a worshipper, and very apt in quoting Scripture, I will go with you to worship, and quote Scripture too." Then he takes him to the pinnacle of the temple and makes one more request, and had it been the will of the Father that he should cast himself down he could have bore him up as easy as he bore him up on the deep when he came walking on the sea. But he came as our example as well as our commander, and he commanded us not to cast our pearls before swine, and he knew that he would accomplish nothing by showing the devil that he was the Son of God. hence he comes in the language of our subject, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

As the Savior had the adversary to contend with the same adversary is still in existence, and we have him to contend with, and he will present the same temptations to us that he did to our Savior, but perhaps in a different form. He will try to get us to doubt whether Christ is the Son of God, or disbelieve in his revealed will, and in this way accomplishes a great deal. And will also show us the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them, which will run in different channels, but we will say the lust of the flesh and the pride of life, which are not of the Father but of the world and the world will pass away with the lust thereof. Hence we must admit that the devil is the author, as he said it is his. But fashionable preachers preach against pride, and I believe the devil has but little objection to that, but when we point out certain things he becomes offended. Brethren and sisters I hope we are prepared to receive the truth and the love of it, and if so, we will not become offended. Let us hear the apostle James 1: 21. "Wherefore laying apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness," let us also keep the heading of this paper in view, "Remove not the ancient landmarks which our Father's have set." The adversary will present these temptations to us, and whenever we give vent to his controll then it is that we are, to some extent, worshipping him. James says "superfluity." "What is superfluity? Answer, Anything that we could do as well or better without. Such things that we spend money and time for that are for no purpose and are not in harmony with the gospel, nor the order of the church. When I go into a brother's house and see all sorts of ornaments, such as toys and novels, I am reminded that they are not of the Father. Then let us examine the adorning of our bodies. The church has adopted a plain dress, which is in harmony with the gospel, and before we came to the church we knew what the order was and promised to adhere to it. Then in the flowing stream, with quivering lips we promised to denounce the devil with all his pernicious ways, and everything inconsistent with said gospel. Now see where we are drifting to. We have deviated from the old order. But, says one, times have changed and we are as far behind the times as ever. We will admit that, but who changed them? Did Christ? No; for we read that he is the same yesterday to-day and forever. Neither did the church change them. Then of course the world must have changed the times, and if we follow the world we cannot follow Christ as we cannot serve two masters, and whenever we engage in anything that we cannot consistently ask God's blessing upon the same, we are tempting the Lord.

Secret orders just comes up. I did not intend to say anything about them, but they are becoming very numerous in the country, and generally come up under the garb of religion, and have some good about them. But we need none of them as Christ brought a perfect gospel, a gospel of peace and temperance. It needs no amendment; it is full. But the adversary is all the time adoing or diminishing, and if we engage in his work we are tempting the Lord.

Intermediate State of the Dead.

Under this caption there is an article in No. 18 of the present volume of the PILGRIM, which, though it is a question that does not involve the salvation of souls, yet I have a few Scriptural reasons for not believing as the writer of said article does on that question, and reasons too, outside of those mentioned by the writer as among the objections argued against his position.

"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. 12: 7. By this I understand that when the body is dead the spirit immediately returns unto God. Paul also says,—2. Cor. 1st verse—"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord. We are confident I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body to be present with the Lord."—7th verse. Could Paul use such language as this and at the same time know as he would have known, that there would be a certain length of time intervening between his death and the time he would be with Christ? Where would be the absence from the body if the spirit lies dormant in the grave till the resurrection? Surely there can be no absence from the body at all in that case, nor presence with the Lord until after the first resurrection. Paul's confidence must have been vain. This same apostle in writing to his Phillippian brethren says, "For I am in a straight betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ which is far better."—Phil. 1: 23.

Now I cannot see why Paul would use language that would convey ideas to us that are so antagonistical to divine revelation, if indeed the idea that the spirit takes its flight at the death of the body is not in accordance with divine revelation. "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live. And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"—John 11: 25. In what sense can a man live though he were dead if the spirit does not return unto God who gave it? In what sense shall a man never die that liveth and believeth in Jesus Christ, if the spirit of man dies with the body?

The writer mentions something about Christ's preaching to the antediluvians between the crucifixion and the resurrection. Where is the proof for such an idea? I would like to see that point sustained if it can be. And now brethren and sisters, what I have written I have written in a spirit of love and not to get up a controversy, and as I said in the begioning, the question is not one that involves the salvation of precious and never-dying souls, which we should all labor for with zeal; but it is of such a nature that it will not effect the dead at the resurrection either way, be it true or not. Therefore I consider it hardly worth contending about, and for my part I could die just as well contented if I believed one way as the other, but as I believed the weight of Scripture testimony was against the position, therefore have I written. Then, in the language of Paul, let us labor that whether present or absent we may be accepted of him.

TO CHRISTIAN PARENTS.

Andy, Fathers provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the admonition of the Lord. Eph. 6: 4.

No other calling in life does so generally involve us in so great responsibility, of so grave a nature, as that of rearing up our children. Think of the power of parental influence over our off-spring, and how much depends upon such influence in the formation of character, and how much depends upon chracter in the building up of desirable society! And oh, how we desire that our children may form a part of the society in heaven, and how can they if they are not of agreeable society here? Mothers, are you up and awake to the fact, that, in a great measure the moulding of your son's characters rests with you, having them under your particular notice and care at the very period of their lives, in which they pass the great and telling crisis; and if this be so in regard to your sons, how much more, with reference to your daughters? And if this be true of mother's responsibility, how important it is that daughters should be brought up in the nurture that will qualify them for the great duties that may await them. „And ye fathers" says the apostle, as though reason itself taught mothers, and as though fathers need a precaution lest reason would teach them too much i. e. that they might too much depend upon the responsibilities thought to be resting upon mothers. But "blessed among women" that mother who tries, for the sake of the wellbeing of her offspring, to make up what father fails to do of his part; by deprivation or neglect. Mothers who are at the head of minister's families, tears of sympathy bedim my eyes while I try to address you here. Minister, children should be of all most pious, and their fathers much of their time far from home away. And hence it is apparent that your duties are of the gravest nature, and that you well deserve, and may expect in a measure at least, a special remembrance at a throne of grace.

A few thoughts on the manner of children's training, may not be amiss. Too many Christian professing parents are over eager to have their youths fitted for a successful worldly career, and overlook the thing most needful. It is the duty of parents to see to and aid their youths in a temporal point of view, but by all means let that be done in a way consistent with their holy profession. Can we dare to adventure our children into an occupation for a livelyhood, that leads them necessarily into the use or manufactor, or traffic of things which we as Christians denounce with all lusts of the eye and pride of life; or which may lead them into temptations of defraud &c. which might have been less the case in more consistent callings? Could we believe that if Lydia of Thyatira, had thought to make the selling of purple most profitable, by setting up a millinery trade, and having her daughters taught all the arts of manufacturing all of the fashionable decorations and of having constantly on hands all manner of such as tinkling ornaments for the feet, cauls, round tires like the moon, chains, bracelets and mufflers, the bonnets, the ornaments of the legs, headbands, caplets and ear-rings, and the rings, and nose-jewels, the changeabl suits of apparel and the mantles, the wimples and crispinggins, the glasses and the fine linnen and the hoods and veils, and of changing and replenishing their stock with every change of the day. I ask, can we believe that she would have carried such a purpose into execution after the reception of Paul and Silas into her house, and after being baptized by them and also her household? Would she have proposed it to any one of her house had it not yet been baptized; or had she rather taught them the doctrine which Paul taught in the 9th and 10th verses of 1st Tim. 2nd, chapter, "that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." Let this same apply also in the bringing up of our sons, keep in view that higher sphere of their existence for which they were created, and taking heed that we point them not to things which tend to leading them away from God.

FAITH.

What the comer to Christ must believe.

I propose to notice that the comer to Christ must believe, and while I do this, I shall have in view the welfare of precious souls and the glory of God. We notice that the comer to Christ is a penetant returning sinner and implies repentance, for as long as we refuse to come to Christ, so long we remain in an unrepetuing state. But so soon as we begin to repent, so soon we begin to come to Christ. But first what the repentant must believe. He that cometh to God must believe that he is rewarded of them that diligently seek him. First, he must believe in God; otherwise he cannot please God. To believe that God, exists is essential to his acceptance with him. Though infidels believe a first great, cause there are some who dare to deny the existance of the true God. Consequently cannot be saved.

This is the chief delight of satan to get the comer to disbelieve God. He will insinuate to you my dear convicted friend, that perhaps there is no God, no heaven, no hell, no devil, and thus will torment you with doubts and fears; but resist the devil and he will flee from you. Tell him you know there is a God, and that "the fool saith there is no God"

To believe on God is the work of God. You must also believe that he is a rewarder of those that seek him. There must be no doubt about the matter. You must trust in him as one who is ready and willing to reward you. "Seek and you shall find," is Christ's words but faith accompanied seeking. "Strive to enter in at the straight gate, for many I say unto you shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." Hence the coming sinner must strive as well as seek. The gate is narrow and straight, hence the necessity of caution on the part of the seekers. Again "if a man also strives for the masteries yet is he not crowned except he strives lawfully." 2 Tim. 2: 5.

This Scripture proves that there is a certain manner in which to strive or in other words a law to be observed in striving in order to insure the blessing. Then as it is a part of God's law to believe that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him, if you distrust him as your rewards, you will fall short of him.

The Friends' Yearly Meeting.—At the Quakers' yearly session, begun in this city on Monday, was read the epistle from Ohio containing a brief account of the temperance movement in that State, and offered firm reasons against the use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco. It also contained an urgent argument against a hireling or paid ministry, and also against the tendency of business men to go beyond the bounds of safe business operations. On the question of First Day (or Sunday) schools the epistle strongly advocated them for the moral education of the young. On the Indian question the writer expressed a belief of the advancement of the race towards civilization. The epistle excited some debate, during which the speakers strongly advocated the teaching of children and grown people to abstain from the use of both spirituous liquors and tobacco. There was an element moving through out the whole world to put down the traffic, and the excessive use of either was not only injurious but expensive. One of the speakers urged that money-ed men should not make loans on any property where liquor is sold and that alone would help to stop the trade. It was a man's duty to take care of his health, and he had no right to help to destroy the life of his fellows, so he had no right to destroy his own life or unfit himself for the high duties he had been called on to perform. The Treasurer's report shows an expenditure for the year of $86.50, which was met by an assessment of $37.50 added to the balance of $49 on hand at the last report—Tribune.

At The Late Communion Meeting in Anghwick Congregation Huntingdon Co. Brother Seth Myers of Hill Valley Pa. was chosen to the ministry. Hope he may prove worthy of the high and holy calling.

On Our return from Conference we met several of our Aumish brethren who were also west attending a Conference somewhere in Iowa. They were from Wayne Co. Ohio and both subscribed for the Pilgrim. Tho Aamish are a branch of the Menonite Church and in apparel &c. resemble the Brethren except that they use hooks and eyes on their garments instead of buttons. In point of doctrine the differrnce is something more.

At Our late Conference we had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Mattie A. Leer whose writings are so highly prized by our readers. We found her to be a women of more than ordinary intelligence, well read, a fine talker and could prophesy to general benefit. She has promised to be a regular contributor to our columns and hope our readers may have the pleasure of hearing from her often.

A California Visit. A number of our western brethren and sisters have determined on a visit to their friends in California in the after part of the season. To lighten the expenses and have a more homelike ride they have chartered a car (first class) for the round trip at $1.000. The car has the capacity of seating from 50 to 60 persons, reducing the fare down to the small sum of about $20.00 a piece.

Read This.—As every body wants to read the report of our Conference and as that report costs us considerable money, we call upon our agents and friends to make a renewed effort to obtain for us 400 or 500 new subscribers. This would be a great help to us and could be done without a very great effort on the part of our readers. We will send the Pilgrim beginning with the first No containing the report, to the end of the year for 80 cents, giving each subscriber one of our Almanacs free. Now is the time. Let us see what you can do for us.

A New Departure.—The present religious topic of Chicago is Dr. David Swing. There is a departure somewhere but we cannot tell whether he departed from the Presbyterian Church or whether it departed from him. A prominent gentlemau of Chicago told us that he (Swing) was all mixed up. We are not so certain but what there may be a little mixture somewhere else. That he is guilty of using the 109th psalm is evident but how great a sin that is Chicago Presbyterianism has not as yet fully determined. They say it is a rough prayer for modern Christianity. The Dr. has resigned his membership and is now preaching on his own responsibility. He has a number of his sermons published and are for sale everywhere, especially by the railroad newsboys. From a peep we would judge David to be a man of some words.

were told that we would find his family, that he had left them behind. At Bro. Artzes, living near by, we called for the other brethren which we had determined on visiting and was told that it was about two miles This seemed a little too much under the circumstances, but our purposes were made and the two miles had to be made and for them we went, and about 9 o'clock arrived at the home of brother John Shuss, and a happier meeting is not often had on this side of the kingdom. We were glad and they were glad so that it was gladness all around. Sister Shuss was already abed but the news of our presence soon brought her out and in a short time, such a supper was ready for us as Nebraska can well be proud of. Don't talk sod houses and soda biscuit to us under such treatment. All that kind hearts and hands could do was done for us, and if ever we felt grateful to God for kindred spirits in Christ, we did on this occasion. After a pleasant exchange of congratulations and a general epitome of home things in Pa., we retired and enjoyed a refreshing sleep and rest. Next morning had only a few hours to look around and visit brother and sister, Samuel Brumbaugh and wife. The time was entirely too short and was not at all satisfactory to our dear friends, but was the very best we could do to meet our arrangements. These brethren are from Pa., and are grandly situated, the fact is, in way of location and fertile lands they have all that can be desired. With two horses, brother Shuss informs us that he seeded down this Spring, about fifty acres of wheat, thirty of corn, and twenty of oats. The wheat generally averages from 30 to

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Omaha, Neb., May 21st '74.

After having been here a short time, we in company with Bro. S. A. M. concluded to take a stroll and view the city and as the Public School building presented some attraction from a distance, we thought it good to see it. Being too late in the day to gain admittance we took advantage of the shady nook in the grounds where we are now writing. From no other point could we get so good a view of the City, as the building is located on a beautiful elevated spot considerably above the town. The house is large and substantially built of brick and is quite a credit to the place, or the cause of education. North and South of us lies the great City, claiming a population of 15,000. Beyond is the Missouri River and U. P. Transfer, Bridge which, truly, is a stupendous work constructed entirely of iron. Some of the piers, we were told, were sunk 70 feet deep in order to get a solid foundation. For crossing this, every passenger, pass or no pass, has the pleasure of paying 50 cents. This is one of the Western exorbitants from which there is no escape. Beyond this some two miles, nestle Council Bluffs, among and about the bluffs. This is also a considerable place, claiming a population of 8,500. Judging from the number of hotels, restaurants, and saloons, Omaha must be a fast and wicked place, if to drink is wicked, and who dares to say it is not? Never did we see so many drinking houses, proportionately, in one place. Almost every alternate house throughout the city, sells intoxicating drinks, and what is more strange, they are well patronized.

The City is pleasantly located but very much scattered and largely composed of inferior buildings, only a few respectable blocks in the place. The country west is a rolling prairie, North, the bottom lands of the Mo. and East and South is the Missouri River and Council Bluffs, beyond which is the bluffy range running North and South. At this point, the emigrants pour in by the thousands and from here are scattered throughout the great Western prairies. We were informed that on Monday the receipts from emigrants alone amounted to over $11,000 and that it was not more than the average for the last three months. These strangers in a strange land have their all with them, some haveconsiderable money. To get this, there are numerous land sharks throughout the West waiting in readiness to pounce the poor foreigner and defraud him of his ready cash, and from all accounts they do a thriving business. When will men learn to fear God and do justly?

Kearney Junction, Neb.
May 23, 1874.

On Friday morning we left Chicago for this place and had one of the most pleasant rides through prairie land that it was ever our lot to enjoy. The night before there was a sufficient rain fall to lay the dust and cool the air. With windows hoisted and a constant draft of pure air passing through, we felt our situation to be enjoyable and concluded to devote our time to sight seeing. The first on the list was the great and the grand prairie. Of this there was a sufficiency to satisfy the most capacious mind as of it there seemed to be no limit. Wherever the eye would fall, the same beautiful green sward was there. In places, it was almost level, but generally, slightly rolling, just enough to make it agreeable and drainable. Between Omaha and Kearney, along the road, we supposed there was about one tenth of the land under cultivation, and from appearance, must be exceedingly productive. The wheat (Spring) crop now growing looks very well and promises a large harvest. There was a farmer on the train, formerly of Tioga Co., Pa., who says that from the labor he bestowed in Pa. to raise 200 bushels of wheat, he now raises 1800. This he says he harvested last season from 60 acres, and from numerous other statements from men of reliability, we have no reason to doubt his word. We saw the farm on which it growed and believe it to be no better than the thousands of acres lying along the route. Oats, barley, and corn are also staples and meet a ready sale. To the eastern farmer, the buildings present a strange appearance. In many cases, the first house is made of sod. Of these, we saw a number but did not have the opportunity of entering any. They are built almost entirely of sod cut of an equal width and laid up like brick. The houses are generally 12 by 16 or 18, and 7 feet high. The roof is made by timbering for rafters and lathing and then shingling with sod. The house inside is finished according to the taste of the owner. Some have them plastered, others, lined and ceiled with boards, while still others have them in the rough. Sod houses however, will soon be among the things of the past, as they are rapidly being displaced by nice little wooden cottages which present a much more homelike appearance. The first consideration after building a house is to protect it from the storms by a windbrake. This is done by planting a grove of Cottonwood or soft Maple on the North side of the house. For this, the State has made a very wise provision. For every acre not exceeding five, planted by the owner the law provides that $100.00 shall be deducted from his valuation. With this inducement, farmers find it to their advantage to plant from three to four acres. The trees grow very rapidly, soon making a good windbrake. also, in a short time make material for fencing and fire. These groves add greatly to the appearance of the farms and in a few years will greatly change the features of the whole State. Fencing at present, is no question with the Nebraskan as they are not needed. The herd law makes every man responsible for his own stock, and they tell us that it is much cheaper to herd the stock than to build fences. Water they seem to have in abundance by digging for it from 15 to 60 feet. All that are able have the wind pump which is quite a convenience and answers the purpose very well. These cost from $60 to $200, owing to size, &c. Fruit growing is not fully tested but the prospects are favorable and the people hopeful.

The leading men of Nebraska feel their importance and are generally good stuff, full of push and energy. Most of them are eastern men who had sufficient pluck to cut loose from home associations and make a bold strike for fortune and fame. In passing Sutton we noticed the second story of an ordinary frame house crowded full of people. On inquiry we were informed that it was the court room and that court was in session. An old gentleman near by seeing that we were somewhat embarrassed at seeing court in such a place as that—of course he knew we were Pennsylvanians—(?) remarked, "I suppose you would not have looked for court in a house like that, but then the talent of those who preside there is in proportion to the house." Just behind us, as it happened, sat a young limb of the law who took the liberty to stoutly deny the old gentleman's assertion, showing to us by some lawful demonstrations that the Nebraska courts needed the brightest talent that the country could afford and that they had it too. We believed it because their county towns are full of Pennsylvania lawyers. The Nebraskans are great talkers and you can soon learn what is within by that which comes out. When the untutored heathen was asked to tell the chief end of man he answered, "to steal fat oxen," but we began to think that it was "to buy and sell oxen." However we soon got out of this element, but strange things do we hear while traveling. By the way, there was a No. 1 farmer pitched into a nest of Grangers, as the saying runs, ungloved. They charged a heavy volley of cheap farming implements against him, followed by a load of "middle men," but they fell powerless at his feet. The chief spokesman among them is smelling for an office, and the sturdy farmer being aware of it, gave him a few taps that cooled his ardor considerably. We fear that many of our Western friends will bite at the Grange bait until they get most shamefully bitten, but we are losing our subject. As we said before, they are great talkers and in addition, we will say great thinkers and workers. The spirit of goaheadativeness is manifested as soon as you enter their towns. As an instance we will take Kearney. This place claims 300 houses and 800 inhabitants. The houses and the people we could see nowhere, i. e. the 300 and 800, but let us tell you what we did see. First, we saw enough farming implements, reapers, headers, thresbers, cultivators, plows, and harrows, to supply our whole State. Second, we found the place to contain 26 stores doing a fair trade, and what is still more surprising, a weekly and daily newspaper named respectively, the Kearney Press and Kearney Times, the Press being the daily. From what we could learn Kearney is a fair sample of all the towns along the route, that is, they all seem to run a fair proportionate business. This is accounted for from the fact that the towns are generally a considerable distance apart and all situated along the rail-road, thus giving a farming country some 20 miles or more deep, back of each town. After this country all becomes settled it will demand a large trade and continue to feed the spirit of growth and enterprise so manifest in all the railroad towns.

On entering Nebraska it was our purpose, to note down the towns by the way and give a sketch of the surrounding country, and with note book and pencil in hand we commenced. First, A, a thriving town of some 400 inhabitants, well laid out, generally wooden buildings somewhat scattered but pleasantly located on a beautiful prairie. That is about all we had time to say of A, and awaited to see what could be said of B. After getting there and looking around a little we felt as if we would have about the same to say of B, and concluded to wait for a change, but we found such a similarity in the general appearance and location of the towns that we concluded that a description of one would describe them all as far as location and style of buildings is concerned.

As to sight seeing, our curiosity was not very fully gratified. In addition to the Prairie Chick. the weazel and the prairie Grey squirrel, we saw the buffalo, the Indian Jack rabbit and several dog towns but no dogs. We saw some other curiosities but they were abnormal specimens of common things, ladies we believe they were called and hailed from the Pacific—don't belong to Nebraska and therefore shall not describe them.

While on our way out here we met a number of land explorers in search of farms. These are provided with "exploring tickets" by the Burlington & Missouri River R. R. Co. For these tickets they pay the regular through fare rate and have the privilege of stopping off at any point along the road, for the purpose of examining the land of which this company owns millions of acres. If a purchase is made within 90 days the cost of the ticket is acknowledged by the Co. as part pay on the land, thus costing the purchaser nothing for his ride while examining the land. The land belonging to this Company, extending from Burlington Iowa, on both sides of the road, to Kearney Junction, Nebraska, is now offered for sale. The price per acre in Iowa ranges from $7 to $20, in Nebraska from $3 to $18, owing altogether to location. The land is sold on what is called the "10 year credit system." For the first four years the purchaser pays nothing but the interest. The fifth year he commences paying the principal which is divided into seven equal payments, thus giving the purchaser ample time to make the payments from the products of the farm, which in many cases has been done. Notwithstanding these liberal terms, people should not go there to buy empty handed, or better perhaps, with empty pockets. To commence successfully a man should have means for the following:

A cheap board house 16x20, one story	$250.00
2 Horses and harness	245.00
1 Wagon	110.00
Plow, harrow & cultivator	60.00
Bread & seed till first crop	100.00
Family expenses	100.00
	$865.00

Any one going West with less than the above will certainly go a sorrowing. For any further information concerning Nebraska and its inducements, write to

Geo. O. Manchester Agt.
Burlington, Iowa.

Having now told you about all we can think of that may be of interest to those concerned about Nebraska, we close our portfolio and go to bed with the expectation of starting homeward bound in the morning, the Lord willing.

EX-EDITORIAL.

I write at present from conviction of duty, believing that circumstances require that I should be heard from, not so much on my own account as for the sake of the public interests with which I am identified. First, then, I wish it to be carefully observed by all who may feel interested, that at present my address is Berlin, Somerset County Penn'a.

I am here for the express purpose of working in the interests of the Brethren's High School, which it has been determined to establish at this place. And as this school is intended to be a benefit to the whole Brotherhood, and the Brotherhood to the school, it is essential that the general interests of the church should be constantly kept in view, and its wishes consulted whenever an opportunity affords. With that view, we respectfully solicit correspondence from all parts of the Brotherhood, that none of its interests may be overlooked. I will also endeavor to give any information in regard to the enterprise that may be desired. And as I have already been asked a number of questions in regard to BERLIN AS A LOCATION, I will proceed at once to describe it, in matters which might make it a suitable or an unsuitable place for an institution of this kind.

Berlin is a village of from four to eight hundred inhabitants. It is an old town and has several fine buildings. It is built upon high ground and overlooks the surrounding country for many miles on every side. The highest pinnacle of the Alleghany mountains is not above a few hundred feet higher than the highest point in Berlin. It is situated in the heart of the country extensively known by the name of the Glades, and famous for the excellent quality of butter and maple sugar which it produces. Northwardly the country is quite level and smooth, and all the surrounding country is very fertile, producing oats and rye in great abundance, and by the application of lime has been found to grow excellent crops of corn and wheat.

The town and the adjoining hills are underlaid with several veins of bituminous coal of the first quality. Good water abounds in running springs in the valleys and along the hillsides, and in plentiful wells on the highlands.

The community is reported as one of the most healthy in the State, being free from all malarious diseases. Owing to its altitude it has been thought to be colder here than below the mountains, but experience has failed to demonstrate this opinion. One thing is true, however: our Spring seasons are from ten to fourteen days later than below the mountains. And therefore persons who are required to do much outside work during that season of the year will be somewhat endangered to Rheumatism and kindred diseases, unless special care be taken to keep the feet dry and warm.

Mode of Access It is situated on the State Road from Bedford, thirty miles, to Pittsburgh, ninety miles. Also on the Plank Road running from Cumberland, Maryland, thirty miles, to Somerset, nine miles. Berlin is nine miles from Garrett, a station on the Pittsburgh Washington and Baltimore Railroad. From Garrett a branch road has been graded to Berlin, and the track is now being laid, and in a few months will be in successful operation. That being accomplished, Berlin will be one of the most convenient places of access which has the other essentials to a suitable location for such a school, that has yet been nominated. From Pittsburgh and points west, we have the Pittsburgh, Washington and Baltimore Railroad. So also for North Western Pennsylvania, via Connellsville. South Eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Tennessee, have communication with us via the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to Cumberland, and thence by the Pittsburgh, Washington and Baltimore Railroad or Connellsville Route. So also West and Southwest. From Northeastern Pennsylvania, and the Eastern States, Passengers are delivered by the Pennsylvania Central railroad at Bridgeport, on the Connellsville route. So we will be in direct Railroad communication with the whole land, and it is beyond all reasonable doubt, that in a few years, probably by the time our school will be in successful operation, another branch road will be constructed intersecting the Pennsylvania Central at Jonstown, and possibly Bedford; for when the country will again assume its wonted enterprise, creating a demand for minerals, our unbounded resources will be sought out and developed. The purposes of this article do not require that I should enter upon a description of the mineral wealth of this country. It is known that various useful minerals abound.

Church influence. The congregation in which Berlin is located is one of the oldest west of the mountains. It numbers several hundred members, and has held the Annual meeting several times during the last half century. Although the members are fully up to our standard in intelligence they maintain the old order in plainness and other peculiarities of the church, and would be recognized as a branch of old Brethren. In good works generally they may be classed with the medium, and in enterprise herein referred to, they have manifested commendable zeal and liberality. About twenty members reside in the town. The large meeting-house is one mile from town, and three others within about three miles in different directions.

Further particulars will be cheerfully given upon application to the undersigned.

I have been appointed general solicitor to secure the endowment fund, and I will wait upon all, in person or through duly authorized agents, as speedily as possible.

Below I append a copy of the subscription heading, with conditions upon which contributions and subscriptions are solicited. It is intended that all the li ts shall be bound in a book and placed in the archives of the school, thus preserving a record of the founders and friends of the institution.

SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE BRETHREN'S HIGH SCHOOL.

We the undersigned, hereby obligate ourselves to pay or cause to be paid, the amount set oposite our respective names, for the purpose, in the manner, and upon the conditions following:

I.—Said moneys shall be appropriated for the building and establishing of a School of the higher grade at Berlin, Somerset County Pennsylvania, and to be known as the Brethren's High School of Berlin.

II.—This School shall be under the immediate control of the shareholders, subject, however, to the following rules of principle:

1. Members of the Church of the Brethren, who are in full standing in Church, shall alone be elligible to the office of director, or to the position of teacher,

2. While it shall not be the purpose or object of the School to inculcate theological or sectarian doctrines, nevertheless, in life and conduct it shall be the aim and purpose of the managers and teachers to exhibit the distinctive features that characterize the Church.

III.—One-fourth of the amount subscribed shall be paid within one year of the date of subscription, as may be demanded by the Board of Directors.

IV.—For the remaining three-fourths we will give a bond or mortgage upon which we will pay six per cent. interest, annually for the period of ten years, when the bond or mortgage shall be null and void. Each shareholder shall have the privelege to pay up his interest in lieu of giving a bond.

V.—Each five hundred dollars shall be denominated one share, and the holder thereof shall be entitled to five votes in the municipal management of said School and to his pro rata share of the dividends. One hundred dollars shall be denominated one-fifth shar-, and command one vote, etc.

VI.—Unless subscriptions to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000,) shall be secured, no part of these subscriptions shall be collectible.

The National Conference of Dunkards.

The National Conference of Dunkards went into business sessions at Girard, Ill. on Tuesday and adjourned on Wednesday. The first question considered was the propriety of having the conference published, giving the nature of the discussion and the names of the disputants. This was warmly discussed, some contending for the liberty of the press, while others were opposed to any thing more than a synopsis without name being given, believing a full report would be calculated to create discord among the brotherhood, and exhibit a degree of pride on the part of the Conference that would be unscriptural and dangerous. A majority were not in favor of departing from primitive customs, and only a synopticle report will be published. It was then decided to send out ministers on missionary work to preach the doctrine of peace to the nations.

A question was presented to have the old minutes of the previous Conference compiled and published, which was granted and a special committee appointed on the subject. A long discussion then took place on the proper manner of wearing the beard, and it has been decided that while it has ever been the rule of the church to wear a full beard, it is not permitted to wear moustaches only. The question of allowing members to engage in banking business was discussed, and was decided in the negative, as it would lead to covetous, litegation and usery, all of which was forbidden by the sect. On the question of collegiate education it was decided to be unadvisable to send children to college. It was determined not to permit the use of their names in the establishment of High Schools controlled by the church The Standing Committee was authorized to appoint a sub-Committee to visit and to reconcile inharmonious churches, after which the conference adjourned till to-morrow.

The question of saluting the colored brethren with the holy kiss was settled by permitting each church to make their own rules on this subject, though some brethren thought that a rule ought to be made forbidding any question on account of color in osculatory salutes. The question as to propriety Dunkards joining famers clubs produced a long discussion, and it was finally decided that it would be inconsistent with the religion of the sect for members to join any such societies It was decided that the piano, or any other musical instrument, should not be kept by any member of the church, though the Council could not prohibit their use. The session will meet next year in the Miami Valley, Ohio. About 500 of the preaching brethren were present, representing an approximate membership of 150,000.—Tribune.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A GOOD WORKMAN.— We are informed that Eld. Jac. M. Thomas, a few months ago, baptized two persons, he being in his eightieth year.

E. L. YODER of Ohio says, "Our Sunday Schools are about organizing. At our council four were added by baptism and four by letter.

IN THE James Creek congregation, Pa., at the Bethel church, our brethren have organized a successful Sunday School and indications are that it will prove a great benefit to the neighborhood.

ELDS. H. D. DAVY, D. P. SAYLER, AND B. F. MOOMAW, have been appointed by the late Conference as a committee to visit the churches of California. Hope their Mission may be a successful one and they may be able to accomplish good.

Huntingdon, during our absence has been rapidly improving, houses that were in course of erection were completed and quite a of number new ones commenced. The foundation of our new post office is under way and in a short time we will have a mail delivery of which the place need not to be ashamed.

THE PERFECT plan of salvation is a 24 page pamphlet published by Bro. J. H. Moore of Urbana Ill. and should be circulated by the thousand. Those who have the means could devote it to no better purpose than to buy a lot of these and distribute them to such persons as may be desirous of knowing "the way."

THE EMPEROR of Russia has sent Gen. Totleben on a mission to the Mennonites with the object of deterring them from emigrating to this country. It now appears that the Czar intended to grant special exemption to the members of this sect, but his instruction were misunderstood by the officials. They are to be subject to duty only in military hospitals.

THE REPORT.—Next week we expect to commence our report of A. M. There is much in it that we would rather not publish, especially when we are denied the liberty of giving the names. We think the time has come that every brother should be made to face his own music, but we suppose that some feel ashamed of their own arguments and we do not wonder at it.

BRO. GEORGE STEEL.—of Walkerton Ind. says; "At the close of Dec. 1874 I was solicted by brother John Barnhart to subscribe for the WEEKLY PILGRIM, he recommending it as being an instructive and very interesting paper. I subscribed and am very much pleased with its contents indeed it was not misrepresented to me as it certainly gives food to the hungry and water to the thirsty. Bro. continue in well doing, your compositions are able wise and good.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—The late action of our Conference relative to musical instruments is being differently understood, some contending that they have been altogether forbidden. This is a mistake. The use of them is only advised against in such congregations where their use causes offense. But the propriety of going even thus far we cannot see when other things that are just causes of offense are allowed. Tobacco has been the cause of offense ever since its introduction into the Church. Annual Conference has decided against it time and again, but where is it to-day? Why not go to work and excommunicate every brother that uses it? Five times better do it than to think of debarring any brother or sister from church privileges for no other offence than that of using musical instruments. That tobacco is the greater evil and has more dangerous tendancies must be admitted by every intelligent mind. In both, we plead not guilty but despise unfairness in dealing with things that some of the brethren think to be evil.

Correspondence.

Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Jottings by the Way.

Dear Pilgrim:—

I, like hundreds of others, attended our late Conference because others did and in addition perhaps, prompted by a little curiosity to know how and what was to be done there. On my way there I happened to meet among others bound for the same place, and from what it was lawful for me to overhear, I concluded that there was to be a "wheel in a wheel" at the meeting, or in other words there was a party who had a certain object in view, and who went up to the meeting with the full determination of having them pushed. Perhaps this was an uncharitable conclusion of mine, but on arriving at the meeting and seeing the determination on the part of some to have certain moves passed even against a seemingly large majority, my conclusions were greatly strengthened.

Old brother Peter Nead, well meaningly took it into his head that nothing could pass without his assent, and from all appearance he was quite successful. When the "ancient order" once gets more defference in the Church than the Bible I shall call for a reformation or else reform myself out of it, The grant for a revision of the Encyclopedia is a step that I very much regret. It is a step towards book discipline. It would be far better for the purity and prosperity of the Church if the whole pack of discipline, Encyclopedia and all, were gathered on a pile and fire set to them. If we give heed to these disciplines and then deny that the Church has no discipline independent of the New Testament we speak the untruth and there is no possible way to get around it. Brethren for the sake of our beloved Zion, let us go to the sure word of prophecy and obey that form of doctrine which is alone able to make us wise unto Salvation.

If it is necessary to go to the expense of holding an Annual Conference to settle petty little questions, generally of a local character it is certainly more important that an Annual Conference should be held to advance the interests of the cause which we hold so near and dear At the great ingathering there was not a single move made towards having the Gospel promulgated to such as have not heard it, no provision made for building Churches, caring for the urgent wants of our ministers, or for the needy poor. These are the things that ought to be for the deliberations of our Annual Conferences while local matters should be attended to at home. I felt like having much to say but as there seemed to be but one way of disposing of things I thought it best not to disturb the regular issue, but for the benefit of those whose duty it is to take a prominent part in making decisions I would say don't make them when you have reason to believe that they will not be adhered to. Every violation weakens the power of the A. C. and these are becoming so frequent that many do not care for them at all any more. This spirit will continue to grow until we have fewer disciplines and those made by the voice of the delegates present. It is now the experience of every successful teacher that the fewer rules the fewer violations. If we continue to make disciplines as heretofore and then have them bound up in portly volumes for the future regulations of the Church, it will soon be necessary to have a convention of lawyers to read and digest them for us. Of course there will be no need for the New Testament, as in the Encyclopedia will be laid down all the necessary formula from questioning the candidate up to installing the bishop. All churches must observe these forms in order to maintain a unity of practice. Brethren this may seem a little tainted with ridicule but it is not, it is the sacred truth, and as soon as the Church gets its eyes open to the glaring facts it will lead either to reformation or disruption. For the money it will cost to revise and publish the Encyclopedia, we had beter use in buying Bibles for the poor. In them is eternal life revealed, the power of God unto salvation to all that believe them. I love the Church, her sacred principles as founded upon the word of the Lord, but I fear, I despise the disciplines of men. I came to the Brethren to get liberated from them and do not wish any more to become entangled in their meshes. Yours for the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. JOHN LELAND.

Dear Bro. Editors:—

As I see no news in the PILGRIM from this arm of the church I thought this Sabbath morning I would try through my great weakness, to say something which I hope will be of some interest to our readers especially to those dear ones who are so anxious to hear from us, and the brethren and sisters.

I will say in the first place that our Communion meeting was held here at the Brethren's new meeting house on last Saturday, and preaching on Sabbath. We had a pleasant time and truly a feast of love together. But our ministering brethren were very much disappointed as they expected some of the eastern brethren to be there at that time on their way to A. M. who failed to get here. Our dear afflicted brother Andrew Hutchison from Monroe, Co. Va. was with us, and brethren Wm. Baily from Raleigh Co. W. Va. and brother Charles Masterson of Fayette. These were the brethren from a distance. Although brethren Hutchison and Baily were both very much afflicted they did the most of the speaking at the time of the communion and on Sunday. I for one can say it was good to be there for the Lord gave them strength and they preached the word with power. They spoke of that great evil which is so much followed and kept up, namely, pride. They told the people where it was leading them to. After preaching was over a very nice young man who never was at such a meeting before, said to a son of mine, "Charlie if I thought I had one drop of proud blood in me I would cut the vein and let it out, for that preacher said it is an abomination in the sight of God." He is a member of the Methodist order.

I would say to the brethren and sisters that there was a choice held at our meeting for two deacons, and the choice fell on two faithful brethren namely James Hutchison and Henry Johnson. Brethren and sisters pray for our dear young brethren that the Lord may enable them to discharge their duty as faithful followers of the blessed Savior, and the dear sisters that they may be true and faithful helpmates to their companions, and encourage them to discharge their duty with all fear and honesty, and that they may raise their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord and then when they come to the years of accountability, you will not have to shed bitter tears over them as some do who gave way to pride in days that are past and gone. In conclusion I must say something about my dear afflicted daughter in Arkansas. I received a letter from her a few days ago. She was very much afflicted and cast down from recent troubles, trials, and sickness in her family. She says "dear Mother, we are getting the dear Pilgrim to read. How thankful I am to you and the editor for sending it to me. Pay the editor and I will pay you." She says she has no preaching to go to, and being so much afflicted, the good PILGRIM is one of the greatest comforts to her in this world of sorrow.

She says they have suffered very much in that locality from the great floods recently.

Yes the PILGRIM is spreading its wings far and wide and is accomplishing much good, and all who can should subscribe and pay for it as soon as possible. Your unworthy sister,

NANCY CROUSE.

LOGANSVILLE, YORK CO. PA.

Dear Editor:—

Perhaps a little church news from this the Cedrus church, might not be amiss although we have nothing at present of great importance to give. At present we are getting along in unity and occasionly one is made willing to leave the weary of sin and tread upon the pathway of Jesus. Those that gladly recieve his word are willing to be baptized. A short time ago a young girl of about seventeen came out from among the world and took upon her the yoke of Jesus and is now numbered among the sisters in the church.

On the 31st day of May we had Meeting at Bupps Union. The day was beautiful and a goodly number of precious souls came to hear the Gospel sound. When meeting closed and we were on our way home, we saw a man coming in great haste in search of us, and requested that we should come and baptize a young man whose health is very ill and now wishes to be baptized without delay. Bro. Gray told the man we would attend to it, whereupon he thanked us very much and went on his way. We stopped with a brother for dinner and then started to where the young man was a distance of seven or eight miles.

We asked him why he sent for us. He told us that he wished to lead a better life and that he had some trouble for some time. After prayer was done, we started for water, a distance of about two miles, with about a dozen who had gathered at the house. When we came to the water we met a great crowd. We selected a suiatble spot when brother Thomas Gray addressed the multitude and a hymn was sung when mention was made by the brethren to kneel down with the applicant, the whole multitude kneeled.

Bro. Gray went down with the applicant into the water and baptized him in the presence of many witnesses. I never saw more fear and respect from the multitude upon such a scene as this. May the Lord add his blessing and grant that many may be saved.

CHRISTIAN NESS.

Dear Pilgrim :—

Being alone this afternoon, I thought I would write a little for the Pilgrim. We in this arm of the church number about twenty members with one speaker. We are a branch of the Johnathan's Creek church in Perry Co. We are in Muskinguon Co. near Roseville. We have a house for worship about 2½ miles north of Roseville and have preaching every two weeks. Have never held any lovefeast in our house but we fondly hope if the Lord will that we can arrange matters so that we can hold one this fall. Our house is about ¾ of a mile from the Dellcorbo Coal station on the C. M. V.R.W. All trains stop at this station to take passengers except the mail. There is another house in Perry Co. about twenty miles from ours. No ministers nearer than fifteen miles, so you see that we do not have as much preaching as we should. We tried to have a series of meetings last winter but failed on account of ministerial aid. Will not some of the brethren in passing by stop off with us and see how we do? We are surrounded by every other denomination but we think if we had more preaching that the church would build up here. Brethren pray for us that we may hold out faithful until Jesus comes to make up his jewels, that we may be among that happy number that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

Who Printed the First Bible?

Many of our young readers, and perhaps old ones too, have no doubt often read the Bible without ever knowing or even thinking who printed the first one, we therefore give the following from St. Nicholas, hoping that it may be of general interest.

IN the year 1420 there was living in the city of Haarlem an old gentleman, who kept the keys of the cathedral, and who used, after dinner, to walk in the famous wood that up to this time is growing just without the city walls. One day, while walking there, he found a very smooth bit of beech bark, on which—as he was a handy man with his knife—he cut several letters so plainly and neatly that after his return home he stamped them upon paper, and gave the paper to his boy as a "copy." After this, seeing that the thing had been neatly done, the old gentleman—whose name was Lawrence Coster—fell to thinking of what might be done with such letters cut in wood. By blackening them with ink, he made stamps upon paper; and by dint of much thinking and much working, he came, in time, to the stamping of whole broadsides of letters—which was really printing.

But before he succeeded in doing this well, he had found it necessary to try many experiments, and to take into his employ several apprentices. He did his work very secretly, and enjoined upon his apprentices to say nothing of the trials he was making. But a dishonest one among them, after a time, ran off from Holland into Germany, carrying with him a great many of the old gentlemen's wooden blocks, and entire pages of a book which he was about to print.

This is the story that is told by an old Dutch writer, who was president of Haarlem College, and who printed his account a hundred and fifty year after Lawrence was robbed. He says he had the story from the lips of most respectable old citizens, who heard it from their fathers; and, furthermore, he says that he had a teacher in his young days, who had known, long before, an old servant of Lawrence Coster's, and this servant would burst into tears whenever he spoke of the way in which his poor master was robbed and so lost the credit of his discovery.

The Dutch writers credit this story, and hint that the runaway apprentice was John Faust, or John Guttenberg; but the Germans justly say there is no proof of this. It is certain, however, that there was a Lawrence (Custos, of the cathedral) who busied himself with stamping letters and engraving. His statute is on the marketplace in Haarlem, and his rough-looking books are, some of them, now in the "State House" of Haarlem. They are dingy, and printed with bad ink, and seem to have been struck from large engraved blocks, and not from movable types. They are without any date, but antiquarians assign them to a period somewhat earlier than any book of Faust, or of Gutenberg, who are commonly called the discoverers of printing.

John Gutenberg; at the very time when this old Dutchman was experimenting with his blocks in Holland, was working in his way, very secretly, in a house that was standing not many years ago in the ancient city of Strasburg. He had two working partners, who were bound by oath not to reveal the secret of the arts he was engaged upon. But one of these partners died; and, upon this, his heirs claimed a right to know the secrets of Gutenberg. Gutenberg refused, and there was a trial of the case, some account of which was discovered more than three hundred years afterward in an old tower of Strasburg.

This trial took place in the year 1439. Gutenberg was not forced to betray his secret; but it did appear, from the testimony of the witnesses, that he was occupied with some way of making books (or manuscripts) cheaper than they had ever been made before.

But Gutenberg was getting on so poorly at Strasburg, and lost so much money in his experiments, that he went away to Mayence, which is a German city, farther down the Rhine. He there formed a partnership with a rich silversmith, named John Faust, who took an oath of secrecy, and supplied him with money, on condition that after a certain time, it should be repaid to him.

Then Gutenberg set to work in earnest. Some accounts say he had a brother who assisted him; and the Dutch writers think this brother may have been the robber of poor Lawrence Coster. But there is no proof of it; and it is too late to find any proof now. There was certainly a Peter Schoffer, a scribe, or designer, who worked for Gutenberg, and who finished up his first books by drawing lines around the pages and making ornamental initial letters, and filling up gaps in the printing. This Schoffer was a shrewd fellow, and watched Gutenberg very closely. He used to talk over what he saw and what he thought with Faust. He told Faust he could contrive better types than Gutenberg was using; and, acting on his hints, Faust, who was a skillful worker in metals, run types in a mould. This promised so well that Faust determined to get rid of Gutenberg, and to carry on the business with Schoffer,—to whom he gave his only daughter Christine, for a wife.

Faust called on Gutenberg for his loan, which Gutenberg couldn't pay, and in consequence he had to give up to Faust all his tools, his presses, and his unfinished work, among which was a Bible, nearly two-thirds completed. This, Faust and Schoffer hurried through, and sold as a manuscript.

There are two copies in the National Library at paris; one copy at the Royal Library at Munich, and one at Vienna. It is not what is commonly known as the Mayence Bible, but is of earlier date than that.

It is without name of printer or publisher, and without date. It is in two great volumes folio, of about 660 pages a volume. You very likely could not read a word of it if you were to see it; for it is in Latin and in black, Gothic tpye, with so many of the words abbreviated and packed together so closely as to puzzle the eye. Should you chance to own a copy (and you probably never will), you could sell it for enough money to buy yourself a little library of about two thousand volumes.

It was certainly the first Bible printed from movable types; but poor Gutenberg got no money from it, though he had done most of the work upon it. But he did not grow disheartened. He toiled on, though he was without the help of Schoffer and of Faust, and in a few years succeeded in making books which were as good as those of his rivals. Before he died his name was attached to books printed as clearly and sharply as books are printed to-day.

Of course they are very proud of his memory in the old Rhine town of Mayence, where he labored; and they have erected a statute there to his memory—from a design by the great Danish sculptor, Thorwaldsen. On the site where he worked there is now a clubhouse, and the gentlemen of the clubhouse have erected another little statute to Gutenberg in the inner court of their building.

But Strasburg is as proud of him as Mayence; for, in Strasburg, the burghers of that city say he studied out the plans which he afterward carried into execution at Mayence. So, in Strasburg, in 1840, they erected another statute to his memory, by David, a French sculptor. It is of bronze, and is one of the imposing sights of the city,—an honor to the great father of the art of printing. A photograph of it, taken last summer, has enabled the artists of St. Nicholas to give you the effective frontispiece which graces the present number of your magazine.

When you go to Strasburg don't forget the cathedral, which is big enough to take a New York steeple under its roof. Don't forget the clock, which is as large as an ordinary house. Don't forget your dinner (with a pate de foie gras); and don't forget the statute of Gutenberg on the Gutenberg Platz.

LITERATURE.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF CHARLES SUMNER.—His Boyhood, Education and Public career, by Elias Nason. (Philadelphia, Quaker City Publishing house.) Sold only by subscription. Agents wanted.

When many men who made much greater efforts for popularity shall have been entirely forgotten, the virtues of Charles Sumner will brighten as the years roll on, his labors be still more and more appreciated, and his memory be cherished as one of America's greatest Statesmen, and eloquent defender of human freedom; and it is but fitting that such a memoir, of so great a man, should be in every family in the land where it could be read and serve as an incentive to the rising youth to greater efforts for advancement. No book of late years is destined to be in such general demand.

No Periodical for the young has met such signal success, and none so richly deserves it as Scribner's St. Nicholas. The July number will, in addition to its former excellence embody all that is left of the delightful "Children's Hours." Scribner's Magazine is to older minds what St. Nicholas is for the young; both deserve the highest commendation. (Scribner & Co.)

The June number of Old and New completes the ninth volume, and well maintains the character of the magazine. Dr. Leonard Bacon of New Haven has a short, bold paper on the uses and abuses of political parties. Mr. Hale's introduction discusses our currency. Dr. Martineau begins to discuss the Protestant claims of church authority in contrast with the Roman ones which he has been discussing with so much vigor. There is a delightful sketch of country life in France which will be read with interest. Old and new is always bright and interesting. (Roberts Brothers, Boston.)

A few weeks ago we called the attention of our readers to the Great Western Monthly, a new magazine then started at Philadelphia, Pa. We have since received the numbers as far as issued, and are glad to be able to say that we are pleased with the work and trust it may meet with abundant success. We are pleased to see the manifest ability with which it is edited and conducted. It promises to be valuable to the farmer and embrace within its scope everything that will be of interest and value to those engaged in that important calling, and apply all scientific truths to man's every day wants. It aims to be thoroughly practicable, and maintains itself admirably.—Great Western Publishing Co., 302 Walnut street Philadelphia.—$3.00 per year, 30 cents per number.

Hurd and Houghton will shortly publish a new edition of the "poems of Celia Thaxter," which will contain so many new poems that it will virtually be a new book. Her verses are much admired. They are full of the music of the sea, beside which she has always had her home.

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH for June closes the second year of this excellent magazine. Among its contents are: Importance of Pure Water in its Relation to Health: Condiments a cause of disease; Hurry and Worry; Death of Charles Sumner; "Salute no man by the way;" Disease and its treatment; Popular Physiology, illustrated; The Life and Habits of English and American Women compared; Best food for Babes and Adults; Culture of Berries, with Recipes for using; Death in the Barnyard; Where Will You Summer? Complete List of Hygienic Water-Cures in America, with much more useful information. As a new volume of this Independent Magazine begins with the next number, now is the time to subscribe. Only $2 a year, $1 for half a year, or 20 cents a number. Address S. R. Wells, Publisher, 389, Broadway, New York.

THE PHRENOLGICAL JOURNAL for June is an admirable number, and closes the 58th Vol. of that standard monthly. It contains Dr. Dio Lewis with a fine portrait; A parable of the Kingdom, or a new rendering of the book of Job; The late Jacob Knapp, Revivalist preacher; John and James, How they kept house; Miss Caroline Brooks, the Western Artist; Bella French, the Poet and publisher, A Sunday Evening in Water Street, or What a Visitor Saw and Heard; Dudley W. Adams, Master of the National Grange, with Portrait, and a sketch of the Grange Movement; The Teetotal Muddlement; Our Opportunities; Plant Life in Our Territories; Emil Lowinstein, the Handsome Murderer, etc. Full of spice of the healthful sort. 30 cents a number. $3.00 a year. $1.50 for half a year. Address S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway New York.

A WRONG CUSTOM CORRECTED.

It is quite generally the custom to take strong liver stimulants for the cure of liver complaint, and both the mineral and vegetable kingdoms have been diligently searched to procure the most drastic and poisonous purgatives, in order to produce a powerful effect upon the liver, and arouse the lagging and enfeebled organ. This system of treatment is on the same principle as giving a weak and debilitated man a large portion of brandy to enable him to do a certain amount of work. When the stimulant is withheld, the organ like the system, gradually relapses into a more torpid or sluggish and weakened condition than before. What then is wanted? Medicines, that while they cause the bile to flow freely from the liver, as that organ is toned into action, will not overwork and thus debilitate it, but will, when their use is discontinued, leave the liver strengthened and healthy.

DR. R. V. PIERCE.

Dear Sir.—Your treatment in my case has been quite successful and satisfactory, and for which I desire to express my gratitude. I have been troubled with a disordered Liver and Catarrh and general weakness for a good many years and was failing slowly all the time, and last august I called on you and got some of your Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and one of your Nasal Injectors, and since that time I have been improving and am now better than I have been in years, not having had the sick headache in months which I used to have to average once a week, the Golden Medical Discovery being the only medicine used. It has worked wonders in my case, and I recommend it to all similarly afflicted. Let me express my gratitude to you for such invaluable services.

Truly and gratefully yours,
WM. F. CRITTEFDEN.

VOL. 5. HUNTINGDON, PA., JUNE, 16, 1874. NO. 24

ANNUAL MEETING.

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting, held in Macoupin County, Illinois, on May 26 and 27, 1874.

On Tuesday morning May 26th, 1874, the Annual Council of German Baptist commenced.

At 8½ o'clock the Council was called to order, H. D. Davy occupying the chair.

1. We will introduce our devotional exercises by the use of the 23rd hymn. We will line it and sing as we line it.

I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode.

The hymn was then sung.

The hymn which we have just sung is the metrical expression of one of the Psalms of David. The sentiments we have just used were the feelings of the ancient Jews in regard to the service of God under the old Jewish dispensation. It expresses the attachment of the devout and devoted David to the service of God, to the kingdom of God, to the house of God, and to the worship of God. Paul in one of his epistles contrasts the Christian dispensation with the Jewish, and shows that whatever advantages the Jews possessed, whatever advantages were connected with the old dispensation, superior advantages were connected with the Christian dispensation. This being the case, if the ancient Jew had an attachment so strong as that expressed by the hymn, we, as Christians, ought to have a still stronger attachment to the church of Christ. I hope that the hymn expresses our feelings this morning. If time permitted we might draw a contrast of the scene witnessed when the Jews went up to Jerusalem, making long and fatigaing journeys to the temple of God in Jerusalem, and the scene presented to us here this morning. As the Jews journeyed from afar to the temple, so we have come together here this morning to meet each other and labor together in promotion of the interests of our Christian fraternity, of our common brotherhood and for the glory of God. I hope that our great concern is that the simplicity and the purity and the holiness of the church may be sustained at every sacrifice, at every cost. That the true interests of the church may be promoted at this Annual Meetiog, and that we may be prepared for our deliberations here. We will now turn our attention to the Lord in prayer. I hope that we all feel a stronger attachment to the church of God under this Christian dispensation than the ancient Jews felt, and now let every brother and sister who feels that attachment pray. Then God come to our assistance, for the furthering of his glory and the good of his church. Let us pray.

Bro. 1. then led in prayer. Bro. 2. then repeated the Lord's prayer.

3. I will announce to this assembly the organization of the standing Committee for this year. We have appointed brother Henry Davy as our Moderator and foreman. Brother James Quinter as our Clerk and Secretary and brother D. P. Sayler as Reading Clerk. We hope that proper regard will be paid to the authority which we have committed to brother Davy, for unless due and proper order be observed, the enjoyment of many of our brethren must be very limited.

4. Our order in regard to our opening exercises requires that the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles be read. I will now read that chapter.

The chapter was then read.

2. I wish to say to the audience of the brethren and sisters, with the spectators, that for a day or two passed we have been in the habit of talking a little too much. We expect that now to be stopped. Brother John Metzgar and brother David Frantz are appoints to assist me in this matter. If there is any talking in the tent, it will be stopped, and we expect the order will be obeyed; but if not, then the persons talking will be told there is room for them to talk outside the tent.

We have come here to try to follow the example of the Apostles and Elders of the early church. Matters were presented to their minds in which they could not all see alike. So they went up to Jerusalem to discuss these matters, to talk them over and see whether they could not come to some satisfactory settlement of them. They were not all agreed at first about the matters they had come to discuss. So matters may come up here upon which we shall some of us differ, but let the interchange of minds and ideas be with kind words which shall show our love to God and our love for one another. I hope there is not one brother that has come up here to this Yearly Meeting with the determination, "I will have my own way," but I hope that we have all come up here to talk together as brethren in the Lord, and bear with one another, so that we may all "be of the same mind and speak the same things." I want to say to the brethren that there will be a little deviation on our part from the general order in presenting the first query to the meeting. The circumstances that we are placed under seem to demand that we take up the first query that has something to do with the work of the officers of this meeting, although the query does not regularly come first, we have a query in regard to a report of the meeting. We will take up that query first. All those who know themselves to be in possession of queries bearing on the same point, when the query is read, will search out that query which they have in possession and present it here, that all queries bearing on this point may be read and acted upon together.—Pay attention now to the query.

Query No. 1. As the answer to Art. 6, Annual Meeting 1873, allows only the publishing of a "Synopsis of the reasons given a basis for decision, but no names of speakers," will not the Annual Meeting allow the publishing of a full report of the proceedings of the Annual Meting together with the names of the speakers?

Answer. This District Meeting respectfully requests the Annual Meeting to grant full report as prayed for.

Answer:

2. The query with its answer is before you. What do you say, brethren?

5. I for one object to the answer to this query. I want it understood that I object to it. I think it will have a bad tendency. It is something new and I object to it. It is one of the fast things that is creeping into the Church. I think it would be well to nip it in the bud. I want it understood that I object to it, brethren.

6. I have a word to say on that. We have got enough encyclopedias We don't want any more. We have enough matters on record, and perhaps there are some things that if they were not already on record, we would never put on record, and we would be glad if they were not on record to-day. This way of taking a full report of all that is said is a change from the ancient customs, and some of the brethren are like the laws of the Medes and Persians which "altereth not" They do not like to change when there is no good reason for a change. What advantage I want to know, is it going to be to have every short speech, begun perhaps in the middle and worked out to either end, reported in full and sent out to the brotherhood and to the world? The Church will not be edified by such a report. Brethren, we are drifting into the wake of the world. We are far enough gone in that direction already. I say let us stop now, right where we are.

7. I would ask the Clerk to read that query again. Some of us here did not hear it when he read it. I would like to have it read again.

The Clerk read the query again and also read the following query on the same subject:

Query No. 2. What shall be done with brethren who will continue to report the Proceedings of the Annual Meeting and publish them to to the world contrary to the advice and wishes of the brethren at the Annual meeting in Virginia a few years ago, when it was first attempted?

We the Brethren of the Southern District of Ohio, do ask of the Yearly meeting or Conference, to reconsider the query of last year's meeting in regard to publishing the speeches of the meeting, and put an end to publishing any report more than the queries and answers to the same.

2. Take notice, brethren, if you bear any papers on the subject, now is the time to present them. They may not be in order by and by.

8. For my part, I cannot see what use there is of having the names of the speakers reported. If the brethren cannot give us some idea of the reason why the names of the brethren who speak must be reported with their speeches, I for one am opposed to having the names reported. I do not see any good reason why the names should be reported. If I look with my old brethren, it is forty-seven years ago since I was at the first Annual meeting, and when I see the new things that have been introduced since that time, I am afraid they do no good. What is the use of making changes, and daparting from the old customs if our changes do no good? If the changes do no good let things be as they were, and let us not make changes till there is some good reason why it will do good to have the names reported. Let the brethren tell us the reason why it will do good; but if they do not tell us a reason I am opposed to a change. Leave things as they were.

5. We have embodied in the two papers, all that is necessary, for and against making a full report, plainly stated. Hence I would be willing to coosider the two papers in which the reasons pro and against are plainly stated, and I think the presentation of more papers on the subject unnecessary. it is not necessary to go any farther for more papers on the subject. One is in favor and one is opposed to a full report. That is all we need.

9. It has been called for to know what is the advantages of having the names of the brethren making arguments attached to the report of the arguments they make. I will give you a few ideas of the benefit of having the names of the speakers given with the report of what they say. Bro. 8, spoke of the times forty years ago, and of the Annual meetings held then and the changes that have taken place since. Let me remind him that at that time, he did not see so many faces at the Annual meeting as he now sees. The large number of people assembled at this Annual meeting and at our recent Annual meetings shows the increase in our Brotherhood in the last forty-seven years. The large numbers of people attending our yearly meetiogs are becoming an inconvenience and a hindrance to the transactioo of business which comes before the meeting. Therefore we are trying to lessen the crowds at our Annual Meeting. Hence, in order to accomplish the result and thereby also lessen the the burden upon the brethren where the meeting is held, we thought it proper to have a reporter at our Annual meeting, who should make a full and complete report of all the proceedings—all that is said and done. This report will be sent to the brethren throughout the brotherhood, who will, by these means get as good an idea of the meeting as though they had been present, and great benefit will be derived by the general brotherhood, and the burden and inconvenience of these large crowds will be avoided. To get a good idea of the meeting, so that it will be almost as satisfactory as though the brother had been present himself, it is necessary to have, not only the queries read and answered, and the speeches made but also the name of the speakers. For my own part I will give you the reason why I want the name of the person making an argument as well as the argument he makes. When I read the argument and and also the name of the person making it, I get the person somehow before me and I seem to hear him make the argument. It is just the same to me as though I heard him myself. But if I do not get the name of the person making the argument, I never get the full benefit of the argument. I like when I am at a meeting to see the brother who is speaking, and when I read a report of a meeting I like to know who it is that made the speech which I read; especially when I know the person. When I know the brother making the argument, do I not derive more benefit from reading his argument? I think my brethren are like me, and they especially those who have not been able to come to this meeting, want as full a report as possible and with the names of the speakers so that when they read the report of their meeting, they will know what was said and who said it, just as well as though they had been here themselves. But more than this; I cannot see any harm in having the names of the speakers given with what they say. I suppose no one will say that any brother makes an argument to increase his fame,—to be heard and spread abroad. I do not think that any brother speaks for that purpose. Probably if we were making arguments to be heard and spread abroad for fame, the publishing of the names of the speakers might have some tendency to encourage a wrong feeling and to run into a wrong channel. But I do not apprehend any trouble of that kind. When we come together as children of God, and as brethren, to compare ideas with one another for the good of the Church and the furthering of the glory of God, I do not think there is any danger of our running into that popular idea of having our arguments reported to spread abroad our own fame. Our Annual Meetings are held openly in the place where we assemble. The public is invited to attend and listen to our deliberations. We do nothing in secret. Of course all who are present know who speaks and what is said. We are not afraid to have the world know. Now what is the difference if in our report we let our brethren at home know as well as our brethren who are present, the names of those who make arguments on the subject presented here as well as the arguments. Unless we bring our meetings into smaller compass and have the sessions in private where only members of the council are present, I do not see any difference in having the full report of the proceedings published including the names of the speakers, and so long as it would be a pleasure to our brethren who have not the privilege of being here, to have a full report. I say let us have such a report.

6. We have had one decision on this query. Let it be as it was last year. Let us have simply the queries and the answers, with the reasons for the answers and the Scripture to support them. That is all we need and all the brethren want. That is all there is any occasion for. The brother who will get such a report will soon discern whether the answer is in accordance with the query, and then turning to the Scripture he can soon tell whether it is in accordance with the word of God or not. Therefore what I have to say about it brethren, is this: Don't do it.

10. In 1821 I was at the Yearly Meeting. Those old brethren whom I met there are all gone now. I see none of them here. They are all gone but they laid down one word which I shall never forget. We are departing from the simplicity which the church had in those early days, and it may come to that when we can hardly say with the apostle Paul that we have the power but that it does not edify. Brother S. spoke my sentiments. I understand that the report will be published in pamphlet form when it goes forth. I think there is money in the publishing of that report. We should see about that. For my part, in answer to the statement that our meetings are public, and so the report should be as full as possible, I would say that our meetings should be closed and the world should not be admitted. People of the world don't come in from the outside to listen with any intention of becoming members. They come in and look on from mere curiosity, and often their talking disturbs the meeting. In former days, the minutes were kept among the brethren. That was the custom. Brethren here will remember it. I am opposed to the making of a full report with the names of the speakers given.

11. I have something to say in this matter for I feel myself concerned in it. I will try to give some reasons why, in my opinion, a full report of the proceedings here should be published. I claim the liberty of the Gospel, which has caused us to be a free people in Christ. Then I say if that is what we claim, let us not curtail from each other any advantages that we may derive from one another in our meetings. Those of our brethren who cannot come to our Annual Meetings want to hear what is said and done here, as well as we who are able to come and enjoy the meeting. Then if we are all free in Christ, let us not deny them the privilege by refusing to have a full and complete report made. I claim as a citizen of the country the liberty and freedom of the press, and I say in addition to what brother D. has said, that as long as we hold our Conferences open to the world, there is no just reason why we should not give to our brethren at home a full report of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting. That is one reason. Another reason is one which I derive from the circumstances under which I was placed last year—circumstances which may correspond with those of many of my brethren. Last year I was sick and could not attend the Yearly Meeting, though it was held in the State where I reside. When the report came, I got that report and read it again and again, and I was gratified to find out the name of the brother who spoke such and such things. It was a satisfaction to me beyond anything I had ever got from the Annual Meeting before that time when I had staid at home. I never had so much satisfaction as in reading the documents which came from the Annual Meeting when I was not able to be there. Moreover it is a great advantage that we may have an account of the meeting in case disputes should arise as to what was said or done or decided at the meeting. A full report would settle all disputes of that kind, for any of the brethren could turn at once to his report and learn for himself just what was said and done and decided. Again, our brethren are not all able to be at these meetings, and it would make these meetings too large if all should come and take part. So they send us to represent them in the meeting. Now, if there has been any failure on our part to correctly represent them, they can turn to the report and see it, and if we fail to carry home a correct report of the decisions of the meeting, they can turn to the report and see that also. Nobody has shown any disadvantages arising from the report of last year. We have not been shown any evil results coming from it. What harm has it done? So long as we can hold these reasons and maintain them, we claim we have a right to a full report. We believe the brotherhood generally want and expect it, and we have no right to disappoint them.

12. I will give some reasons for having these proceedings printed. Our congregations at home want to know just as well as the brethren and sisters here who are here at this meeting what is done here. We ourselves will want to see what was done here. I for one will want to see the report to call my mind to what was done in the meeting. Besides some of the brethren and sisters here to-day are back in the congregation and cannot hear all that is said. They will want the full report. Some are right up close to the speakers, and now when we go home, some difference in sentiment may arise as to what was done here. Now if we have a full report, we can just refer to it and then the matter is settled and no difference in opinion as to what was done here can any longer exist for we have the exact report. If the names of the speakers are given in the report, the brethren at home who have sent us here to represent them can look and see whether we have been true to our trust or not. I believe that the publication of a full and complete report would do no harm, and would save thousands of dollars every year. There are very many brethren from parts of the country far distant from the place where the Yearly Meeting is held, who now are at great expense to come to the Yearly Meeting, who would not come if they were sure they could get a full, complete and perfect report of the meeting, which they could read over at their leisure at home. Our assembly here then would be reduced in size, and business would be easier to transact in consequence of the reduced size, and a burden would be taken off from the brethren entertaining the meeting.

We ought to have respect for the old brethren, yet there should be good reasons given for any action taken by the church. I have heard no argument advanced yet, why no full report should be given, except that it is a change from the former custom. Well, there may be good reasons for a change. There may be sound arguments in favor of it, and we ought to heed these reasons and give attention to these arguments. I have one argument in favor of a full report. Some of us are poor and can't afford to leave our homes to come to Yearly meeting. Some of us have work on hand which we cannot leave. During the twelve or thirteen years that I have been in the church, this is the first Annual meeting that I ever attended. Now, it is not enough merely to get the query and the answer. We want the full report so that we may know the arguments on either side just as though we had been at the meeting and heard them. Though we may be poor and unable to attend but few Yearly Meetings, we have our own ideas about church government, and many or some of those ideas may be erroneous; and if we never hear the arguments on the opposite side, we will always remain in error. I hope we will have a full report.

5. The grand object of the Annual Meeting is to guard them against everything which conflicts with the ancient order of the church. That is the object of the meeting. I want the brethren to note that; that this is the object of the Annual Meeting. Now, then, I contend that this is a new movement and a fast movement. I am afraid that it is one of the fast movements that are so rapidly creeping into the church and changing our old customs. I am under the impression that I am under the influence of the Holy Spirit, when I stand up for the ancient order of the church, and oppose all new and fast movements. Then away with the new order of things! Away with it I say! I am afraid there is too much wealth in the church. I am afraid there is too much pride and selfishness in the church. I am opposed to this new movement, that is now proposed here. Let us be satisfied, brethren, with the ancient order of things. I contend that the church is far from the purity and simplicity of the church forty or fifty years back. Instead of improving the church by your new movements, you are only damaging it. Away with your new movements!

13. The Scriptures that were read this morning in the opening of the meeting, from the Acts of the Apostles, tells us in the first verse that certain questions came up in the early apostol church. They therefore called a council and all the apostles went up to Jerusalem to it.

So you see that it tells us, not only the conclusion which they came to, but also what they said. The chapter tells what the questions were which were discussed, and who spoke, giving us the names of the speakers and what they said. We read that Peter and Paul and Barnabas and James spoke, and we were told what they said. It tells us what Peter said. It tells us what James said, and Paul and Barnabas we were told declared what miracles God had wrought by them among the Gentiles. We read their account with joy. We are glad that we have so full a report of that early council of the church. Now we see that we have a gospel example and if we desire to satisfy our friends at home, it will give them great satisfaction to have a full and complete report of the Annual Meeting. Of course, it was the Holy Spirit that moved the apostles to speak and write and give us an example for this very purpose which we are now considering. We have the example of our older brethren, and we have the desire of younger brethren. The church wants a full report of our Yearly Meeting. The church demands it. Thirty six congregations in my district said distinctly before I came up here, that they wanted a full report. I am very anxious that these congregations and the many others who are expecting a full report, be not disappointed. I am very anxious that they have the privilege of reading at home a full report of this meeting. I have generally been blessed with the opportunity of going to the Yearly Meetings, but I want my brethren and sisters at home to have a full report, so that they may know as well as I, what is said and what is done here. As for the example of the church in the past,—our brother goes back forty years. I go back 1800 years. The apostles spoke in a church council 1800 years ago, and it was put on record by authority, what they said. If the brethren who opposes a full report can bring anything more ancient or better than that example which I have read from the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Aposles, I would like to see it.

2. I must cut off farther discussion. There has been a good deal said already.

5. I want to say in reply to the remarks that have been made by the brother—

2. You must be very brief. There has been enough said already and I will soon put the question

5. In reply to our brother's remarks, I would observe that we have not an apostle in this house to-day. No, no, not an apostle. Those Christians made mention in the scriptures, where the apostles of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Hence, I contend that we are all bound to observe the advice given by the holy apostles. Hence it is necesary that the apostles should be heard upon those subjects, and what they said is recorded for our instruction; but, brethren and sisters, let us confine our selves to the holy Scriptures, and to the gospel of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Let us abide by their instructions. Now show me the place in the word of God, where Christ or the apostles has authorized the church to give a report of the proceedings of the conference meetings. If you can do it,—if you can show me a single place in the New Testament where Christ or his apostles authorized the church to give a report of its conference meeting, I will yield the point at once and not say another word against the giving of a full report; but I will never yield the point till you show me some such a passage in the word of God, directly authorizing a full report. Brethren I want it understood that I am opposed to a full report.

11. One argument in favor of a full report is this. We send our representative to the Annual Meeting to represent us there. We send one member of the Standing Committee and one delegate. Now if we have a full report of what is said at the Annual Meetiog and who said it, if our representatives make an argument on any subject that may come up, we will have a chance at home to examine and see whether they have been trustworthy or not. It seems to me that this is an important reason for having a full report. We who stay at home ought to have the privilege of examining what our representatives at the Annual Meeting have said and done. Now in answer to brother 5, whom I respect in the Lord: He has said that there is no apostle here at this Annual Meeting. That is true, but we trust that the way to Christ is here represented. More than this, there are some names mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, in the chapter which was read in our hearing this morning, at the opening of the meeting which are not names of apostles. There were some brethren spoke there who were not apostles. Hence it follows that we have a precedent for a report mentioning names and what is said. That is what we claim, —a precedent from the book of our testimony. Our grounds are therefore rigrt and allowable.

14. We have had a report of the Council Meeting which has been in very close harmony with the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. Last year a few names were given and a few of the brethren's argumeots given. This is called a synopsis as taken from the Annual Meeting, and that means as I understand it, to give only that part of the discussion that is edifying. That is in harmony with the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. No one supposes that what we read in the 15th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles is all that was said at that council. Now I will give you the language in which the proceedings of that council are recorded.

Now, if our brethren will tell us, as Paul and Barnabas did, what God done at their hands, I am willing that their names should go down in the report. But if they don't tell us what God has done at their hands, I don't see any Scriptural authority for putting their names in the report. To depart from prededents I regard as rather unsafe. Hence I feel disposed to adhere to the style of report which was adopted at the Annual Meeting last year. If a report be made at all, let only the substance of the arguments be given and not the exact words and the names of the brethren making the arguments. This matter of disputing all questions, and of recording all disputations, is not edifying to the brethren or to the world. It is because it is not edifying that I am opposed to it. I am inclined to think that if we attach importance to the decision simply because there is attached to it the name of a man in whom we have confidence, perhaps we have more confidence in the name of the man making the arguments than we have in the arguments, and therefore we are unprepared to judge the arguments impartially. We all know that a great name is a strong tower. Very often where we see a great name attached to a remark we regard the name and do not question the truthfulness of the remark. Another reason that has been given why we should have a full report is, that we are sent here as delegates, and our constituents desires to know what we do here. This argument is, of course, the only one that has any weight on my mind. Our constituents, of course, have a right to know what we do, if they desire it. They have a right to know what we say, and they have a right know what we do. They have a right to know how we conduct ourslves,—whether we behave as Christians or not. They have as good right to know what our conduct is outside of the council as they have to know what our words are inside the council. Then, in order to furnish our constituents all the knowledge which they have a right to demand, we had better enlarge the duties of our reporter, and make our report tell not only what we say but what we do outside the council, whether we conduct ourselves with becoming sobriety. I think there is no necessity for this. If we do not conduct ourselves properly, and as becometh Christians, we are in the presence of our brethren. They would at once notice any departure from the sobreity and becoming behavior which we ought to manifest. I could not do any thing very wrong here and my brethren not know it. Many know me here, many have met me since this meeting commenced and called me brother John whom I could not recognize. They had seen me before at Annual Meeting, but I could not tell that I had ever met them before. I asked them how they knew me, and they say that they saw me at such and such a time, at such and such a meeting. Now, if I misbehave, all these my brethren will know it. My brethren here have a charge over me. I feel that they have a charge over me for my conduct and my language. If I utter any improper language, or if I am guilty of any improper conduct, I will be justly reported to my congregation at home and be held strictly to account for the improper sentiment, or for the improper action.

Secondly, I see no propriety in having my name to go upon the report as a speaker on this occasion. I see no advantage to be gained, except a little popularity for myself and that I do not seek for. We ought none of us to desire or seek for the honor that comes from men, and I see no other advantage to be derived from having our names go on the report of the meeting.

15. In the first place I would say that I am in favor of having a full report of the meeting published for the benefit of those who cannot attend this meeting. In the second place, I want the Annual Meeting to have a full report for its own sake, for use as a book of reference. In the third place, in regard to the publication of the name, I have a book called the New Testament, and in it is an epistle called the Epistle to the Hebrews. It is called Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews. We don't find Paul's name in the epistle. It is the Epistle of Paul to the Hebrews, yet Timothy wrote it. There we have an example for us. I do not see any need of having our names go in the report.

4. In regard to the publication of the report of this meeting, it is useless to talk about not giving a full report, for last year the privilege was given and a partial report published. In consequence of that, the general brotherhood are looking this year for a full report. They fully expect it. Thousands of brethren are at home in the State of Maryland, who have staid at home with the expectation that a full report would be published, and they would be able to get a complete account of the meeting. Only two brethren are here from my district. The rest are at home waiting for a report. If you refuse to furnish a full report of this meeting, you will convulse the whole brotherhood. You cannot refuse. The demand for it is too strong. You cannot withstand this desire which is universal among the brotherhood for a full report. The current is too mighty. There is no alternate. You must give a full report. There should be no question about it. In reference to the names being affixed to the argument as reported, I have this to say: If brother 14's speech goes upon record, I demand that there be something to show who is responsible for it, so that the brethren in Maryland shall not say that brother 4 or brother 9 said so and so. It shall be known who said what brother Nead said, and who said what brother Rittenhouse said, and who said what brother Hanawalt said, and who said what brother Sayler said. I will say further to the writers in our periodicals, to those who do not sign their names to what they write, that I am not the only one who does not read their writing. They had about as well stop writing. Nobody wants to read that which nobody is responsible for. It is useless to continue this argument any longer. We have taken a vote on it in the Standing Committee and the brethren well know how it stands. The idea that some brethren have that they are at liberty to advance their ideas, but when other brethren reply to them the only response to their argument is simply "I am opposed to it!" Away with this spirit of running the meeting and ruling over God's heritage! Let all the arguments be published and then let the whole congregation judge of the merit of the argument. But there is no need of further discussion of this subject. It is known that the mass of the brotherhood demands the publication of a full report of this meeting, and we have no other way to do, but to give it to them. You all know that I am one who opposed a full report till I could stand against it no longer. Besides it is inconsistent not to publish our report. When we have opened our place of meetiog wide to the whole world and published railroad arrangments, and bring other influences to bear to bring men and women to the Annual Council, and then withhold the report from our brethren we are inconsistent. I move that the answer to the first query be passed

16. I have a word or two to say on this subject. We should be on our guard. It is our duty to be watchful. We must notice where we are drifting to and correct a bad tendency, where we find one. Simply because a majority in the church is drifting off in a certain way, it does not show that we should go in that way. It may be our duty to go in a different way. Do we suppose that it is right to publish all the disputes that are brought up here? Do we suppose that it is best to do so? We might just as well hold all our church meetings with open doors and bring all our troubles before the world. This would do no good, but would do much harm. Unbelievers do not come to our meetings for any good. They come simply from a spirit of curiosity. They do not come with any intention o joining us, but merely to look on. It would be a hindrance to have all our disputes published. We should not always obey the majority. Look at the Church of Rome. It was planted by the apostles, but when a majority of the Church became implicated with the things of this world, then the majority ruled and the Church was apostatized.

17. Some of the brethren have called our attention to the Scriptures. They brought up Peter as an authority, but I read in my Bible that when Paul found him out of the way, Paul called him to an account.

18. A brother has said that there is no apostle in this house. In reply to brother Nead, I would say, that if we have not an apostle in this house, we have the example of an apostle, and that example is put on record for our instruction, and it was reported with that intent. We have the example of an apostle, and hence there can be nothing wrong in giving a report, while by yielding to the expressed desire of the brethren for a report we will give joy alike to the rich and the poor amongst us I hope the brethren will not oppose a report.

(At this point a brother, speaking in German, wanted to know whether the reporter present understood German, and whether a speech spoken in German would be reported; and, if not, whether a German brother would not have to keep silence.)

2 I wish to say a few things. The brethren well know that when this question was first sprung, I said no. No report except queries and their answers. When the matter was presented again last year, I still said no. Last year I gave way so far as to have a partial report made in accordance with the desires of my brethren. I am satisfied that the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of the apostles we have not a full report of all that was said at that council at Jerusalem. We are not told all that was said on that occasion. But we have a partial report, and yet one so full as to give the expression of the apostles. Now I am opposed to giving a full report of this meeting with all the names of the brethren who speak attached to it for the following reasons. My arguments will go out from this meeting with my name attached, and the arguments of my brethren will go out with their names attached. Well, now some, when they read in the report something that suits them, will say, "That is my man," and others when they read something that suits them, will say, "That is my man." One will say, "Bro. Wise speaks my views," and and another, "Brother Long or brother Sayler speaks my views." I see danger here. That is why I am opposed to the giving of the names of the speakers in the report. I am afraid some pride is growing amongst us. Keep down in the Valley brethren. We will now put the query upon its passage. The query that we put upon passage now is the first query read. The reason why we cannot join them both together is that the query asks for an extension of last year's privilege. We will now put the question.

5. I move that the answer to this query be tabled.

13. I propose an amendment, that we have the same as last year.

Our agents and friends will please remember that the Pilgrim from commencement of Report of A. M. to the end of the year will be only 80 cts. The Report is the most complete ever published and cannot fail to give satisfaction. This Report was gotten for the special benefit of our readers and will cost us heavily, so that we hope all who are interested in our welfare will make an effort to get us as many more new subscribers as possible. Favors of this kind will be greatly appreciated at this time.

Our Report.

Our report of Annual Conference is now before us, or rather the first part of it, and will be commenced in this issue. The first part contains the discussions relative to the reporting, and as our readers will see, we are not allowed to give the names of the speakers in connection with the report. We, for the sake of our readers, are sorry that our liberties have thus been restricted. But so it is, and we know that you will justify us in not violating the restrictions laid upon us. However, we promise this much, for the satisfaction of those who are especially desirous of learning the names of the speakers. We have made arrangements that at the time of the end, the wise shall understand. Of course, this bit of information need not concern those who do not care to know the names as it is not intended for them, and will be entirely disconnected with the report. The present report will be much more complete than that of last year, so that our readers who remained at home can congratulate themselves in knowing fully as much about the A. M. as those who were present.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Mendota Ill. May 24. 1874.

After a refreshing night's sleep we bid adieu to Kearney and turned our faces homeward bound. During the night there had been a rainfall sufficient to allay the dust and cool the air making our position and quarters extremely pleasant, the fact is we cannot tell how pleasantly one feels while being hurled along at the rate of 30 or 40 miles per hour over a beautiful prairie, breathing air as pure as that that fanned the fair brow of Mother Eve while sitting under the apple-tree admiring the ever tempting Hubbardston Nonsuch. Nothing short of a personal experience can give an approximate idea of the pleasure thus afforded. On passing over the Platte last evening, it was too dark to get a correct idea of its size, hence we gave it some attention this morning. The whole view, from shore to shore we were told is three miles wide, but it is divided into eight channels, the view proper would not be nearly so wide except during freshets when it gets at times, much wider. About a half mile below the road, on the east side of the river, we noticed a very beautiful grove and a few houses. There we were told was the notable Fort Kearney, an institution for which there is no need for now, as the "red skins" have yielded their claims for more prolific fields, in game we mean.

At Hastings we halted 30 minutes for breakfast, which, by the way, was first class as are all the boarding houses supplied by the Burlington R. R. Company. As we had passed along this route the day before and saw about all we cared to see, we concluded to take things easy to day in the simple enjoyment of the ride, and therefore did not notice much along the way. Some time after dinner we reached Omaha and after again paying the 50ct. transfer, we left Nebraska scenes and entered the fertle fields of Iowa.

The only discernable difference between Nebraska and Iowa is that the latter is older in improvements and has some of the finest orchards we ever saw. These being in full bloom made the air fragrant and enjoyable. According to present prospects, western Iowa will have an enormous fruit crop.

About six o'clock p. m. it was announced that supper was ready in the dining car and as we felt hungry we concluded to participate, and without dispargaing any of the excellent boarding houses along the way, we must say this was the best meal we ate during our trip. Notwithstanding Dr. Dio Lewis unmercifully condemns fast eating we beg leave to name this as an honorable exception, as we were allowed to masticate as slowly as we felt disposed. The cooking arrangment is complete and things are well done and in quantity, quality and variety, is every thing that could be desired. Having droped our dining car at Burlington, we took breakfast at Galesburg Ill. and soon after noon we arrived at this place

Mendota is a considerable village located at the crossing of the B. and Mo. R. R. and the Ill. Central. It can boast a number of fine churches but their influences does not seem to have a favorable bearing on its population as our ears were greeted with a soul sickning amount of profanity and this too on the Sabbath day. On returning from the different churches the aged men stoped at the public houses while some of the young men passed the afternoon in catching ball on the street. This may seem an over estimate of western town life but it is really the best part of it, as we said nothing of what was transpiring in the drinking saloons and at the livery stables. Of course there are many honorable men in these places, but as we were necessitated to put up at a public house, and they at home, we did not meet. In a short time we will leave this place for an Annual Conference after which we expect to have something of a different character. Our correspondence so far has been written under adverse circumstances and surroundings, and in consequence, may have droped sentiments not in harmony with our position. If so we ask the indulgence of the reader.

OUR CONFERENCE.

On entering the train at Mendota we found ourselves in the company of a large number of brethren and sisters who were also on their way to A. C. and by the time we arrived at the place of meeting our train was quite full. On our arrival at the place of meeting we found that extensive preparations had been make for the occasion. The railroad facilities were good—all that could be desired. For the special benefit of the meeting there was a station house built, with a large platform, and named the Filburn Station, after the proprietor of the farm on which the meeting was held. There was also established a temporary Telegraph Office and a post box in the meeting, so that we had the advantages of all the modern facilities. The tent in which the meeting was held was 210 feet long by 60 wide and was so attached to the barn as to give an additional space of some 50 feet. The tent was divided into two apartments, the one for council and the other for eating, giving ample room for both. Back of the tent were several good wells, from which the water was pumped by the western wind mills and conducted by pipes to several different points as needed for the occasion. The water arrangement was very excellent, but the demand proved, at several times, greater than the income, and as a consequence the ever filling fountain ran dry.

Not arriving at the grounds until Monday we cannot give a personal detail of what was done on Saturday and Sunday, but was informed that on Sunday the crowd was immense. Different estimates were made ranging from 8,000 to 12,000. By request and contrary to the established regulations, services were held in the tent, in the barn, and at the house. There was also preaching in the evenings at different points in the neighborhood. At Girard, we believe, the houses were all opened for public preaching. After Sunday, the crowd of the curious and spectators grew very much less, while that of the members increased. It was thought that the average attendance of members was about 3,000.

The subject matter before the meeting was not what we thought it should have been, neither were the conclusions altogether in harmony with our views, but perhaps was the best that could have been done under existing circumstances. While some were overexacting in carrying out their purposes, others perhaps were overyielding so that, on the whole, the deliberations passed off rather pleasantly, giving room in only a few cases for excitable discussions. Whether forbearance was a virtue in every case, and whether it will result favorably towards the advancement of our holy religion may be a question. There is a possibility of persons gaining measures which when carried out may prove to their own injury.

We thought we saw a spirit manifested on the part of some which is certainly not commendable. Certain elders have things in their congregations which they are determined to have "ousted" and come up to A. C. with the determination to get power to accomplish their wishes, and then return home and carry it out with vigor, and in such cases too where there is no thus saith the Lord for it. As a consequence some will be disowned, and too perhaps for less offences than are frequently committed by those who mete out judgement. Dear brethren, in this we have some fearful apprehensions. Do not lord it over God's heritage. Decisions of Annual Conference has ever been considered advisory and not law by the old brethren. There is no power greater than the power of the gospel—it is the power of God unto salvation and also the power unto destruction. Thus far shalt thou go and no further saith the Lord. Therefore we hope that our dear brethren will be exceedingly careful in measuring out Church discipline, feeling that they will be held accountable to God for the souls given into your charge.

As our readers will have the proceedings of the meeting before them we shall have nothing further to say in regard to its deliberations. It commenced on Monday morning and continued until Tuesday evening, two sessions each day, making four sessions of about four hours each. Good feelings were retained during the whole meeting, and a large amount of Christian charity manifested, but there is still room for improvement in this respect and much more in other things. We as a body have much to learn in the way of transacting our Church business. A little more system is greatly needed and the sooner we adopt it the better. Our motto, like the apostle Paul's, should be, "forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before." There is one thing about these meetings that we, with many others, very much enjoy, that is, the association of kindred spirits. It is on these occasions that we meet from all parts of our great brotherhood. Distance, customs, and different stations in life are all left behind, and we meet and enjoy each other's society as one common family in Christ Jesus. This coming together is not merely an enjoyment but a positive good, and goes far towards maintaining that oneness that should characterize the true Church of Christ. The old and young, fast and slow, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, come in contact one with another and by Christian association, the antagonistical elements become somewhat assimilated and we thereby learn to think much more favorably of each other than we could or would were we not privileged thus to meet. These fraternal feelings we carry home with us and there instill them into others, and thus widen and strengthen that bond of brotherly affection which will eventually identify us as the children of Christ's kingdom above. Let us then be encouraged and tenderly foster that spirit which has a tendency of drawing us closer together and of uniting us more in the great work of saving souls.

Late on Tuesday evening the labors of the meeting closed and the time for parting drew near. As the trains were not to leave until late in the night, it was thought good to have some devotional exercises in the tent before parting, and arrangements were made and services commenced, but in a short time some one announced that the train had arrived, and, without ceremony, the exercises were brought to a close. The report however proved to be false as the train did not arrive until the appointed time, which was fully an hour and a half later. On taking the train we became severely afflicted, so much so that our lot was extremely uncomfortable, but through the kindness of brethren and sisters and the gentlemanly conductor of the the train, our condition was made as comfortable as the nature of the case would allow. Bro. Samuel Faulkender and his sister, Hannah Brumbaugh, being on the train insisted upon us going along home with them. Thinking that it might be good for us to take a little rest, we assented and about noon, next day, arrived at Dixon where brother Samuel resides. Here we received every attention that kind hearts could suggest. Sister Faulkender not being at home, sister Hannah, sister Eliza Faulkender, and brother Samuel's mother-in-law, who also came with us, went to work and prepared dinner for us, and after taking a cup of tea we felt able to resume our journey towards home. At 7:50 P. M. we bid farewell to the household that had so kindly cared for us, with grateful hearts, hoping that our condition would improve by the way, but our riding proved unfavorable to our disease and we got worse. At Chicago we called on a physician whose treatment done us much good. At 8:50 on Friday morning we arrived safely at home though still unwell, very weak and much fatigued, but are now happy to say that we are enjoying our usual health, and feel to thank God for his preserving care. To all who administered to us during our illness we return our grateful thanks and to Bro. S. A. Moore, our traveling companion, especially as to us he was a friend indeed.

On the whole (except our short illness) we had a very pleasant trip and enjoyed it very much, but was exceedingly sorry that our time was so limited, as there are many brethren, sisters, and friends, residing along the way with whom we much desired to call. However, if the Lord will, we may take another journey West when we shall give ourselves sufficient time to make a general visit.

THE CLOVER CREEK MEETING.

On Thursday morning of last week we in company with brother George B. started for this meeting and arrived at Bro. J. W. Brumbaugh's about noon. Public services did not commence until 4 o'clock, but early in the afternoon the brethren and sisters began to assemble, and as usual when we meet on such occasions there is a joyful time. The relation which we sustain to each other as brethren and sisters is close, and when we are thus permitted to come together from far and near, the bond of fraternal affection makes us appreciate each other's society; and it certainly consoling that this trait of the christain character is seen and felt amongst us, when we consider that it is one of the strong evidences of our discipleship. May God help us ever to cherish this feeling, and forbid that we should in these last dark and doleful days, when wickedness exists in high places, and gross darkness covers the minds of the people, grow cold and indifferent.

At the appointed hour the large meetinghouse was filled with eager listeners, and as usual the examination or preparitory services were entered into. The number of ministers present was large, and we cannot now name them all. Elder C. G. Lint, Berkey, and Myers, from Somerset Co. did most of the preaching. The order on the part of the spectators during the evening services was excellent. In fact the only confusion that existed was among the members. It did seem to us and others there was a great deal more talking and consultation than necessary. Our brethren have surely practiced the ordinances frequently enough to know how to do it, and we cannot therefore see the necessity of becoming so excited and having so much consultation. Let every thing be in readiness, before services commences, and then each one go about the work calmly and deliberately, keeping the mind fixed on the object of our service and we think much of the confusion that sometimes exists will be avoided. Brethren and sisters let us think of this matter. If we allow ourselves to become excited and confused while practicing the ordinances, we are certainly not in a frame of mind to properly comprehend their full import, and at the same time destroy the influence that they should have on the world around us.

The next morning at 9 o'clock there was public preaching again. Eld. Lint preached a very impressive and instructive sermon from the words, "Ye are the temples of God." He was followed with some remarks by brethren Archy VanDyke and Geo. Hanawalt. The meeting then closed and we think all can say it was good to be there. We should yet add the joyful intelligence that two were added to the church by holy baptism, and thus may the good work go on.

THE MENONITE APPEAL.

LIMA, OHIO, }
May 12th, 1874 }

Editor Pilgrim:—

By these lines I will inform the Brethren of the Northwestern District of Ohio, that according to agreement, I have written to John F. Funk of Elkhart, Indiana, and received the following answer. And though not written for publication, we hope you will please insert in the PILGRIM, and we hope the several sub-districts will use the proper effort and send me the amount made by postal order as soon as convenient.

DANIEL BROWER,
Treasurer.

ELKHART INDIANA }
May 8th, 1874. }

Dear Brother Brower.

Your kind letter came duly to hand, and in reply I would inform you that there is still time to do something for the aid of Russian Menonites who desire to emigrate, as they will not all come at once. Some of them may be on the way now, others, perhaps, will not come before after harvest, and some may not get off till next spring.

When you have any money collected you can send it to me by a draft on New York and we will send you a receipt, and then when we have the money used and the men are here, they will each give a note for the amount received and of those notes the Board of Guardians will send you to the amount that you furnished. When it becomes due, it will be paid if the Russians are able to do so, and if not, they will pay as soon as they can; but they make the whole church responsible for the payment, and if God blesses them they will pay back in seven years, and the money so returned to each church can be given back to the original donors, or it can be used for the benefit of the church. This is the way in which we expect to manage the whole thing.

I thank you very much for your kind offer and desire to say that your efforts will be received with the greatest of thankfulness, and they make many hearts glad, who for conscience sake are compelled to come to this Western country. May God bless every cheerful giver, lead his people now as he did of old to do his will and glorify his name forever. Amen.

Our Lovefeast.

Tuesday, June 2nd was the time for our communion meeting in the Lower Cumberland household of the church of the brethren; which was said then and there, "this truly was a feast composed of Brethren." How this should encourrge the weary and almost dispaired follower of Jesus. But while it has a tendency to cheer us on our way, it also has its faces of great responsibility attending it. Perhaps if our circumstances were not so favorable, our meetings would be more cool too. It would be a shame beyond all reason, if we could not go together and be together one day in harmony, when everything goes well with us in every way.' Therefore the face of light-mindedness is drawn up for us, and hence it makes our position one of great responsibility. We might think we are thinking of the true signification of our Lovefeast, and yet it might not prove so valuable to us, as if we had to pay a little for it, in the shape of persecution and self-denial. The old saying I think is a true one i. e. "Experience is the best teacher." We may imagine that we know just how those feel who are persecuted, but when it comes right home to us it is not at all what we looked at it to be.

Our meeting was truly a season of refreshment in the divine life, but "as the time of peace is the time to prepare for war," I thought a few words in that direction might come in place as well as to look on the bright side altogether.

While looking over a large congregation of membets, I looked also on many, very many, who it appears are as the poet says,

"Young people who delight in sin," &c.

and on the other hand I thought as another poet says,

"Shed not a tear o'er your friends early bier," &c.

for it appeared like being a good change, from a bad world to a better, and, as it were for good.

As we sometimes make use of our paper for brotherly information, I would, if nothing wrong, inform the readers of the PILGRIM, that these two pieces of poetry are about printed in shape to just lay in our regular hymn books, and in that way can be kept clean and nice for a long time, and if sung at meetings it might prove effectual, for it is one of powerful feeling. It is put up in the above described style by a delicate brother, and one who makes influence his study, and this is one way he is trying to gain on the enemy. He sends one copy for 10 cents or five for 25 cents. I often heard folks say they wished they could get "Wicked Polly" in print, so now here is a chance, and the sooner you send your name the sooner you can have it. Address,

"Echo"

Ministerial Support.

Dear brethren and sisters:—

I have seen several articles in our periodicals on this subject, and was in hopes that I would see some more, but nothing has appeared, and the reason I think is this: As the ministers are generally the contributors to our periodicals, and they, as a matter of course, are a little backward in expressing their feelings on this subject, and rather than say anything, they will bear all, as Paul did with the Corinthian brethren, that they may make the gospel of Christ without charge.

I think the Corinthians were a great deal like some of the brethren of our day. Some of them were not so willing to bear the expenses of Paul as they might have been as it appears when he was about to lecture them he says, "I robbed other churches taking wages of them to do you service." (2 Cor. 11: 8.) Now dear brethren and sisters, I know that this is a very delicate subject to approach, from the fact that it is implanted in the minds of many brethren and sisters, that it is a great wroog to support the preachers. I do not wish to be understood that I want the preachers to be paid for their preaching, but I do mean that it is right and our duty to support th m and their families, and pay their traveling expenses. If the Church elects a brother to the ministry, he is a servant of the Church, and its object is to send that servant into all the world to proclaim the gospel. And il we send them, does it look reasonable that they should support themselves and bear their own expenses, while we that are more fortunate, stay at home with our families, enjoy all the comforts of life, and receive the same reward as they? I think not, and believe it is not. We should never help to put a work upon another that we would not like to do ourselves. I was made very sensible of this during our last Church visit, when a complaint came up that our ministers did not do ti eir duty in spreading the gospel. This brought me to thinking. Some of our ministers are not so well off in this world's goods as they should be, and the question therefore suggests itself, should we, lay members, have the power to tell our ministers to go away from home and leave their families in want, pay their own expenses and hire a servant at home to attend to the domestic work? I say, the Scriptures does not teach us so, but rather that we should be willing to help to bear the burden, by defraying their expenses, and see that their families are not wanting in their absence. Those that are prejudiced against this doctrine will please examine the 9th chapter of 1 Cor. and 11th chapter of 2 Cor. I will refer to a few verses in the above named chapters for fear some will not go to the trouble to read both chapters. 1 Cor. 9: 9. "For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn;" and 11th verse, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things." 2 Cor. 11: 9. "And when I was with you and wanted, I was chargeable to no man, for that which was lacking to me the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied." These are a few of the many passages I could produce in favor of the support of the minister of the gospel.

The sister that wrote on this subject some time ago, spoke the truth in every sense of the word, when she said that "the laity were always taught that it was wrong to pay the ministers, or, in other words, support them, at least I was, and thought that their belief was based on a Scriptural foundation. If I am mistaken in my views I wish to be corrected in a brotherly-like manner, only by the Scripture, and when you read put the same question to yourself that Philip put to the Eunuch, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" There is a great deal in this. We can read a portion of Scripture and have our prejudiced mind on our old belief and we will seldom get the true meaning of it. I will now close, hoping that whoever reads this will only compare it with the word of God, and hold fast to that which is true.

J. B. WOLF,

La Place, Piatt Co., Ill.

Chippewav Lovefeast, and Other Matters.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Our Lovefeast announced in your columns for the 4th of June ended pleasantly. It was held in a neighborhood where a Lovefeast was somewhat of a novelty, and consequently was well attended.

Our brethren from Ashland, Maple Grove, Mohegan, and Black River congregations, were as near to the place as some of our own congregation, and the result was, those congregations were well represented which added much to the social interest of the meeting. As is common on such occasions, a large number of what the brethren denominate the mixed multitude were present. Mixed surely it is when we consider the different elements that enter into composition, from the "almost persuaded to become a christian," down to the professional drunken rowdy, whose glory is in his shame, and whose character affords the strongest argument in favor of the doctrine of total depravity that can be found anywhere. Yet we are glad to say that some improvement in the conduct of this mixed multitude is noticeable. The order was fully as good as could be expected, much better than we have witnessed on former occasions.

As the brethren in the above named congregations brought many of their preachers with them, these constituted the ministerial force, in connection with brother James McMollen, from Richland county and brother Conrad Kahler from Stark Co. The latter was on his way home from Annual Conference, and of course had many questions to answer concerning the proceedings of that body, showing the great interest manifested in those proceedings. He was able to correct the error that had been circulated to the effect that our editors were prohibited from publishing a report of the proceedings, making many hearts glad. Many of us could not see however why the speakers names might not appear. I heard one suggest that it might have the effect of making them proud, while another suggested that it might have the opposite effect to see their speeches in connection with their names, one is about as logical as the other; but if the preachers, as a class, are so extremely weak, would it not be well to have other safeguards provided for their spiritual preservation? By parity of reason one would conclude that the same cause that would necessitate the withholding of the speakers names would also justify the hiding of his person when the speeches were made. The natural tendency to pride must be deplorably great among some of our brethren when the elevation of their bodies would exhalt their minds to the destruction of their souls, as the anti-stand advocates would argue, and the exhibition of the person in connection with his utterances would operate in a similar way.

Would it not be well to guard our words, so that our conversation would be only of the godly sort, that we might neither be ashamed of our words nor exalted in our utterances?

After this digression I will add, that during our Lovefeast, five souls were buried with Christ in baptism, and will, we trust, walk in a newness of life. Brother Wm. Sadler of Maple Grove administered the ordinance in such an expeditious manner as would prove to our Pedo-baptist friends that the immersion of 3000 on the day of Pentecost was no impossible task, for the number present qualified to perform it.

It may also be an item of interest to many to note that our elder, J. B. Shoemaker's health has been poor for sometime.

When we see a faithful minister breaking down under the combined efforts of providing for those of his own household, and ministering to the household of faith, while others are reveling in wealth and luxury, we are made to wonder why the Scriptural injunction to help bear each others burdens and thus fulfil the law of Chrsit is not more effectually observed. Fraternally,

E. L. YODER.

BUFFALO, COL., June 3, 1874.

Dear Pilgrim:—

That my numerous friends, of the brethren and sisters, may know of my safe arrival home, and by request, I will give an outline of my trip East. On the 18th of May I left home and went to Julesburg, in company with several parties going East; had entrusted to me three small orphan children who were being sent to Indiana. At 10 P. M. the 19th, left Julesburg, next day at 12 o'clock arrived at Omaha, and at 1 next morning arrived at St. Jo Mo., where we lay till 7 A. M. when we set out for Quincy Ill. Made close connection and arrived at Decatur at 11 at night. From there I sent the three children on in care of the conductor, and remained over untill next day at noon, when I went on an eastern train to Cerrogorda Ill., where I met with old acquaintances and relatives of the brethren and sisters that reside there and with many that had stopped over, among whom was Eld. Hiel Hamilton, Eld. John Wise, and other ministering brethren. Attended a large number of meetings with the brethren until Monday, when we set out on a heavily laden passenger train for place of A. M. There were over four hundred members on the train. Arrived at place of A. M. at 6 P. M. With joy we met with many dear ones, and enjoyed the meeting well. On Wednesday night at 11 o'clock we set out for home, laid over a few hours at Springfield. Saturday morning, the 30th, at 6 o'clock we were at Julesburg Col. Our company back consisted of brother Martin Swank, from Ill., brother Rosenberger, from Pa., Bro. J. Steven, from Ind., Bro. Funderburg from Ohio, sister Kate Brenizer, of Ohio, and sister A. Sanger, of Mo. (wife's sister.) On our arrival at Julesburg we met with Bro. A. Duncan who had come to meet us. It was a rainy day, traveled 30 miles and put up at the best shelter we could find. Next day,—still raining—arrived at brother Duncans before night. During the night heavy rains fell, so that the face of the earth was flooded with water. In the morning the clouds dispersed, the sun came out in all its wanton splendor, and about noon we arrived here, and found our family in moderate health. The party that came with us are in reasonable health, and to all appearances are none the worse for the trip, notwithstanding it has rained for the last 60 hours before they got here. They are satisfied with rains in Colorado. Crops are growing finely. We are thankful to the giver of all good, for his loving kindness to us all. May his name ever be praised.

INFORMATION WANTED.

We wish to know whether there is an organized church of the Brethren in Lewis Co. Mo., at present or ever was? The reason we want to know is this: There is a man by the name of John R. Miller, who claims to be a member of the church of the Brethren, also his wife. He says that they were received into the Church in Franklin Co., Mo., the adjoining county of Lewis Mo., was baptized by a brother by the name of William McKenny, who had also a brother Jeremiah McKenny who also was a preacher. He also says there was some other brethren living there in that Church by the name of Moore, and Samuel and John Hyet, and others. This was about 23 years ago. John R. Miller is 78 years old, he says, and has lived in Holt Co., Mo. for 22 years within 10 or 12 miles of the Brethren, and has never made himself known as a member of the Church until lately. Now who can tell us whether John R. Miller and his wife Ellen, was baptized by a brother by the name of Wm. McKenny, near a school house named Hygards? In looking over the ministerial list in our almanack I see no such name. The said John R. Miller and wife has no letter of membership to show. He wanted the Church here to receive them in full fellowship, and to commune with us at our meeting. We thought best not until we could see if we could get any information to prove the fact that they are members. Now if there is any brethren or sisters who know that John R. Miller and wife were received into the church in Franklin county, Mo., 23 years ago, and baptized by brother Wm. McKenny, and if there was a brother by that name, will confer a favor by informing us through the PILGRIM, or by private letter. Address me at Craig, Holt Co., Mo. We want the information as soon as possible. Yours in brotherly love. A. J. CORTELL.

FAITH—WHAT IS IT?

WALKERTON, IND.

Dear Editors:—

In the present volume No.17, page 130, Bro. J. W. Fitzgerald has a very good and truthful essay on the above subject and will nicely bear a rereading. He wisely classifies faith. Technicle faith especially is truthfully described. Brethren, this is a fearful doctrine, a lamentable state of things. During the last winter I saw and heard much of this kind of faith and never before heard the way of truth sneerily spoken against. A certain young minister one night taught the people that they could be saved without baptism and works more especially, that works did not amount to anything, but fortunately, very few recieved his doctrine. This is nothing more than can be expected as the time, it is said, will come when men will not endure sound doctrine.

GEORGE STEEL.

Brother Brumbaugh:—

As we thought it would be a matter of general interest to know how we prosper in the Sabath school cause we will send you in a condensed form our last months proceedings.

We have a large church 46x70 situated 5½ miles west of Plymouth on the Knox road. It is a very central locality, and our average attendance for the first four Sundays was a fraction over 106. The total number of verses recited on the four sabbaths were 617. We have eleven classes all very attentive. All the teachers and officers seem to have the success of the school at heart. Many of the most ardent supporters of our Sabbath school to-day were very averse to Sabath schools five years ago. If any doubt the good that can be accomplished by Sabath schools let him visit the Union S. S. and doubts will be dispelled. There is great good being accomplished by the assistance of God through the agency of the Sabbath schools and we trust and pray that the day may come when every neighborhood may have its Sabbath schools.

NOTICE.

Again we give notice to the churches of the Middle District of Pa. respecting the Altoona church building. The move of last year was renewed at our late D. M., and a resolution passed requesting the churches to send in their contributions by the first of July. I will also inform the churches that the building committee have purchased a lot with a house on it, that will do for a meeting-house for the present paying something like $1500. for it, so that they will need the money by the above time. All money to be sent to me, by checks payable at Huntingdon or, Postal orders will do if more convenient, also payable at Huntingdon.

Address,

BOOK NOTICE.

THE PERFECT PLAN OF SALVATION; OR, SAFE GROUND.

The first edition of this work is now sold out, the demand for it having been so great that 1,000 copies were sold in less than two months, and orders are still rapidly coming in, so that I have been unable to fill them for the two last weeks, on account of not having books enough. Those who have ordered the book will please use a little patience and your orders shall be filled just as soon as I can get another lot printed.

I will further state, that, let all who wish this work, send in their orders immediately. Many brethren are purchasing them by the dozen just to give away, and circulate them among those who are likely to read them. One brother ordered 50 copies—at his own expense—for this purpose. Bear in mind that by taking ten or more copies, you get them for ten cents per copy. It is put up in a neat pamphlet form, contains 26 large pages of reading matter, and will be sent post paid on the following terms: 1 copy, 15 cents; 2 copies, 25 cents; 10 copies, $1.00. Address,

J. H. MOORE.

E. L. YODER.

KEENY.—In Denver, Col., Mar. 13, of consumption, Thadeus S. son of brother Daniel and sister Elizabeth Keeny of Washington creek congregation, Douglas county, Kansas, aged 21 years, 6 months, and 10 days.

The subject of this notice was a siogle man. He took a journey to the mountains, hoping to improve his health, but the messenger Death overtook him before he could return to his parental home. He was waited on in his last moments by one of his brethren.

His remains were brought home and buried on March 16th. Funeral services by the Brethren from Matt. 24: 44.

PETER BRUBAKER.

ROCK.—In Lagrange county, Indiana, May 12th, Mary, daughter of brother Henry and sister Elizabeth Rock, aged 22 years, 6 months, and 19 days.

Funeral services by the Brethren. Death seemingly came very unexpectedly to her. May this be a solemn warning to the living to prepare for death, and may we all realize the awful condition of the death of sinners.

ISAIAH HORNER.

KEISER.—In Millcreek Township, Williams Co., Ohio, April 21, 1874, William Franklin Keiser, aged 3 years, 8 months, and 6 days.

His death was caused by falling into a boiler of boiling water—lived about four hours. Funeral services by J. Moore and the writer.

KEISER.—Also, in the same place, April 28, 1874, Bro. John Keiser, aged 45 years, 10 month, and 10 days. Disease, cancer in the stomach.

He was a faithful deacon for the last 12 years of his life. He leaves a wife and 7 children and many friends to mourn their loss. Funeral services by J. Moore and the writer, to a large audience, from Rev. 14: 13.

SEIBERT.—In the Maple Grove congregation, Ashland county Ohio, last April, Frances, daughter of brother John and sister Eliza Seibert; aged 12 years, 4 mos. and 10 days. Her kind parents and associates miss her. Funeral services by the writer and others, from Luke 8: 52, 53. to a large and attentive congregation.

WM. SADLER.

DAVID CLEM.

UNDERWOOD.—In Northwest Township, Williams county Ohio, May 2, 1874, sister Amanda Underwood, wife of William Underwood, aged 43 years, 7 months, and 19 days.

She leaves a sorrowing husband and nine children. Funeral services by the writer.

D. M. RITTENHOUSE.

CADE.—In Barbour County, W. Va., on May 25th 1874, sister Elizabeth Jane Cade. Age not known.

Our sister's illness was long and severe, and she exhibited a great deal of patience. But now we have the lively hope that while her body is at rest beneath the clods of the quiet dell meeting-house graveyard, her spirit is enjoying the celestial regions above.

JOHN W. FITZGERALD.

BAKER.—Ashland congregation, Ashland county, Ohio, on May 27th, '74, sister Catharine Baker. She was buried at the Albright grave yard at Layfelt. Funeral discourse by the writer.

Sister Baker was born in 1792 and died at the age of 82 years, 3 months and 11 days. She was the wife of Brother John Baker, dec'd. and daughter of brother Adam and sister Elizabeth Koontz. She was a consistent member of the Church for 48 years. During her late illness she suffered much and towards her last, she was altogether helpless. Brother Baker and his wife the subject of this notice, were natives of Va They moved to Pa., in the year 1816 and in 1837, moved to Ashland county Ohio where they lived and died. She leaves six children, all members of the Church, 44 grand-children and 9 great-grand-children to mourn their loss. J. C. MCMULLEN.

SELL.—In the Hamilton congregation, Caldwell county Mo., May 14, 1874, our much beloved sister R. Francis Sell, consort of brother Daniel R. Sell, and daughter of Eld. George and Elizabeth Witwer, aged 22 years and 4 days. Disease, a complication of fevers and erysipelas in the face.

The subject of this notice was one among our exemplary youths. Over half of her one score and two years, were faithfully devoted to the service of her divine Master; and even previous to her enlistment under her Immanuel's banner, remarkable traits of piety were observed, and she not only bore her afflictions of eight days with christian patience and resignation, but also left with her bereaved friend, the strongest and brightest evidence of a bright anticipation of a glorious immortality. She bade all around her a "farewell," and fell asleep in apparent perfect peace. She leaves behind to mourn ther loss an affectionate husband and two infant children. Oh! you unregenerate, who are yet without such a hope, and without God in the world; is not this a history desirable to be affixed to your obituary, when you have gone to reap your reward. Funeral occasion improved by brother Daniel B. Gibson and the writer, from Rev. 14: 13, to a large concourse of sympathizing friends.

MISELLANEOUS.

THE DYING CHRISTIAN.

BY WESLEY.

Adown death's vale I'm drifting,
But hope sustains my soul;
Its lambent beams are lifting,
The clouds which o'er me roll.

I see the frowning portal,
And shrink its gloom to brave;
How deep to fragile mortal,
The horrors of the grave.

But see the gloom disperses,
As on its threshold falls,
The golden light of mercy,
From Heaven's radient halls.

From out the entrance dreary,
The radience of the cross,
Breaks o'er my spirit weary,
Upon the billows tossed.

Yes Calvary wakes the pity
Of Heaven's righteous King.
While through the sinless city,
His praises loudly ring

Avaunt ye fiends of darkness,
I hear my Savior's voice;
The pearly gates swing open,
Rejoice my soul rejoice.

THE APPLE-TREE IN BLOOM.

OH, joy! 'tis the season of blossoms,—
The beautiful season of blossoms.
Has snow in the sunshine been falling?
Oh, no! 'tis the apple-tree bloomiog.

Pure white is each delicate blossom,—
Pure white, with a shading crimson.
Oh! beautiful season of blossoms,
That gives us the apple-tree blooming.

Oh! come to the garden and see it,—
The apple-tree, old in its glory:
It sheds a whole carpet of blossoms,
And still seems as blooming as ever.

I love it, this season of blossoms,—
This beautiful season of blossoms.
Of all the fine sights you can show me,
Oh, show me the apple-tree blooming

Punctuality.

General Washington was a pattern of punctuality. When he engaged to meet Congress at noon, he never failed to be at the door of the hall just as the clock was striking twelve. He always dined at four o'clock; and if the guests whom he had invited were not present, the dinner went on precisely at the appointed hour, without waiting for them. Washington would make no apology, but simply remark, "Gentlemen, we are punctual here." When those people got another invitation to dine with the President, they would be sure to be in time.

A person had a pair of beautiful horses, which the President wanted to buy. Five o'clock in the morning of a certain day was fixed as the time for Washington to see them; but the horses were not brought till quarter past five, when the owner was told that the President had been there at the hour appointed, but had gone away. The man thus lost a good chance of selling his horses by his delay of one quarter of an hour.

The river that runs slow, and creeps by the banks, and begs leave of every turf of grass to let it pass, is drawn into little hollows, and spreads itself in smaller portions, and dies with diversion; but when it runs with vigorousness and a full stream, and breaks down every obstacle, making it even as its own brow, it stays not to be tempted with little avocations, and to creep into holes, but runs into the sea through full and useful channels. So is a man's prayer; if he moves upon the feet of an abated appetite, it wanders into the society of every trifling accident, and stays at the corners of the fancy, and talks with every object he meets, and cannot arrive at heaven; but when it is carried on the wings of passion and strong desire, a swift motion and a hungry appetite, it passes on through all the intermediate regions of clouds, and stays not until it dwell at the foot of the throne, where mercy sits, and thence sends holy showers of refreshment.—Jeremy Taylor.

Work in obedience to the Master's bidding will be followed by the sure evidence of His divine power and life. Intelectual force often fails to unbar the gates of light and truth. The closet may have no window looking into heaven; the idlers and consumers in the vineyard cannot know the mystery of the kingdom; but to those who are willing to toil and do needed service, there is granted an insight and knowledge that are able to withstand every assault, because it is personal and present. The servants that drew the water never were troubled with doubts regarding the miracle at Cana of Galilee.

Our ills are not so many,
Nor so hard to bear below,
But our sufferings, in dread of the future,
Is more than our present woe.
We see, with our vision imperfect,
Such causes of doubt and fear,
Some yet that are far in the distance,
And some that may never be near,
When, if we would trust in His wisdom,
Whose purpose we may not see,
We should find, whatever our trials,
As our day our strength shall be.

—Phœby Cary.

Words are mighty, words are living;
Serpents with their venomous stings.
Or bright angels, crowding round us,
With heaven's light upon their wings;
Every word has its own spirit,
True or false, that never dies.
Every word man's lips have uttered
Echoes in God's skies.

—Miss Proctor.

Peace is the enjoyment of God's love, the harmony of the soul with God, and this never can be maintained by any mere forms of right thoughts, or right views, or speculations, but only by being right and doing right. —Norman McLeod.

If thou endurest wrong for Christ's sake, he is a Revenger; if sorrow, he is a Comforter; if sickness, he is a Physician; if loss he is a Restorer; if life, he is a Reviver.

ITEMS.

Jacob Wainwright, the black boy who accompanied Dr. Livingstone's remains to England, will, after further training, return to his native country, to be employed as a teacher in the Church Missionary Society's East African Mission.

The Presbyterian Church in the Canadian Dominion numbers 19 Presbyteries, 633 regular charges, and 51,397 communicants. The total of contributions during the year for congregational and benevolent purposes was $550,901, an average of $10. 97 to each member.

A religious census has been completed by the Non-Conformists of England, with the following results: "For the whole of the 125 towns the established Church provides 1,745 places of worship, with 1,204, 877 sittings, or 40 per cent. of the whole. The non-established churches supply 3,845 places of worship and 1,805,911 sittings or 60 per cent. of the whole. In other words, the Church of England provides two-fifths and the Free Church three-fifths of the religious accommodation in these 125 towns."

The Presbyterian General Assembly now meeting in St. Louis represents 3,000,000 people in this country, and 4,800 congregations. The latter appear in the assembly by about 600 ministers and elders, equally appointed, the representatives being sent according to a permanent rating from each of the 172 Presbyteries, which bear to the 35 synods a relation similar to that of countries to States in the Union. The latest reported membership of the denomination (May, 1873) was 472,023, and a Sunday-school attendance of 482,762 children.—The sum $9,022, 030 was raised in 1872–73 of which $1,543, 712 were benevolent funds

The dry weather in large sections of the West cause apprehensions for the crops. But short and severe storms are reported in several localities. A severe tornado passed over a part of Iowa and Wisconsin on Sunday night, May 24th. At Ripon, Wis., the Congregational church was demolished and much damage done to other buildings and fruit trees. At Oshkosh, Winnecomne and At Davenport, Iowa, considerable damage was done. The storm lasted fifteen minutes In Philadelphia the most severe rain-storm accompanied by thunder and lightning witnessed for years, occurred May 25. The various mills and other establishments in the city were flooded to a depth of two or three feet, and streets littered with their contents. Business was entirely at a stand still. It is thought the loss will be $500 000.

LIVER AND BLOOD DISEASES.

BY R. V. PIERCE, M. D.

A healthy liver secretes each day about two and a half pounds of bile, which contains a great amount of waste material taken from the blood. When the liver becomes torpid or congested, it fails to eliminate this ast amount of noxious substance which, therefore, remains poison in the blood, to be conveyed to every part of the system. What must be the condition of the blood when it is receiving and retaining each day two and a half pounds of poison? Nature tries to work off this poison through other channels and organs—the kidneys, lungs, skin, &c., &c., but these organs become overtaxed in performing this labor in addition to their natural functions, and cannot long withstand the pressure, but become variously diseased.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, is unduly stimulated by the unhealthy blood which passes to it from the heart and fails to perform its office healthfully. Hence the symptoms of bile poisoning, which are dullness, headache incapacity to keep the mind on any subject, impairment of the memory, dizzy, sleepy or nervous feelings, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper. The blood itself being diseased, as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin, it is so irritating and poisonous that it produces discolored brown spots, pimples, blotches, and other eruptions, sores, boils carbuncles and scrofulous tumors. The stomach, bowels and other organs cannot escape becoming affected, sooner or late, and we have as the result costiveness,, piles, dropsy, dyspepsia and diarrhœa. Other symptoms are common, as bitter or bad taste in the mouth internal heat, palpitation, teasing cough, unsteady appetite, choking sensation in the throat, bloating of the stomach, pain in the sides or about the shoulders or back, coldness of extremities etc., etc., Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time. The liver being the great depuratin or blood cleansing organ of the system—set this great "housekeeper of our health" at work and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood and rot out as it were the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose my Golden Medical Discovery with very small doses daily of my Pleasant Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these grea resolvents.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been, the Apostolic method. VOL. 5. HUNTINGDON, PA., JUNE, 23, 1874. NO. 25.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting held in Macoupin County, Illinois, on May 26 and 27, 1874.

The question being taken on the amendment it was passed.

1. I wish to say a word right here. The brethren see the condition we are placed in. The reporter will have to make a full report. He cannot make a synopsis. You see the labor that is on our hands. I don't complain but the brethren see how our time is occupied. Where will he the time to make a synopsis? To-morrow morning we design to send manuscript to our offices. I want understood that a full report will have to go, and a full report will have to be given. When can we make an abridgement? The brethren all over the country are looking for the report, and we must get it out as soon as possible. You see the labor that will devolve upon us. We understand that the abridgement will be the dropping of the names.

5. We had much better be looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ than looking for that report. The editor had better not speak on this subject.

The following query from Tennessee was read and the answer passed:

Query. Inasmuch as the public mind is awakened on the subject of peace, both among nations and societies, should not the church at large take notice of the "signs of the times," and teach more earnestly at this time this cardinal doctrine of Christ and the Church.

Answer. We think the Church should do so.

The First District of Virginia was called.

No papers.

The Second District of Virginia was called.

No papers.

The Third District of Virginia was called.

No papers.

D. P. Sayler from the Eastern District of Maryland, presented the following request:

A Request. The Eastern District of Maryland humbly asks the Annual Meeting to pass query 24 of the minutes of 1873, and appoint a committee to attend to said business.

The following request from the Southern District of Missouri being like in nature, was also read:

Requested that Article 24, of Minutes of 1873, be again considered for the reasons therein set forth, and if thought best not to include those Minutes omitted in Encyclopedia, to have those made since the date of said work published,

Both requests were granted.

Daniel Wise. I move that the Standing Committee appoint the committee called for in the requests.

Carried.

D. Long, for the Western District of Maryland, presented the following paper, which was passed:

A brother holding the office of Deacon in the Church, and is nominated for the office of County Commissioner and accepts the nomination; The Church then takes his Deacon office from him; does the coming District and Annual Meeting also decide and determine that the Gospel also demands and requires the Church to deprive the brother from the privilege of communion, or in other words, of partaking of the emblems of the broken body of the Lord? If so let the Gospel authority be produced.

Ans. The Church is justifiable according to the Gospel and the order of the Brethren, in prohibiting such a brother from the Communion; and any brother who will contend, publicly or privately, that it is not wrong for a Christian to hold the office of County Commissioner, should be admonished in love to do so no more; and and if he does the Church should deal with him according to Matthew 18. See Romans 16: 18, 18; Second Thessalonians 3: 14, 15; Matthew 6: 24; Second Corinthians 6: 14—18; Encyclopedia page 24; Annual Meeting proceedings 1778 and 1779, first page 1797; page 110 Annual Meeting 1822 and 1827; Minutes of 1861.

Passed.

He also presented the following paper:

Since it is fashionable for the world to wear mustaches, the Brethren are adopting it and claim for it a matter of conscience and that they are good for the eyes; are Brethren compelled to salute such if they cannot do it without doing violence to their conscience.

Brethren should never wear a mustache only, or a fashionable beard, according to the fashion of the world, and if they do they will fall into council of the church.

2. I would say that we have a query very similar to that in the records of a previous Annual Meeting, and an answer to it which I cannot just now remember. The answer is in substance that if they wear the whole beard we can be satisfied with them, but if they wear only a mustache, or a mustache and a fashionably cut beard, we cannot be satisfied with them.

Several voices.—Yes that is it.

4. If a man objects to a beard worn as God put it upon man's face, he puts himself in a critical position. I do not want to hurt your conscience when I let my beard grow as God put it on my face, but if I shave off all the hair except upon my upper lip, I shall be like the brother in Maryland. Some one remonstrated with him for wearing a mustache, but he replied that God put it there and the devil told him to cut it off. You know that it is said in the Bible that you shall "not mar the corners of thy beard." This is not exactly plain. The question comes up, what are the corners of the beard. Luther in his translation says that you shall not cut it all off. Allow a brother to leave his beard as God made it. I have scraped my face for fashion's sake for forty years, and there is not a brother in the Church who puts a razor to his face but does it for fashion. The ancient people of God did not shave the face. It was fashion that introduced it, and it is fashion that keeps it up. I don't say that a brother should wear what is called a fashionable beard—shave and cut and trim it in accordance with the fashian of the day, but I do say that if a brother wants to wear his beard as God made it, he should be allowed to do so, without being in danger of being brought before the council.

5. The Minutes of 1869 have an answer to a similar query.

9. If brother Sayler thought that the query was brought here to meet such cases as his, he is mistaken. The query does not refer to the full beard, but to the mustache and the fashionable beard. The brethren know that pride is on the increase, and the young men of the Church are shaping their beards into fashionable shapes and are wearing the mustache only. They say that the mustache is good for the eyes and that to cut it off is injurious to the eyes. They claim it as a matter of conscieoce, and we want some authoritative words on the subject. It was to meet such cases that the query was brought here. It is a matter which is causing us trouble, and we wanted the council to decide the question.

19. I have no difficulty with this question. I for one feel that it is becoming to shave my lip once a week. This I can do easily with a pair of sheurs. I do not need a razor. Then go where I may I give no offense. When I salute a brother I want to salute the lip, but if the lip is entirely covered with hair, I cannot do that. The hair upon the lip prevents a salute. It seems to me that we should have respect to this. Many brethren are offended by hair upon the upper lip, and will not salute a person wearing it. If we cut it off then we give no offence. If it is cut off once a week, that is often enough, no offence is given. We might make a rule that a brother shall cut it off as often as once a week.

(Cries of "No, no.")

18. The brethren well know that there is a fashion in the wearing of the beard. There is, perhaps, more fashion in the manner of wearing the beard and the mode of cutting the hair than in any one thing. This is a matter which is worthy of the thoughtful consideration of the brethren. Some action should be taken to settle the question. In this matter pride may creep into the Church, and we should guard against it beforehand.

I rise before you merely to tell the brethren not to wear the beard upon the upper lip. Webster calls hair upon the upper lip a mustache, and he calls hair upon the chin a beard. He defines in his abridged dictionary, a beard to be hair worn upon the chin, but in his unabridged he defines a beard as hair worn upon the face, without making any distinction of hair on the upper lip and hair upon the chin. I dont see how a beard can be one thing in an abridged dictionary and another thing in an unabridged dictionary by the same author, but that makes no difference. I think that it is wrong for a brother to wear a mustache or hair upon the upper lip, so long as it gives offence. It is a little matter to persist in when it offends the brethren.

22. This question touches our brethren in Virginia. Customs change and vary and fashions change. There are customs and fashions in everything. The old brother said that he had shaved for fashion for forty years. In Virginia now they don't shave for fashion. It is the fashion not to shave. Years ago in Virginia they did not generally wear hair on the upper lip. Then the mustache came in fashion about the time the war began. Now it is the fashion to wear a beard on the chin and face. So, you see, the fashion changes. What is the rule of the Scriptures about these things? Paul says that, if by eating meat he shall cause his brother to offend he will eat no meat while the world stands. Some talk about their eyes and claim the wearing of a mustache as a matter of conscience. Let us not have too tender a conscience in this direction, but let us seek not to offend the brethren, but rather too add to their comfort.

21. It has ever been the order of the brethren, since I have belonged to the Church, to allow the brethren to wear a full beard. Never was anything said against a brother's wearing a full beard if he wanted to do so. Never was anything said against it—not since I have been a member of the Church. A mustache has always been considered against the order of the Church when it grows only, but a full beard has always been allowed. That has been my knowledge of the matter since I have belonged to the Church. If any brother knows different let him speak.

4. We have had bretbren in the Church who have worn a full beard when it was not the fashion to wear the full beard. They have worn it as a matter of conscience when it was a cross to wear it. (Voices—"that is so!") They have been shunned by their brethren in consequence of it, and some would not sit down at Communion with them because of it.

The answer to the query was then passed.

The Eastern District of Pennsylvania was called.

No papers.

The Middle District of Pennsylvania was called and the following petition presented:

This meeting petitions Annual Meeting to grant District meetings the privelege of sending to Annual Meeting queries and petitions that may originate during their Sessions.

Answer. Considered best not to grant the right to do so.

Passed.

There were some others presented; but as they were similar ones from other districts, they were considered together.

The Western District of Pennsylvania was then called and James Quinter presented the following query:

Inasmuch as the answer to XXI of the Annual Meeting of 1872, In reference to brethren engaging in the Banking business is considered indefinite, and some take advantage of this circumstance and do engage in the business, will not this Annual Meeting reconsider said query, and give a more positive answer?

We agreed to ask a reconsideration, and recommend that the same privilege be granted to brethren who wish to engage in the banking business, as is accorded to those who engage in the mercantile business subject to the same restrictions.

Some one in the audience called out for the reading of the restrictions upon the mercantile business.

1. The term mercantile business as used in this query, and in the transactions of the previous Annual Meeting is intended to refer to all classes of trade, and the restrictions are honesty, truthfulness, fairness, &c.

6. Why do the brethren desire to engage in the banking business? It must be because they are not satisfied with the lawful rate of interest on their money, but want an interest which is higher than allowed by the State. Otherwise, why do they wish to go into banking? They can lend their money now at the legal rate of interest. Nothing is to hinder. Taking a higher rate of interest than the law allows is usury, and the Bible condemns that.

21. Are you going to allow brethren to go into the banking business? I guess there is danger in that, brethren. The brethren have advised that a brother should not go into the banking business. The rates of interest are now in many States as high as 10 per cent. I think there is speculation in this thing. I think that we had better not make any changes in our rules on this subject.

13. One difference between banking and general mercantile business is this: In banking there is little or no competition and nothing to cut down rates as there is in general mercantile business. As I look at it, there is danger in it in two ways. First, There is danger that the brethren will be unequally yoked together with unbelievers, and this is forbidden in the Scriptures. The second danger is that the brethren will come to love their money too much. They will become covetous and greedy. We now have a rule on this subject which all will agree is entirely safe. Has the rule ever done us any harm. Why not let it be as it is? I think that is the wisest and safest course. I think it had better be left entirely alone.

22. Brethren engaging in the banking business will get a very high rate of interest on their money. The law allows all bankers to take 12 per cent interest, and for our brethren to take such an interest as that is, I think, running to extremes. We had better not run to extremes brethren. Let us let the rule stay as it is, and get only the legal, established rate of interest on our money.

4. Men will not go into banking business who have no money, and if a man has money he has to take care of it. He must invest it somewhere and in something if he wants it to grow. He must take care of it somehow, and I see no difference whether he invests it in lands or goods or cattle or banks. I don't know whether it is any worse for a brother to invest money in banks and get six per cent. for it, than for brethren to come out West, here in Illinois, and invest their money in land and realize, as they sometimes do, as high as four or five hundred per cent. I think we can trust the brethren to take care of their worldly affairs, and so long as they do not overstep the restrictions imposed upon all kinds of trade, I am not inclined to meddle with their business affairs. I am glad that I do not have to attend to their affairs. It is enough to keep the brethren to honesty and fairness in their dealings with one another and with the world.

2. Brethren and sisters, a few thoughts. A brother invests his money in a banking institution. It has its officers, regularly appointed, and loans out its money. Well now, suppose a poor man, a borrower of the bank, should fail to make his payments at the proper time. The institution is chartered by law and it sues that man and gets judgment and sells out all that he has and distresses him and his wife and his children. The banking institution with which the brother is connected does this and the brother cannot help it, yet he receives part of the profit and is responsible for the act of oppression. His money has gone out of his hands and out of his controll into a banking institution,—an institution of the world, and the world has controll of it. Besides men often involve their money in these chartered institutions and then lose the whole or part of it. Therefore I think we had better not grant the brethren the privilege of going into such an institution. Let them keep their property in their own hands and under their own control and then they can see that it is not used to oppress the orphan and the widow. To keep one's property in one's own control, is the only way to be sure that that property is used as by the stewarts of God. If a brother invests his money in a corporation, it has gone out of his hands and he can no longer see that it is used rightly. He is no longer a steward of God over that property. The State creates the corporation and grants them certain powers, whereby they may under certain circumstances steal away and sell out the home of the fatherless and widow. The corporation controls the brother's money and not the brother himself. Let the brother keep it where he can control it himself. Another point that I wish to make is this. It is a big one. It is a common idea, and one that I am afraid is gaining ground that the Church is not to take care of the spiritual interests of all her members, but that she is to allow them to do as they please with their money. That some say is none of her concern. Now I take the ground that it is the business of the church to take all the interests of the members into consideration. The spiritual interests of the members should be looked after and the temporal interests of the members should be looked after also. We are all under obligations to be controlled by the decision of the brotherhood in regard to our property and our actions, for our spiritual welfare and edification and happiness are all connected with the disposition which we make of our property. Our conduct, our property, and the disposition that we make of that property, and everything that pertains to our mortal existence, is inseperably connected with our spiritual welfare. All these things belong to the same great God who has made that spirit. Therefore I feel, brethren, that we ought to keep our property under our own control where it can be used for the temporal and spiritual benefit of the heirs of Adam and not be put out of our hands and control.

(23. Made a remark at this point which the reporter failed to catch.)

11. That answer in the records does not render satisfaction in the quarters where trouble exists. The trouble arises from the disrespect which certain of the brethren show to the advice of the Annual Meeting. Now I see a difference between banking and general business transactions. I am not qualified to point out that difference clearly, but I will point out one feature of it. Banking institutions in Pennsylvania are regulated by law. Their charter names the privileges which they are entitled to enjoy. The President of the Bank of Washington declares that there are only three banks in the state of Pennsylvania that do not violate their charters.

Now then how can a brother be connected with such an institution? The Scriptures referred to in the answer in the records to a similar query, should be instead of what it is, Matthew 6th chapter and 13th verse, which says, "Lead us not into temptation." In the transaction of the business of a banking corporation, if a borrower should fail to be able to meet the demand and take up his note when it fell due, he would be sold out no matter what the circumstances in the case might be. The institution protests the note, and it is collected by press of law, and that is against the law of God. Money in banking institutions has passed beyond our control. I regard it as a violation, on our part, of the doctrine in the text, "Lead us not into temptation." We want a more definite answer than that upon the records. We want one which shall be explicit and prevent the trouble that has arisen from the desire of the brethren to engage in the banking business, and from their unwillingness to heed the advice of the Annual Meeting. If we can get something more definite, it will answer the desire of our brethren. The demand of the congregation, where the difficulty exists is for something more definite on the subject than anything we now have. There is wisdom enough in this body to give us something more definite than that we now have about this matter. As it is now all we can do is to tell our brethren who wish to enter into the banking business, that as men engaged in the banking business are exposed to temptation we should caution them against it as the Annual Meeting did in its former session. You see, brethren, that all that we can do, as it is now, is to advise them against it. Now the congregation where the difficulty exists, wants something more definite, and I hope you will give it to them. The matter is an important one and demands careful attention.

21. Men are allowed by the church to loan money at the lawful rate of interest. Why do they want to go into banking? It is because they want more than the law allows them for the use of their money? Must not this be the reason? Brethren is this right? No! no! they ought not so to do. It was always decided that brethren had better not have anything to do with banking. How many banks fail? How was it in the late money panic? Wasn't it the banks that closed up first? There is no danger that brethren in investing their money in banks may loose all they have. I say that no brother ought to engage in banking.

24. In going into banking business we put our money beyond our control, and we cannot prevent its being used contrary to the word of God. Take a single instance. A poor brother or sister may be in need of money and may mortgage their home and borrow money from the bank. Now, if they fail to make the payment at the proper time, no matter what the reason may be, their property is taken from them by the bank and the brother who has invested in the bank is implicated, though he could not prevent it. He has a hand in the iniquity, though he would have prevented it if he could. I can control property that is in my own hands, but after it has passed from my own hands, it may be subject to the control of somebody else.

1. Much of that which my brother Miller said, as well as what brother Metzgar said, implies not to individual banking but to chartered and incorporated institutions. In the banking business, as carried on by individuals, a brother may have his busines and the money invested in it, as much under his own control as any brother may have his farm or his land or his store, or as the mechanic may have his shop under his control. As regards the matter of temptation, I fully agree with my brother Wise; but there are temptations in all business Where is the ousines which has not its temptations? I do not want however, that this Annual Meeting should advise the brethren to go into the banking business; but while I do not want them to do that, I do want the meeting to be right sure that it has the authority to say that the brother who desires to go into the banking business shall not do so. I want the meeting to be sure that it has the authority to say this before it says it and also before it goes farther and says that if the brother still persists and goes into the banking business, he forfeits his membership in the church. That the banking business has temptations I know but what business can we follow that has no temptations connected with it? This business may have unusual temptations, but I call attention to the declaration of the apostle Paul. Does not he say that those who will be rich "fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts." Riches then have their temptations and their peculiar temptations, and all branches of business which lead to wealth have their peculiar temptations. Do we intend to decide that no brother shall be wealthy, because those that will be rich fall into temptations and snares? Now, then if we oppose banking on the ground of the temptation which attends it, may we not expect that some poor brother will bring up a resolution here against allowing any brother to be rich, and suppressing altogether the rich in the church? All branches of business have their temptations and hence we ought all to be cautious and careful lest we ourselves fall into temptation. But we should be cautious how we interfere with the business of a brother without we have a perfect right to do so. We ought to be careful how we bring the council of the church to bear upon the temporal affairs of the brethren. Brother Wise speaks of having notes protested at the bank. Well, when any brother offends in this respect and does any thing unjust and oppressive and wrong, bring him before the church just as well as you would any other brother, or just as you would bring the brother for some other offense. I would not be understood as counseling or advising the brother to go into banking, but I want the brethren to see that there are two sides to to this question and to hesitate before they do any thing rash or inconsiderate in the matter. If you must be careful on the one hand, you must be careful on the other. When a banking house is licensed by the State to do a banking business, the State gives the bankers certain banking privileges, but it does not compel them to make use of them at all times. Of course they have the power of doing to the full limit of the privilege granted, but they are not compelled to to exercise that power. When the exercises of that power would be unjust and oppressive they may at their own option suspend its exercises.

15. I am afraid brethren that we are meddling too much with private enterprise here. We should be careful how we meddle with the private affairs of our brethren.

18. It should be understood that the banks do a general financial business entirely. This is an answer to the old brother who complained of the oppression of the banks in certain instances in regard to a poor brother or sister who had borrowed from them, and also in answer to the brother who thought that the desires to go into the banking buiness was caused by a desire for a higher rate of interst than the law allows. What is it that Paul says about going into this city and buying and selling and getting gain? Let us hold our brethren, no matter what their business may be, to the restrictions of farmers, truthfulness and honesty, but not say that they shall not engage in the banking business.

25. Here is the main objection I have to a brother's engaging in the banking business. When a man becomes a partner in a bank he becomes a partner in the oppression which the bank may impose. It is, of course, allowed a brother to put his money in a bank on deposit, as a matter of conscience, but it is not allowed to take stock in bank and so become one of the part owners. It seems to me that the former answer to this question,—the one on the records, has the right idea only it is not quite strong enough. I would make it as strong as this, that we tell them, not only that we advise them, not to go into the banking business, but also that if they do do it they will fall into the council of the church.

16. It seems to me that the brethren can make a good use of all the money that they have without going into the banking business. The banks in many states charge 18 per cent., and as high as 24 per cent, for the use of money. That is what the Scriptures call usury, and usury is positively prohibited in the word of God.

2. There seems to be in the arguments presented rather two extremes. We will try to get at the middle ground. This is a case that I have some knowledge of,—men going into the banking business. There is a difference in the different kinds of banks. Suppose we have a bank owned entirely by two brothers. Suppose that one is a cashier and the other is the president of the bank. They two have full control of all the business of the bank and can be held responsible for the manner in which it is conducted. Then, in that case, they have as good a right to run that bank and earn their money by it, as any brother has a right to run a store and earn his money by it, or run a farm and earn his money by it; and such a bank might be a convenience to brethren outside the bank, who desired to do business with a bank and yet would prefer to deal with one owned by the Brethren. But here is where the trouble comes. When a brother goes into a corporate body created by the law, and the greater number of the members of the corporate body are not brethren, the brother's property comes under their control, because they outnumber him in the vote. They may vote to prosecute a poor sister by the law and the brother cannot help himself though he would prevent the wrong if he could. He cannot control that matter. Now, who will bring that brother up before the church for putting his money where he could not control it? Will you put him out of the church for being in that corporate body? Is that the intention of this Annual Meeting? Will you bring the brother into the council of the church for being associated with these men in business? I will own that he should not be among them. My mind is that a brother should not be allowed to go into the banking business with the world, but if brethren choose to associate themselves together and go into the banking business, it is all right. It is my mind that the brethren should not be allowed to take part in any corporate body. Take another instance of the same thing. Suppose a brother has shares in a railroad company. That is also chartered by the state, and in it he is associated with the world. Suppose a train on that railroad runs over a poor woman's cow. The cow may be her sole dependence for her scanty living, and she comes to the railroad company and ask for the value of the cow. The railroad company says, "No you shall not have a farthing for your cow." Now, has the brother any right to be in such a company? I say not. I say that it is wrong for any brother to go into the banking business with the world, or into any corporate body. Such an answer will pass the meeting, I think. It is in banking with the world, that the danger lies, and I am inclined to think that if we were all clear of the world there would be no trouble in getting an answer.

At this point in the debate the meeting adjourned to meet after dinner at the call of the chair.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was called to order about half-past — in the afternoon, H. D. Davy in the chair.

A hymn was sung and then the banking question came up at the point where the debate left it at the morning session. The Standing Committee had meantime prepared an answer to the query, which passed without further discussion. It was as follows:

We, according to the above request, are willing to reconsider the query alluded to; but we do not see our way clear to make anything more positive than we have already made. And we would admonish brethren to be very careful in engaging in all kinds of business, and especially in business done by incorporated bodies, such as railroads and banking corporations, which may bring them into dangerous associations with ungodly men.

A matter of unfinished business came up from Maryland, in regard to the installing of officers, involving in some degree the right of an elder in one district of the church to go into another district to make appointments in it.

18. I want to know what would be the result if the brother who was applied to for permission to make an appointment, should say no. What would be done in that case?

17. There may be a difference in the practice of the brotherhood East and West. In the West our speakers are not permitted to make appointments without going to the church and the elders. It may do in the East but it don't in the West.

13. Extreme cases may arise under any rule, and in such cases a little latitude is best. I have no idea that any trouble will rise from the rule It will be reasonably applied in all cases, and the circumstances will always be taken into account in the publications of the rule.

21. It is not necessary that the speaker should go to the elder every time. If the elder gives the privilege once it will do for all times. He need not go every time he wants to speak.

The following query and answer then passed.

Query VIII. Would it not be proper for the Annual Meeteng to adopt a form to be used by the elders installing a brother into the first and second degree of the ministry, so that all ministers would be installed in office by a uniform charge, as is done in regard to installing deacons. Article 4, the Minute of 1835?

Answer. The elder installing a brother in the first degree of the ministry, should give the following charge: The duties of a bother elected, while in the first degree of the ministry are not very enormous. The church authorizes him to exist and preach as an asistaot to the elder and older ministers as they may give him liberty to do. It is his duty, however, faithfully to attend the meetings of the church and when liberty is given to exhort or preach, and do it humbly, willingly and faithfully, as the Lord will afford him grace to do. But should it happen that none of the older ministering brethren should come to the regular appointment, then it will be his duty, and he is hereby authorized to conduct the meeting according to the usual order of the brethren, to the best of his ability, and to announce the regular oppointments; but he has no authority to make, or announce any appointments on his owo, or privite account. In case, however, he is called to preach on a funeral occasion, he is at liberty and he is hereby authorized to go and conduct the service according to the usual order of the brethren. And it is thought good that the elder, and older ministering brethren should be liberal in giving him liberty to preach, not always confine him to the closing service, or he may not so learn how to be a "workman approved of God that he need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The brother's name should now be announced, and he should be called to come forward, and ask before all to promise to conform to the general order of the brotherhood in dress and all matters of non-conformity to the world; whether he accepts the position into which the church purposes to place him; and whether he will so submit himself; and if he answers in the affirmative, the brethren will receive him with the right hand of fellowship and kiss of charity, and the sissters with the right hand of fellowship only.

And to advance a brother into the second degree of the ministry, the elder giving the charge may say, dear brother, (calling his name) the church having called you to the ministry, and on trial has confidence in your fidelity and integrity, now proposes to advance you to the second degree, and thereby your labors will be increased, and your duties will become more onerous, and will require a greater sacrifice on your part. The Church now authorizes you to appoint meetings for preaching according to the general order of the Brethren, to administer the ordinance of baptism, and in the absence of an elder to take the counsel of the church on the admission of an applicant for baptism, to serve the communion in the absence of an elder, or at his or their request if present, to solemnize the right of marriage according to the laws of the State and the usages of the Church. In brief, to perform all the duties of an ordained elder, excepting you have no authority to install officers in the Church, neither by giving a charge, as I am now doing, nor by laying on of hands in ordaining a brother to the full degree of the ministry. You have also no authority to preside in the council meetings of the Church in which official members of the church are to be dealt with. You have no authority to go into the acknowledged territory of any organized church to make appointments for preaching unless called by the elder or council of said church. It is an assumption of authority for an ordained elder to do so. But let it be understood that while the church now invests you with these rights and privileges, she still holds you to the apostolic injunction. "Ye younger submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud and giveth grace to the humble. —1. Pet. 5: 5—and will hold you amenable to her councils, and if you manifest an arbitrary, self-will and domineering spirit, the same authority which now gives you these privileges, will, if need requires it, suspend you and take from you all the authority she now gives you.

The brother should rise on his feet, and be asked to promise to conform to the general order of the brotherhood in dress and all matters of non-conformity to the world, and whether he accepts this positon, and whether he will submit himself; and if he answers in in the affirmative, the church should again receive him, as at first, with hand and kiss.

The Northeastern District of Ohio was called and the following paper was presented:

Is it wrong for the brethren to organize a class and have taught in their Meeting-houses, for singing, purposes if done in good order?

Ans. It is not wrong if the church is willing.

16. It would be an advantage to us in our churches and school-houses. It is necessary for us to improve in singing that when we come together to worship, we may worship together acceptably in singing as well as in everything else.

4. That query came from our District. We could not see anything wrong in it, provided the Church was willing. If the Church was divided about it, it would be wroog and cause confusion. But if the Church was willing to have the singing class meet there, we could not see anything wrong in it.

The answer from the District Meeting was passed.

J. P. Ebersole, from the Northwestern District of Ohio, presented the following paper which was tabled:

When a church has two or more meeting-houses, would it be proper for each to have a separate set of trustees? And who among the brethren should be required to act as trustees? And how should they be put into office?

Ans. One board of trustees consisting of three, is all that should be in one Church; and they should be elected by vote. Ministers and deacons may be exempt.

H. D. Davy, from the Southern District of Ohio, presented the following paper:

Inasmuch as the brethren when assembled in Annual Council in the year 1831 decided it not advisable for a brother to have his son educated in a college, "Inasmuch," they say, "as experience has taught that such very seldom come back afterward to the humble ways of the Lord," what will his District Meeting and our Annual Meeting say when a combination of brethren are trying to get up a high school for the more thorough education of the brethren's children and term it the "Brethren's School."

Referred to the Annual Meeting with the answer that this District Meeting does not consider it advisable for the brethren to establish such a school.

Other papers of a similar character were presented.

1. I have no objections to the passage of the answer to this query if it is merely advisory. I do not want it understood that the prosecutioo of the enterprise will subject the brethren engaged in it to the discipline of the church. While the decision of the meeting referred to, disapproves of us sending our children to college we have a decision of an Annual Meeting since that, that if the brethren privately enter upon educational enterprises, the Annual Meeting will not object to it; or something to that effect. I feel to-day, as I loog have felt, the propriety and the need of better educational facilities amoog us for the education of our children, while I do not feel that we can, with much propriety, go to the Church as a body, expecting it to enter upon the institution and organization of schools for the education of our children. I am not sure but this would be asking the church to do something out of its province, but brothers of the church have the undoubted liberty, and not only so, but they are in duty bound to make better facilities for the education of our youth than we now have. It would please me particularly well, if it would not in any wise be considered disrespectful to the churches, whence these queries come, to have them tabled, though I would much prefer that they be withdrawn by the churches themselves. If we can make the enterprise alluded to a success, let us do so, and then if anything is done in the school that is in violation of Christian principles, let such as violate these principles be called to account. That is my mind upon the subject.

5. I have no objection to giving our children a good common education, but I contend that we can do this without bringing such an institution under the control of the church. We have schools convenient to us in all our neighborhoods. But bear in mind, that there is danger, great danger to be apprehended from attempting to blend the institutions of the world with the Gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Colleges are institutions of the world, and not of our Lord Jesus Christ. If any speak let him speak as the oracles of God. I tell you brethren, no sooner will the church and the brethren have a school than it will be applied for the manufacture of preachers. Oh my dear hearers, why is it that we, in this fast age of the world, when our church is in great danger of departing from her first principles, why now suffer this new invention? What does brother Quinter mean by high education? You know, my brethren that there is danger here. We read in the book that not many great men, not many mighty men are called. Now I understand by great men, well educated men, for men of education generally fill the high places of the earth. Let us not go too fast in education. Oh brethren let us be simple, let us be child-like. Let us be firm and not give way to this dangerous movement now on hand. If we yield to this movement, it will not be long before there will be an eruption in the brotherhood There is something brewing now, in the brotherhood, and if these things are not checked, this brewing will become ripe. May God bless and protect us from these worldly movements that are now introducing themselves into the church. You will find if you look back through the history of the world, since the the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, that it is a very hard matter for a man who has a finished education, to deny himself and take up his cross and follow Jesus through evil as well good report. There are few persons who possess what is called a classical education, who will become fools for our Lord Jesus Christ as Paul tells us to do. The answers to the queries should be passed.

9. It seems to me that we must all see the necessity of giving our children a better education, and that, too, without going out of the brotherhood. But while I agree with brother Quinter, about the need of the school, I do not want it to be called in the name of the brotherhood. It is a private enterprise, and let it be so called. That the Annual Meeting granted some years ago. To that I am agreed, but I do not want the school to be called the "Brethren's School." That is all the objection I have.

The reading of the decision referred to was called for and the Secretary read from the records of the Annual Meeting of 1858 the following query and answer:

We desire to know whether the Lord has commanded us to have a school besides our common schools, such as the one contemplated in the Gospel Visitor. If we are ought we not to have it soon? And if it is not commanded of the Lord, ought we to have one? And is it right to contend for or against such an institution publicly through the press, since our different views may become a stumbling block before the world? And if it is once decided, ought we not to keep forever silent about it?

Answer. Concerning the proposed school in the Gospel Visitor, we think we have no right to interfere with an individual enterprise so long as there is no departure from Gospel principles.

26. While I lived in Northern Indiana, we had a school there in Northern Indiana called a college. I did not understand then whether God wanted a college in Indiana or not. It seemed as though he did not, and at last, I was one who saw it die. I was one of the men who helped to lay it out, I have a notion that God don't want any such school. I had that notion before reading in the press of the action of the brethren in Pennsylvania. I thought that the brethren had better not have their school, or else manage it very carefully. I

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

Now is the time to subscribe for the Pilgrim. We have run off a number of extra copies commencing the Report so that all new subscribers can get it complete. Only 80 cents from the beginning of the Report to the end of the year.

The Lovefeast at Berlin will be held on the 28th of June. Bro. Sharp of Tenn. is expected at the meeting and will remain several weeks and render some assistance relative to the school enterprise.

Bro. John J. Hoover of Marmaton, Barbour Co., Kan. Says, "the health of the community in general, is pretty good. The church is increasing slowly. The harvest being great and the laborers being few, we think we are doing remarkable well. We have had several additions since I last wrote. The weather is very dry and warm. Wheat is being injured some by the Chinch bug. Corn looks well. Peach crop will be light.

Bro. H. R. Holsinger writes us that he is now at work in soliciting funds for the school and is hopeful of success. We just here wish to disabuse the minds of those brethren who persist in calling it the Holsinger school. While he is justly and honorably identified with the first move, he claims no more control over the school than his bona fide subscription will entitle him to. The position he now holds was urged upon him, by the meeting, against his wishes and arrangements.

The California Excursion.—Since our notice of the California excursion we have daily inquiries in regard to it and who the projectors are. We are not positive who our informant was but think it was brother Wolf, a relative of Eld. Geo. Wolf of Cal. We here take the liberty to say to the projectors of the excursion, that if their number is not already full and wish some more, let us know the number yet wanting, from where they will start, and at what time. If such information is given us we will let it be known to those interested. Until such information is given, our readers will consider it as a private affair and that we have nothing more to give in regard to it.

A Medical Achievement.—Science has done much for the past, so much, some think, that the great future will soon be a barren field, but this is certainly a very great mistake as new fields for scientific investigation are being opened almost every day, and how far the hidden mysteries will be developed, time alone can tell. The following we have just read in one of our exchanges. We cannot vouch for its authenticity but give it as an item of news. If there has not been a real case there has, at least, been a conception of one which of itself demonstrates the scientific advancement of the age.

Medical science has achieved another triumph by an operation which was successfully performed in Chicago the other day. The event referred to was nothing less than the direct transfusion of blood from a lamb into the veins of a man in the last stages of consumption, a full report of which is published in the papers of that city. Twenty-five minutes after the operation the patient recovered so far as to regain his usual pulse and was feeling well. He conversed freely with his wife, who went in to see him, and appeared in excellent spirits. The operation is pronounced successful in every respect, and the final result will be watched with much anxiety by the medical profession.

A KEY TO REPORT OF A. M.

In compliance to the wishes of many of our readers who are praying us to give them some way of knowing the names of the speakers in our Report, we now inform all concerned that we are making a key, which will be published as soon as we get all the names, by which the names can be determined as readily as if they were inserted in the Report. We have carefully numbered each name. These numbers you will notice at the commencement of each speech, which will correspond with the name and number on our key. We give this notice so that all who wish to know the names of the speakers, can save their papers and send for the key, which will be ready to send out just as soon as we get all of the names. They will be sent to all who desire them on the following terms: One copy, 10 cents, 6 copies, 50 cents, 10 copies, 70 cents, and 20 copies $1.00.

A QUERY TO ANSWER.

It is nessary for every member to wash feet every time the Lord's Supper and Communion is observed?

The above query was presented to us by, we think, brother M. Nehr. At first we thought its design was to agitate the different modes of feet-washing and therefore did not give it any attention, but of late being assured that such was not the case we now lay it before our readers. The question as we now understand it, is can any of the ordinances or sacraments be participated in under any circumstances to divine acceptance, separately?

At present we feel too unwell to give the query a careful consideration, but by way of opening will suggest a few thoughts.

Each of the institutions belonging to the Lord's house has its special design and therefore are not interchangeable, that is one cannot be substituted for another. We believe the special and only design of feet washing is to ever keep before the mind of the Christian the great lesson of humility. The Lord's supper is the outgrowth of Christian sociability, liberality and equality—all one in Christ Jesus, and the Communion to be kept in perepetual remembrance, the price of redemption the sacrifice made to procure it.

In these are embraced the leading elemets of the divine life, and as the rainbow, placed in the clouds, brings to our remembrance God's covenant relative to the non-destruction of the earth any more by fire, so the observing of these ordinances bring to our remembrance the great principles which they intended to inculcate. Now if there is any position or circumstances in which it would be essential to have one of these principles brought to bear upon the mind of saint, independent of the others, their one might be participated in and the others be omitted. That there might or might not be such circumstance surrounding the saint in life it is not our purpose to prove or disprove. Whether a brother or sister might not participate under some circumstances, in the Communion without having the feet washed or partaking of the Lord's Supper is a grave question and we leave it for any others that may feel disposed, or prepared, to answer, but would say do not jump at conclusions.

FRIGHTFUL CALAMITY

A frightful calamity occurred on the 16th of May in Massachusetts, involving great destruction of property and the loss of many lives. On the upper waters of Mill river, a small tributary of the Connecticut emptying near Northamptoo, three large dams existed, to furnish water-power for numerous manufactories lining the banks of the stream. Between 7 and 8 A. M., one of these suddenly gave way, and the contained water rushing with fearful force down the narrow valley, swept over the villages of Williamsburg, Skinnersville, Haydenville, and Leeds, carrying away factories and dwellings with a large portion of their inmates, who had no opportunity to escape. Some efforts were made by riders on swift horses, to give the alarm in advance, but so rapid was the progress of the flood, that in many cases the first warning received was the roar of the torrent and the sight of an advancing wall of water over twenty feet high, carrying driftwood, buildings, rocks etc. The total loss of life cannot yet be accurately stated, but is believed to be about 150 persons; 110 bodies having been recovered up to the 18th. The destruction of property was also very great, careful estimates fixing the value at $1,000,000. Many who escaped with life were left homeless and utterly destitute, and the destruction of large manufactories throws many others out of employment. Contributions for relief have been made in the neighboring places, and aid is also going forward from Boston and other cities.—Herald of Truth.

A hail storm has done much damage to the crops and fruit in some portions of Huntingdon county. Hail fell in some localities that, it is said, measured six inches in circumference.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

A DUKE'S LESSON ABOUT DILIGENCE.

There was a German nobleman once, who disguised himself, and during the night placed a great stone in the middle of the road near his place. Next morning a sturdy peasant named Hahns came that way with his lumbering ox-cart. "Oh these lazy people!" said he, "there is this big stone right in the middle of the road, and will not take the trouble to put it out of the way." And so Hahns went on his way scolding about the laziness of the people.

Next came a gay soldier along. He had a bright plume waving from his helmet, and a sword dangling by his side, and went singing merrily on his way. His head was held so far back that he didn't notice the stone, so he tumbled over it, and fell with the sword between his legs. This stopped his song, and he began to storm at the country people round here, and call them "boors and blockheads, for leaving a huge rock in the road to break a gentleman's shins on." Then he went on.

Next came a company of merchants, with pads and pack-horses and goods, on their way to the fair that was to be held at the village near the nobleman's place. When they came to the stone the road was so narrow that they had to go off in single file on either side. One of them named Berthhold cried out, "Did any body ever see the like of that big stone lying here all the morning and no one stopping to take it away?

It lay there for three weeks, and no one tried to remove it. Then the nobleman sent round word to all the people on his lands, to meet at a deep cut in the road, called Dornthou near where this rock lay, as he had something to tell them.

The day came, and a great crowd gathered at the Dornthou. Each side of the cut was thronged with people over-looking the road, and there was a crowd at each side of the cut. Old Hahns the farmer was there, and so was Berthold the merchant. Hahns said "I hope my lord will find out now what a lazy set of people he has."

"Moses and Elijah! but it's a great shame," answered Berthold. And now a winding horn was heard, and the people all strained their necks and eyes towards the castle, as a splendid cavalcade came galloping up to the Dornthou. The nobleman rode up into cut, got down from his horse, and with a pleasant smile began to speak to the people thus:—

"My friends, it was I who put this stone here three weeks ago. Every passer by has left it just where it was, and has scolded his neighbors for not taking it out of the way."

When he had spoken these words he stooped down and lifted up the stone. Directly under it was a round hollow lined with pebbles, and in the hollow lay a small leathern bag. The nobleman held up this bag that all the people might see what was written on it. On a piece of paper fastened to the bag, these words were written:—"For him who lifts up this stone." He untied the bag, and turned it upside down, and out upon the stone fell a beautiful gold ring, and twenty large bright golden coins.

Then every body wished that he had only had diligence enough to move the stone instead of going round it, and scolding his neighbor. They all lost the prize because they had not learned the lesson, or formed the habit of diligence. And we shall loose many a prize, as we go on in life, if we don't form this habit. That bag of money was the promise of a reward to diligence. But that promise was hidden away under the stone so that no one could see it.

THE GOOD SHALL MEET IN HEAVEN.

I know many of you have often heard and read about the good as well as about the bad people in this world. How the good can be distinguished from the bad, and what will be the fate of each when they quit this life. So whilst I feel like trying to tell you something about this I have some fears that I shall fail to interest you. But when I think and am sure that this subject embodies in it a truth which we should reflect upon every day of our lives, that we cannot think about it too much or too often, providing we do so with a right mind, I take courage and ask your attention and that you will please reflect on this matter with me. This life we know is short. Some people live here only a few years, then they die and are gone. Some you know die quite young. Very many infants and children die before they get to be even five years old. Now are these children prepared to meet in heaven? Yes, the good shall all meet in heaven, and children are all good through Christ. It is true, the natures of all children is evil from their infancy and would not be good enough in themselves to go to heaven. But Jesus, our loving Savior lived here on the earth so pure and so holy without any sin in his nature, and then died and gave himself as a sacrifice to reinstate that which was lost by our first parents, and so became the means of restoring to God's favor, all children, having redeemed them from the curse of their sinful nature; making them all clean and pure through Christ and are therefore ready to go to heaven without any prayer or good deeds on their part, but when they live to grow old enough to know in themselves, right from wrong, they become accountable to God for all their actions.

Thus it is with you my dear young reader. As soon as you are old enough to do anything at all that you are conscious at the time, is not right, you sin against God and are therefore no more good enough to go to heaven except Jesus forgives your sins. But I am glad to tell you that Jesus is able and willing to forgive all of our sins if we are but willing to be very sorry that we have done wrong, and then to do as he bids us.

Bad or wicked people, you know, are those who live careless and unconcerned, and do not obey the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. As long as they are wicked they do not repent of their sins and believe in Jesus. They do not unite with the people of God and his church, to follow faithfully the commands of the Savior till death. It does therefore not profit them that Jesus became a Savior and opened a way, that they also could meet and dwell with the good in heaven. All who die in their sins must have their portion assigned them with the wicked, to meet with all the workers of iniquity, and with the great deceiver, the devil to dwell in outer darkness, where there is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth forever.

My dear young friends, let us all make the choice as early in life as possible to love and follow Jesus. Let us pray to him daily to keep us safe from wickedness, and help us give our hearts wholey to him, so that he can lead, guide and direct us, that we may all be made worthy to meet with the good in heaven. There we shall have the company of all the martyrs apostles, prophets, and all the redeemed that have gone before; all the holy angels, and above all we shall meet our blessed Savior Jesus, and God the Father, to behold our glorious countenance forever. Now I hope and pray you will all try, with me, to be good. For the good shall meet in heaven.—B. F. H.—Herrald of Truth.

CARYING A LADDER.

Did you ever see a person carry a ladder? He puts it on his shoulder, or it may be puts his head between the rounds and has one of the sides resting on each shoulder, and having it nicely balanced walks along. A man with a ladder is an interesting object in a crowded street. He looks at the end before him, but the end behind him he cannot see. If he moves the front end to get out of the way of a person, away goes the rear end just as far in the opposite direction, and the slightest turn of his body, only a few inches, will give the ends a sweep of several feet, and those in the way may look out for bruised hats and bumped heads, while the window glass along the street is in constant danger from the unseen rear end of the ladder. When a small boy, I was carrying a not very large ladder, when there was a crash. An unlukey movement had brought the rear end of my ladder against a window. Instead of scolding me, my father made me stop, and said very quietly: "Look here, my son, there is one thing I wish you always to remember; that is, every ladder has two ends." I never have forgotten that, though many, many years have gone, and I never see a man carrying a ladder or other long thing but what I remember the two ends. Don't we carry things besides ladders that have two ends? When I see a young man getting "fast" habits I think he sees only one end of that ladder, and that he does not know that the other end is wounding his parent's hearts. Many a young girl carries a ladder in the shape of a love for dress and finery; she only sees the gratification of a foolish pride at the forward end of that ladder, while the end that she does not see is crushing true modesty and pure friendship as she goes along thoughtlessly among the crowd. Ah! yes, every ladder has two ends, and it is a thing to be remembered in more ways than one.

Correspondence.

Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Editor:—

Let me relate to you some of our last Lord's day joys. Having met as usual for divine worship, three souls were made willing to unite with the children of God. After preaching, the congregation started for the river, where baptism was to be attended to, and passing the Campbelite, or Christian church, they fell in the procession, which made a long one. When we reached the river we had a large audience, and the three souls were baptized into Jesus Christ according to his appointment, baptizing into each name of the Holy Trinity. Solemnity, joy, and christian feeling pervaded the place, and after baptiism, a few appropriate remarks were made and the people retired in the best of order.

During the early part of Spring, brother John Filmore and brother Peter Lutz visited our church and preached for us. Brother John remained long enough among us to preach a number of times at each of our places of meeting with much acceptance, and, no doubt, convinced many persons of the importance and necessity of trine immersion to complete a christian baptism, and caused others to come likewise and inquire after the good old way. In order to put on Christ or to be baptized into Christ properly, we must first be baptized in the name of the Father, for no man can come to Christ except the Father draw him, and in the name of the Holy Ghost, in order to receive the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit, and likewise in the name of the Son who came to save us from our sins. Then by repentance towards God and faith in Christ as our only Savior, and baptism for the remission of our sins, we are brought into spiritual relationship with Christ our elder Brother. Having in this way put on Christ, we are to walk in him, that is, go on in the discharge of every known duty; live, and act as Christ did to the best of our ability, have that mind or spirit that is in Christ, for if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his. His Father told him what to do, and he done it. He left none of the law unfulfilled, and he has told us likewise what to do, and if we do not do it we are none of his.

Obedience is better than sacrifice, and if we have that mind, we will contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and that faith includes all the holy ordinances of God's house as well as watchfulness and prayer, and keeping ourselves from every appearance of evil, all of which will constitute our holy religion, the fruits of which will give us joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. Joys caused from other causes and derived from other sources may not be christian enjoyment. In order to have joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, we must do the commandments, and we will likewise have a right to the tree of life and enter through the gate into the City. G. W. BAKER.

Altoona, Iowa.

Dear Pilgrim:—

Our Lovefeast is now a thing of the past. We were not a little disappointed on the morning of the sixth, the first day of the meeting, when we saw the dark heavy clouds gathering up from the west. Soon the drops of rain began to fall thick and fast and on it continued to come till nearly ten o'clock when it ceased, and by noon many brethren, sisters, and friends had gathered together. When dinner was over the word was preached, and again in the evening, when we received many precious admonitions on self-examination. The exercises were then brought to a close and supper was made ready We then followed the example of our blessed Master in rising from supper and washing the saint's feet; then eating the Lord's supper and taking the communion, the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Redeemer. O, what joy is realized by the children when practicing the holy ordinances of the house of God! A joy of which the world knows nothing, nay, they cannot realize the happiness enjoyed by the faithful. Dear young friends, you who have fathers and mothers in Isreal, how can you sit back and see them following in the foot-step of Jesus and you not going with them? How can you bear the thought of being forever separated? But thanks unto our heavenly Father that some of you are wise unto salvation, and have made your peace, calling and election sure with God. To such I would say be faithful, and let your watch-word ever be onward and upward, and use your influence in bringing your associates to Christ. To you would I say as well as myself, let us not mind the scornings of a vain and wicked world. But let us follow the meek and lowly Jesus in all his simplicity. We know the world looks upon these things with hatred. They do not see them as we do. Why? Because they are aliens and strangers to the common wealth of Isreal. I will now bring my article to a close by telling you that we had the pleasure of seeing three more precious souls unite with the flock by being buried beneath the yielding waves and rise to walk in newness of life. One was a brother to the writer. So we are made to rejoice. I would yet say that our meeting was interesting. Hope the Lord will reward those dear brethren who labored in the ministry, and that we may be remembered in prayer. From your unworthy though well wishing young brother in Christ.

Mr. Moore:—

My letter was injured by misprints. I said, changed the day of rest—not Easter, also, do we make void the law, not, do we make void the Sabbath.

You state, "The fact in the case is, both days were observed by the apostles." Then why drop the Sabbath contrary to the apostolic example and Bible command?

Why did the apostles observe the Sabbath if it ended at the cross?

Paul reasoned in the synogogue for a year and six months. Acts 18: 4–11.

The first was a working day. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store." 1 Cor. 16: 2. Goods and supplies are laid in store. You neglect to notice that there is no mention of resting from labor on the first day of the week before A. D. 321. No command to keep the first day before Constantine's edict.

$500 Reward is offered in Oakland, Cal. to any person that will produce one text plainly stating either of the following points, namely:

1. A command for keeping the first day of the week holy.

2. That the first day of the week is a Sabbath day, a holy day, or a day of religious worship.

3. Giving any title of sacredness to the first day, any more than Monday or Wednesday.

4. That the disciples ever had a religious meeting in the day-time of that day.

5. That the disciples ever had more than one meeting, even in the evening, of the first day.

You assert again, that the Sabbath is a Jewish edifice without noticing that it is from creation and the Jews from Judah two thousand and three hundred years later. The Sabbath is a memorial of creation to others as well as the Jews. It is a Gentile edifice as well. "The Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath." Acts 13: 42—44. It is a christian edifice. "And as his custom was he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and stood up to read." Luke 4: 16. Christ is Lord of the Sabbath. Mark 2: 28. All things were made by him, the Sabbath included. John 1, 3—10. Heb. 1: 2. Col. 1: 16, 17. The Sabbath existed at the destruction of Jerusalem which was forty years after Christ. "Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Matt. 24: 20.

You quote Ignatius, "Keep the Lord's day as a festival." The festivity of those early apostates—Acts 20: 29, 30.—had nothing to do with the day of rest. Ignatius never mentioned the first day except in letters called spurious by first day writers. John Calvin calls all Ignatius' writings forgery.

You make an unsupported assertion about the day John had his vision. Remember John gave the Revelation of Jesus Christ Rev. 1: 1. If it was not the day Christ said he was Lord of—the Lord's holy day—how shall we know what day it was? The first was a festival—a day of mirthfulness and feasting, not a day of rest or religious worship. The Seventh is always called the Lord's day in the Bible. Rev. 1: 10. Compare Ex. 20: 8—11, Isaiah 58: 13, Mark 2: 28. CLARA MORRISON.

Dear Pilgrim :—

For the information of many brethren and sisters who requested me to give them a report of my visit to the West, and as it may give satisfaction to some of those with whom I formed an acquaintance, I will give a short sketch through the columns of the PILGRIM. I left my companion and little one in the hands of a good and all-wise Protector who feeds the young ravens that cry unto him, on the 20th of April, in company with brother Jacob Garst and wife, for Macoupin Co., Ill., arrived at Nashville on the night of the 21st at 2 o'clock. Here we had to lay over until next morning at half past six o'clock on account of the great excitement in the city about so many houses that were then submerged under water. On the next morning we could look over portions of the city, and all the low places were full of water. This city is in a rolling country, and low parts suffered on account of the high water. As we passed along we could see some chimneys, just the tops standing out of the water. Other houses only the roofs were visible, others were full of water to the second stories. Much damage was done, yet no houses were washed away. The water was back water from the Cumberland river. It was so full that it over ran its banks and spread over the country. From here we traveled for Louisville, Ky., crossing the Ohio at that point for North Vernon, Ind. This was out of our way, but we had to go that way on account of the high water. At North Vernon we got on the Mississippi & Ohio R. R. for St. Louis Mo., where we landed on the morning of the 23rd. From here we went to Macoupin Co., Ill., the place where the A. M. was to be. Remained there with the brethren. On our arrival at Girard we went to brother Jonathan Brubecker's, staid all night and next day rested. This was on the 25th and on the 26th, went to visit our relatives and acquaintances, and on the morning of the 27th, Sunday, we went to the brethren's meeting-house, Pleasant Hill, to meeting. Here we met many brethren and sisters who seem to be in order and very humble. Had two meetings with them that day. The minister's names of this congregation are. C. C. Gipson, D. R. C. Nead, Ariel Vaniman, J. W. Harshbarger, and Jonathan Brubecker. We then remained with the brethren some two weeks laboring with them in Macoupin and Montgomery counties, preached in Montgomery at Studebaker's school house, and in Girard in three of their churches, namely, the Baptist, Methodist and Universalist. We also had meeting with the brethren at West Auter church, and other places in the neighborhood. We also preached with the brethren at the Cherry Grove school house twice. The brethren in this part of the county are good and kind, but little pride among them. They contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Here I remained with the brethren some two weeks laboring with them, made many acquaintances, found them all good and kind, hope they will be rewarded for it at the resurrection of the just. Remained with the brethren until May 7th, then, in company with brother Jacob Garst, we took rail for Cerro Gorda, Piatt Co., Ill. On our arrival at Cerro Gorda and the vicinity of this place we saw many boulders, as they are called by the citizens of that country. They are large rocks, many of them as large as a corn shock. This was rather a curiosity to me. These rocks are all of the same appearance as the rocks upon the Stone and Bald mountains of North Carolina. I have examined them and I think that they have been carried or thrown upon the surface of this prairie by some volcanic eroption centuries ago, as they are not a native of that prairie country, and what is still more strange to me is, those large rocks on the surface and under the ground are found fragments of timber, which undoubtedly, at one day, was the surface of the earth, and has been filled up by floating masses of earth and drifts in other days, in all probability in the time of the flood. This, no one is able to tell, yet it is a great mystery to us, no wonder the apostle says, "Great is the mystery of godliness." These things only tell us that the ways of the Lord are past finding out.

When we arrived at Cerro Gorda, we walked to Bro. Joseph Hendrix's and staid all night with them, and in the morning of the 8th of May we dined with brother Jacob Bashore, a distant relative of ours. Then to brother John Metzgar and was then conveyed by him to the Union school house for meeting, returned again to brother Metzgar's. Brothers Metzgar and Hendrix are well known throughout the brotherhood as strong standard-bearers of the cross of Jesus. Remained all night with him and part of the next day, had a little season of profitable conversation, at least it was to me. Remained with him until the evening of the 9th, when we again returned to the Union school house to meeting, after which we were invited to go with brother John Blickenstaff and sister to their home. Here we also enjoyed ourselves very much. They are worthy members of the Church, zealous for the cause of our Master. It does us good to meet those whose conversation is about heavenly things. Remained with them all night, and on the morning of the 10th, was conveyed, by brother Blickinstaff, to the Brick Church at Cerro Gorda, had two meetings with them that day and formed some acquaintances. From there to David Frances, another standard bearer. After evening meeting, we were conveyed, by brother Leonard Wagoner, to the Milmine Church to meeting, staid all night with brother Wagoner, and on the morning of the 11th, visited some of the brethren. With brother Henry Kurtz for dinner. He is one of the ministers of the Milmine Church. Evening to Milmine Church to meeting. After meeting, was taken to brother David Koontze's, and on the morning of the 12th was conveyed, by him, to brother John Wines, one of the elders of the Okaw Church, staid with him for dinner, after which he conveyed us to the school house in which the brethren hold their meetings in the Okaw district. They talk of building a meeting-house at that place. It is now under contemplation. The ministers names of this Church are, Jacob Wagoner, Martin Nehr, Jacob Troxel, David Flory, John Wine, and Robert Edgecombe. After meeting, was conveyed to brother Wagoner's, and on the morning of the 13th was conveyed, by him, to Cerro Gorda to sister Sarah E. Greenawalt's, staid with her about two hours waiting on the cars to return to Macoupin. While with her, we enjoyed ourselves very much. She related her trials that she passed through before she came to the Brethren, and it was quite interesting. I insisted on her to give us a sketch of her experience through the PILGRIM, as it visits us every week. Truly we are glad to see it come, and I find it is visiting many good pilgrims about Cerro Gorda. It came to us in Tenn. too, and we are always glad to see it come. Hope it will continue its visits many years, bringing good tidings from distant lands.

We remained with sister Greenawalt till 11 o'clock, train time—got aboard for Girard, Macoupin Co., Ill. Arrived there at 7 o'clock same day. Remained with the brethren at this place till the Annual Meeting, preaching with them. Two were baptized, namely, Jacob B. Sherfy and Leoa Garst. After the Annual Meeting was over, I returned through Ohio with the brethren. Remained with them in Ohio one week preaching and visiting. Some of my relatives there were at our lovefeast—got acquainted with many brethren there. Seven were baptized while I was there. The churches in Ohio are in a prospering condition. I remained here till the 5th of June, when I was conveyed to Versailles at 3 o'clock on the morning of the 5th, when I got on the cars on my way to Tenn. Went by way of Indianapolis, Ind., Louisville Ky., Nashville, Tenn., to Chattanooga, then to Knoxville Tenn. I arrived at this point at 4 o'clock on the 7th of June, Sunday, had 100 miles yet home, and by 9 o'clock I expected to be in Jonesboro, my stopping point. On we went, passing one station after another until we passed Whitesville, Hawking Co. at Bent Creek, when all of a sudden a jam and cracking took place. One of the axles broke at the hinder part of the sleeping car throwing it off the track, turning it over, and that the next and so on until the coaches were all turned over. It was a frightful sight as the car I was in began to break and turn there was considerable screaming and crying. Carpet bags, shawls, hats, men, women and children all falling everywhere, glass and racks smashed to pieces, splinters flying in every direction. This was the work of a moment, and strange to say, in the midst of all this, no one was killed, but several were badly hurt and cut up,—hope that all will get well. It was only by the strong arms of Providence that we were not all killed. After the excitement was over and the the wounded cared for, we, all that could, got on the tender and went to the Rogersville junction, two miles east of the place of accident, where they telegraphed to the Western train that was then due at that point in half an hour, to bring all the hands on the road to care for the wounded and remove obstructions, and replace the road in running order. All was accomplished in two hours and all that could travel remained in the cars for their place of destination, and at 12 o'clock I got to my stopping place, walked three miles home and found all well. Thank the good Lord for his care over us and his heavenly protection. O how glad I am that we all escaped as well as we did, hope that this will be a warning to some to know that man has no assurance for his life. To think for a moment that men are merry, laughing and talking gliding along, and in a moment they may be hurried into eternity. Whether on land or sea, man knows not the day of his death. Well has the Savior said, "Watch ye therefore and be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." Watchfulness is necessary for all men and after all this, we should be very careful not to get asleep at our post. Let us always have the oil in our vessels for the bridegroom will surely come, and if we are not prepared will be left outside the door. Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven, but they that do his will.

As my article is getting very long and may be intruding upon the columns of the PILGRIM I close, hoping that many good brethren and sisters whom we have not mentioned will receive our thanks for their kindness to us during our sojourn with them. May the blessings of God remain and abide with us all. F. H. DOAE.

Brother Brumbaugh : —

Enclosed find the amount due for your ever welcome visitor to our home. I am truly thankful that you sent me the paper, for I don't know how we could have done without it as we have had no preaching in our neighborhood since we came out here. Brother Thomas Patton promised to come down and preach for us, but his family has been very sick and therefore he could not come. In his last letter he promised to come as soon as his family got well enough for him to leave home. Although we have no preaching yet we we are glad that we are not left alone in the world for God is with us in the sad hours of our trials, and also the PILGRIM makes its weekly visits to our home which affords us much religious enjoyment here in the far west. We have good neighbors and I think if we could have preaching here we could in a short time start a church. The ministers that do preach here seem to do it for the money, and not for the saving of souls, stop the pay and the hireling fleeth. We want such men as will preach the truth and that have the welfare of souls at heart.

The crops look well but it has been very dry here this spring. We had a very good rain here on yesterday. The corn is promising and if followed by a favorable season, will be good.

I wish to know whether Bro. John Rodgers of Dixon, Weet Co. is getting the PILGRIM. He is my father-in-law and have not heard from him since in February. If he gets it let me know. Bro. Brower is preaching in that district. Yours in Christ.

Dear Editors :—

This beautiful Sabbath

day there is no meeting and I find myself alone with God, my wife being absent, and as we never should be idle, as our time belongeth to the Lord, I ask my Redeemer, like Paul of old, "What wilt thou have me do?" and it came into my mind to write for the PILGRIM.

A few years ago, on a cold April day, on the banks of Jundar River, I made a covenant with God to serve Him and glorify his name forever, but as I now look back over the past I cannot hold back the bitter tears of regret, as I have so often broken that covenant and come short of my duty as thou knowest, O Lord. Thou knowest the hearts of all men and how prone we are to depart from the right and cleave unto the evil. Like a publican of old, I feel to smite my breast and say, "God be merciful to me a sinner." Brethren and sisters, let us often think of our covenant which we made. Let us be united together in the love of Christ and ever be faithful while on our pilgrimage to our heavenly home. The journey will be short, be faithful to the end.

FAMILY REUNION.

The following daughters and sons-in-law, and sons and daughters-in-law of brother John and sister Sally Garver, of Aughwick, Huntingdon Co., Pa, all met last winter on the same day, at the home of their parents, namely: Elizabeth (wife of Isaac) Lutz, Ill., Sarah (wife of Isaac) Myers, Nora Ill., Susan (wife of Peter) Ripple, Orbisonia, Pa., Nancy (wife of Enoch) Myers, Ill., George, Hill Valley, Pa., wife absent on account of sickness, Lydia (wife of Abram H. Lutz) Winslow, Ill., Rachel (wife of Daniel) Wharton, Newton Hamilton, Pa., John, Shirleysburg, Pa., Harriet (with her parents.) The Sunday before leaving for their homes those present attended preaching at the "Stone Meeting House" in Germany Valley, Huntingdon Co., Pa., and the daughters all sat on one seat, the mother at the head, and the daughters, according to age, (as named above) in regular order. The above are all members except the last three and hope they will soon follow.

This comprises the family of children, except Mary who has long ago gone to rest, while wife of Abraham Rohrer, Honey Grove, Pa.

THE TWO LIARS.

Do you know who is the father of lies? It is a creature called Satan. He was once a bright angel in heaven, but a long while ago he grew wicked, and God cast him down into a dark place called hell, and a great many other angels with him. Satan and his angels are called devils. They come into this world and do a great deal of harm here, and teach the people to be wicked. There are a great many ways of being wicked. One of these ways is lying. Satan told the first lie that was ever told in this world. He told it to the first woman whom God had made. Her name was Eve. God told Eve that if she eat the fruit of a certain tree she should die, and satan said she should not die. That was a dreadful lie. Eve ate the fruit and she died.

Now I am going to tell you of two liars who lived a long time after Eve was dead. They were a husband and wife. The name of the man was Ananias, and the name of the woman was Sapphira. They agreed together to tell a lie; this was the lie: They had a piece of land, and they sold it for some money; then they said to each other, "Let us take some of the money and give it to a good minister called Peter, and tell him to give it to the poor." Was not this a very good intention? Yes, it seems very good. But now hear the lie they meant to tell. "Let us make Peter think that we have given all the money we got for the land to the poor." Oh, this was the lie. They wanted to seem very good and generous, but did not like to part with all their money; so they made up their minds to tell a horrible lie. They might have kept all this money, but why tell a lie? Ananias went with part of the money to Peter and gave it to him for the poor. But Peter knew that he meant to deceive him, and he said unto Ananias, "Why hath satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghost, and to keep back part of the price of the land? While it remained, was it not thine own? And after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? Thou hast not lied unto me but unto God." As soon as Ananias heard these things, he dropped down dead. Everybody who heard of this death was very much afraid, for they knew that he had been struck dead by God for telling a lie. Some young men came and wrapped him in a cloth, and carried him out and buried him. His wife Sapphira did not hear what had happened to her husband. About three hours after his death, she came into the house where Peter was. Then Peter asked her for how much she had sold the land. And she said she had sold it for less than she really had, in hopes of making Peter think that she had given away all the money. As soon as she told the lie Peter said, "How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of them that have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out." Immediately she fell down at Peter's feet and died; and the young men came in and found her dead, and carried her out and buried her by her husband. So in one day these two liars died and were buried. If God were to strike all liars dead now, how many sudden deaths would take place! But God is very patient, and bears with sinners a long while, that they may have time to repent, and ask pardon. For God will pardon sinners if they ask him. Yes, he will pardon liars who wish to leave off telling lies. The reason he is so ready to pardon is, because he is kind, and merciful, and because he gave his only Son, Jesus Christ, to die upon the cross to save sinners from being punished. But there is a place to which all liars who are not pardoned will be sent in one day. It is a burning lake—not a lake of water, but a lake of fire. Satan, the father of all lies, will be cast into into it, and so will all his children, and all liars are his children. These are the words of God: "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." Rev. 21: 8. You can read about those two liars, Ananias and Sapphira, in Acts 5: 1-11.

THE YOKE OF CHRIST.

The Savior says, "My yoke is easy; and my burden is light," and those who have truly borne the yoke of Christ, have proven it to be true. If the Lord's requirements seem hard to us, and his service is tiresome, we may be sure we are serving another master. Some may think it is easy to give God half the heart and the world the other half, but they make a great mistake. They neither enjoy the pleasure of the world nor the blessings of God. If we love to tread the path of sin, he will not be with us, but if we go to him and confess our sins, he is ready to forgive. Of ourselves we can do but little. We are of a fallen nature and so often go astray. Think of this, dear young brethren and sisters when we are tempted to give up in discouragement, just think what he had to endure for us, yet we do so little for him. How unworthy we are of such a love, yet his love is unchangeable. How we ought to appreciate such a friend. He is our best friend. All other friends may forsake us, but he will never forsake us. If we have Jesus on our side, we need not fear. True, the Christian has many troubles and trials to endure, but it is all for the better.

Let us not see how little we can sacrifice for him, but how much. Let us be as shining lights to the world and not in our doings lead some one else astray. Many of us have been to communion. May it be one long to be remembered. How many of us have resolved that we will live nearer to God than ere we have done before? Let us be thankful that life is spared us, set our affections upon things above where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, that at the harvest time our garnered treasures may prove nothing but leaves, that in the end we may hear from our Master's lips the blessed words, "They have done what they could."

DIED.

BOLINGER. — In Yellow Paint Creek church, June 6, 1874, Anna S. daughter of brother John B. and sister Sophia Bolinger, aged 1 year, 5 months, and 27 days.

Little Anna was playing about the cistern where her father and brothers were at work and, unnoticed by them, she made a misstep and fell into the cistern striking her head against the stone as she fell, killing her instantly. Her brother saw her laying on the water and her father jumped in and got her out; but all efforts failed to bring her to life. Occasion improved by the writer, from Luke 18: 15, 16, 17.

JOHN J. HOOVER.

SALE.—In Plattsburg, June 9, 1874, Bettie, daughter of friend Lewis and sister Julia Sale, aged 11 years, 6 month, and 14 days.

The subject of this notice was horrible beyond that which can be told. Bettie was a bright little daughter of the above named parents, and was sent by her mother, on the 8th, to make a fire in the cook-stove to get supper, and finding it difficult to start, it is supposed, as there was no one near at the time, took a can of coal oil in order to hasten the work. The oil caught fire in the can and exploded saturating the poor girls clothes, set her on fire, and burned her clothes all off. Her mother hearing the can explode ran to her assistance with others close by, but could not extinguish the fire till it had done its work of death. The mother's hands were fearfully burnt fighting the flames to save her daughter. Doctors were called, but they could do nothing to save Bettie, as she was burnt all into a crisp. Her sufferings must have been beyond what can be told, yet with all this she would try to console her parents. She suffered thus for about seven hours, when she drew about her the drapery of her couch and laid down and died.

The funeral took place at 4 o'clock on the 9th, in the Methodist church in this city. The occasion was improved by brother Dan'l B. Gibson and the writer. Many friends came to drop the tear of sympathy with our friend and sister in their bereavement. They crave an interest in the prayers of the faithful everywhere. "We know not what a day may bring forth." In the bloom of youth to-day, cold in death to-morrow, therefore prepare to meet the Lord in peace when he comes.

have had some experience in the winding up of such an institution, and I know something about it. I searched the books of that college in Northern Indiana, from midnight till morning with no satisfactory results. The conclusion that I come to was, that I do not like high schools.

27. We are aware that the subject of a higher education for our children has been agitated in the newspapers, but they have failed to tell us the reasons why they think we need high schools. I have taken the articles and read them carefully, and searched for Scripture reasons upon that subject, but I have never found a single passage of Scripture quoted on the subject. If they have been there I have overlooked them. Nothing short of Scripture argument will convince me that it is necessary for us to have a high school.

6. "I have told you before, and I tell you now, even weeping, that many walk that are the enemies of the cross of Christ." I ask the attention of this large and interesting congregation, for a moment or two. Where are the mighty men? Where are the noble? Not amongst us. Not among the Brethren. Go to the Congress halls for the mighty eloquent men. You will find them there, and not amongst the Brethren. It will always be so. It has been so from the beginning. Our query makes no attack on the school. It simply asks that the school be not called "The Brethren's School." We may have a good reason for that query. In the case of the Gospel Visitor,—but there is no need of going over that. You remember that. We do not purpose to interfere with the school if it is not called "The Brethren's School." That is all we ask. How has the gospel been brought down to this time since 1800 years ago? By men who were finished scholars? No, never. I will venture to say from my little experience, that as good a gospel sermon as I ever had the pleasure of listening to in all my life, was preached by a brother of very moderate education, but it was preached by the aid of the Holy Spirit. That man cannot preach without the aid of the Holy Spirit. Now, an educated man, if he is a good speaker, can make a pretty, flowery discourse, which might pass for a gospel sermon by a person not examining it closely. When we look back and see the digressions from the old beaten pathway, marked out by the Savior, when we see the endeavors to evade the old, primitive cross, our hearts are pained. What class of men led the early church into Romanism? Was it the common class? No. It was those men who sought honor from one another rather than from God. There is no alternative in my estimate of things, but that a man must be born again before he can become a true disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ. What does he receive then? He receives the gift of the Holy Ghost to bring to your minds all things whatsoever Jesus both did and commanded. That is so, brethren, and no man will venture to deny it. A paid ministry will be the result of such schools and their higher education. If the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ are to bear the cross before a gainsaying and wicked world, don't let them be ashamed of it. Don't let them put on the appearance of the world. This is the last Annual Meeting I ever expect to attend and meet my brethren, and you may, on this head, excuse me for being a little more plain than I might be upon another occasion. How shall this congregation—Oh! look at the youth here to-day, springing up into manhood and womanhood! Shall we tell them, You cannot serve the present age without you have a finished education? No, the brethren will not say that, though the church is tending that way. How has the church sustained herself for the last eighteen centuries? Has she sustained herself? No, God has sustained her, and He can keep her now. God has blessed us far beyond our deserving, and has placed us in the most favorable circumstances of life. There is none to hinder us, or molest us, or make us afraid. May God forbid that we should turn aside from the old beaten paths. I thank God to-day, that limited as my education is, I understand the truth. I have been a member of the church for sixty years. I have looked at the church and noticed her during all that period of time. I see many marked changes that have taken place in that period of time. When I first entered into covenant with God, things now highly esteemed would not have been tolerated in that day in Eastern Pennsylvania where I was brought up. If we look back we note these changes. Oh! brethren, we don't bear the Root, the Root bears us. Let us not forget that. No charge can be brought against the foundation of the hope we preach. If it has been sufficient for 1800 years, why shall we now have education amongst us. Our children are now prone to wander. Why should we encourage this this tendency? Our children are very desirous to obtaining a standing in the world, and I am willing they should; but, oh! my brehren you can obtain no higher standard than Christ.

2. The brethren will keep to the point.

ITEMS.

The General Meeting of the Friends has been very largely attended, and the session has been one of unusual interest. The principal subject has been the establishing and maintaining Sunday Schools. This has been found indispensible if the Friends expect to keep a religious hold on their children. A society for the establishment of "First Day Schools" has been formed, and encouraging accounts were read for the formation of such schools all through the country.

The 37th aniversary of the American and Foreign Bible Society was held at the Fifty-third street Baptist church, May 14. The report of the Treasurer showed the total receipts to have been $8.282; the expenditures, $1.194. The report showed that during the year 1,272 Bibles, and 1,393 Testaments had been given to the destitute in this country, and that 626 Bibles, and 246 Testaments had been sold. The total number of copies of the Scriptures issued was 3,593. The committee appointed to confer with a similar committee from the American Bible Union, with a view to the union of the two societies, reported that a plan of union had been approved by the Boards of both societies; and after discussion it was voted to authorize their own Board to carry out the plan. The new society is called the "American and Foriegn Bible Union."

At the session of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod, June 1, a committee on the Order known as the Patrons of Husbandry, or Grangers, presented their report, which states that they emphatically and unequivocally condemn this and all other secret orders as ensnaring and deceptive and sinful in themselves as prejudicial to the best interests of society, and as a lawless and inefficient way of obtaining redress of grievances. They also recommend that the Synod enjoin it upon all sessions not to fellowship members of this or any other, and to warn all under their care to beware of the ensnaring influences of such organizations. The report was adopted by a unanimous vote.

—There seems to be a connection between High-churchism and intemperence. The banners of the conservative party in the recent elections in England bore such legends as "A National Church and a National Beverage"—namely the Establishment and beer; and that every election-pledged to the support of the ritualistic church, returned upwards of fifty brewers to Parliament. On the other hand, the recent Episcopal convention of Virginia, at Charlottesville, which unanimously passed a resolution condemning ritualism, and instructed the delegates to the General Convention to enter a protest there—this same convention, at the same time, also accepted a minority report on temperance, which provides as an amendment to the general rules, that any person making, buying, selling, or using as a beverage intoxicating liquor, shall be, upon conviction, debarred from membership in the church. This provoked an extended and warm discussion, but it passed by the expressive vote of 335 to 38.

DISEASES OF THE BLOOD.

"The Blood is the Life." When this source is corrupted, the painful and sorrow-producing effects are visible in many shapes. The multifarious forms in which it manifests itself, would form subjects upon which I might write volumes. But as all the varied forms of disease which depend upon bad blood are cured or best treated by such medicines as take up from this fluid and excrete from the system the noxious elements, it is not of practical importance that I should describe each. For instance, medical authors describe about fifty varieties of skin disease, but as they all require for their cure very similar treatment, it is of no practical utility to know just what name to apply to a certain form of skin disease so you know best how to cure it. Then again I might go on and describe various kinds of scrofulous sores, fever sores, white swellings, enlarged glands, and ulcers of various descriptions; might describe how virulent poison may show itself in various forms of eruptions, ulcers, sore throat, bony tumors, etc., but as all these various appearing manifestations of bad blood are cured by a uniform means, I deem such a course unnecessary. Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the great fountain of life, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution, will all return to us. For this purpose Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Purgative Pellets are preeminently the articles needed. They are warranted to cure tetter, salt rheum, scald head, St. Anthony's fire, rose rash, or erysypelas, ring-worms, pimples, Blotches, spots, rough skin, Eruptions, sore eyes, pustules, boils, carbuncles, scurf, scrofulous sores and swellings, fever sores, white swellings, tumors, old sores or swelling, affections of the skin, throat and bones, and ulcers of the liver, stomach, kidneys and lungs.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been, the Apostolic method. POETRY.

WALKING WITH THE WORLD.

BY MRS. MATILDA C. EDWARDS.

"Woe to them that are at ease in Zion."

The Church and the World walked far apart,
On the changing shore of Time,
The World was singing a giddy song,
And the Church a hymn sublime.
Come, give me your hand, cried the merry World,
And walk with me this way;
But the good Church hid her snow hands,
And solemnly answered nay.
I will not give you my hands at all,
And I will not walk with you,
Your way is the way to endless death,
Your swords are all untrue.
Nay, walk with me but a little space,
Said the world with a kindly air,
The road I walk is a pleasant road,
And the sun shines always there;
Your path is thorny rough and rude,
And mine is broad and plain;
The sky above is always blue,
No want, no toil I know;
The sky above you is always dark,
Your lot is a lot of woe.
My path, you see, is a broad and fair one,
And my gate is high and wide,
There is room enough for you and for me
To travel side by side.

Half shyly the Church aproach the World,
And gave him her hand of snow,
The old World grasped it and walked along,
Saying in accents low:
Your dress is too simple to please my taste,
I will give you pearls to wear,
Rich velvets and silks for your graceful form,
And diamonds to deck your hair.
The Church looked down at her plain white robes,
And then at the dazzling World,
And blushed as she saw his handsome lip,
With a smile contemptuously curled.
I'll change my dress for a costlier one,
Said the Church with a smile of grace;
Then her pure white garments drifted away,
And the World gave in their place,
Beautiful satins and shining silks,
And roses and gems and pearls:
And over her forehead the bright hair fell,
Crisped in a thousand curls.

Your house is too plain, said the proud old World,
I'll build you one like mine;
Carpets of Brussels and curtains of lace,
And furniture ever so fine,
So he builds her a costly and beautiful house,
Splendid it was to behold;
Her sons and her beautiful daughters dwelt there,
Gleaming in purple and gold.
And balls and shows in her halls were held,
And the World and his children were there.
And laughter and music and feasts were heard,
In the place that was meant for prayer
She had cushioned pews for the rich and great,
To sit in their pomp and pride;
While the poor folks, clad in their shabby suits,
Sat meekly down outside.

The Angel of Mercy flew over the Church,
And whispered: I know thy sin,
The Church looked back with a painful sigh
And longed
To gather her children in.
But some were off at the midnight ball,
And some were off at play,
And some were drinking in gay saloons,
So she quietly went her way.
Then the sly world gallantly said to her,
Your children mean no harm,
Merely indulging in INNOCENT SPORTS,
So she leaned on his proffered arm;
And smiled and chattered and gathered flowers,
As she walked along with the World,
While millions and millions of deathless souls
To the horrible gulf were hurl'd.

Your preachers are all too old and plain,
Said the gay world with a sneer;
They frighten my children with dreadful tales,
Which I like not for them to hear;
They talk of brimstone, fire and pain,
And the horror of endless night;
They talk of a place which should not be Mentioned to ears polite.

I will send you some of the Beecher stamp,
Brilliant, gay and fast,
Who tell them that people may live as they list,
And go to heaven at last.
The Father is merciful, great and good,
Tender true and kind;
Do you think he would take one child to heaven,
And leave the rest behind?
So he filled her house with gay divines,
Gifted and great and learned,
And the plain old men that preached the cross,
were out of her pulpits turned.

You give too much to the poor, said the World,
Far more than you ought to do,
If the poor need shelter, food and clothes,
Why need it trouble you?
Go, take your money and buy robes,
And horses and and carriages fine,
And pearls and jewels and dainty food,
And the rarest and costliest wine.
My children they dote on all such things,
You must do as they do, and walk in the ways
That they are walking in.

Then the Church held tightly the strings of her purse,
And gracefully lowered her head,
And simpered, I've given too much away,
I'll do sir as you have said.
So the poor were turned from her door in scorn,
And she heard not the orphan's cry,
And she drew her beautiful robes aside,
As the widows went weeping by,
And the sons of the world and the sons of the Church,
Walked closely hand and heart,
And only the Master who knoweth all,
Could tell the two apart.

Then the Church sat down at her ease and said,
I am rich and in goods increased,
I have need of nothing and naught to do,
But to laugh and dance and feast.
And the sly World heard her and laughed in his sleeve,
And mockingly said aside,
The Church is fallen, the beautiful Church,
And her shame is her boast and pride.

The angel drew near to the mercy seat,
And whispered in sighs her name,
And the saints their anthems of rapture hushed,
And covered their heads with shame,
And a voice came down through the hush of heaven,
From Him who sat on the throne:
I know thy works, and how thou hast said,
I am rich, and hast not known
That thou art naked, and poor and blind,
And wretched before my face,
Therefore from my presence I cast thee out,
And blot thy name from its place.

Grape Hill, Va., Jan. 3, 1874.

The Grace of God.

John Dickinson was a farmer in the parish of Ratho, near Edinburg, and was for a long time negligent and irreligious. It pleased God to take away his wife, and it became necessary for him to have a nurse in the house, who happily was a pious woman.

When his infant daughter was about twenty months old, she was in the room with her father and several of his profane companions. Most unexpectedly the child repeated, in its infantine tones, "O, the grace of God!" an exclamation she had often heard from her nurse. The attention of the father was thus excited, the Holy Spirit led him to deep and serious reflections, and thus was his conversion to God effected.

DO THE best thou knowest, to-day. Shrink not from frequent error in this gradual, fragmentary state. Follow thy light for as much as it will show thee; be faithful as far as thou canst, in hope that faith will presently lead to sight. Help others without blaming their need of help. Love much and be forgiven.—Margaret Fuller.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting held in Macoupin County, Illinois, on May 26 and 27, 1874.

That is, about the school being called "The Brethren's School." Remember now that this is the question and don't wander from the point. The question is not whether we shall allow the brethren engaged in this school to continue it, but whether they shall be allowed to call it the "Brethren's School."

10. I did not think that this thing would come up here. I have raised nine children and have schooled them well. I have schooled them in two languages, English and Dutch, and I never heard any objection that I did not give them schooling enough; but they did not go to the high school, and I once heard a man, who knew several languages, say that they were not worth much to him.

2. The brethren must keep to the point under discussion.

18. The point under consideration, if I understand it, is the objection to the school being called "The Brethren's School." Well we are all agreed on that point that it ought not to be called "The Brethren's School," and if there is nothing objectionable to the school as a private enterprise, I cannot see any objection to the passage of the answer to the query. If there is no objection, let the papers be passed. Certainly it is not right for a few brethren to get up a private school and call it "The Brethren's School." That certainly ought not so to be, but there can be no objection to a few brethren joining together to organize a good school when their children and the children of their brethren could obtain a good education without going outside of the influence of pure and honest Christian doctrine. There is an evident reason why our children educated in the schools of the world do not come back to the meek and lowly ways of Jesus Christ. It is because they have to go to school elsewhere than in the schools of the brethren. In this school, as I understand its aim, the principles and doctrines Jesus Christ will be taught as well as worldly branches of knowledge. Now, in regard to an education,—of course the idea of reading the Scriptures and gaining knowledge out of the Scriptures belongs to the Christian man. Every Christian man will want to do that. But the idea of reading and understanding the Scriptures is one thing and the means of conveying the knowledge that you have obtained to the people, is another and a different thing. Let us not deprive ourselves of the means of acquiring a a proper medium for conveying our ideas to the people. For this purpose we need a school, and a good school. I feel the need of such a school myself. I do not see any thing in the way of passing the papers.

24. I believe, brethren, that this school is a private enterprise, and is understood as being such, and is called such, we have none of us any objection. If they do any thing in their school that is wrong, we can see to it. The idea is this: whether the brethren have a right to start a school as a private enterprise and then call it the "Brethren' School." I think not and I believe we all think not. But if it is only a private enterprise, let it go on and if it goes wrong, we can stop it.

28. If the school is really right, why not make it and call it "The Brethren's School?" If we in Ohio manufactured spurious liquors, you would attend to us pretty quick, and if this school is spurious, it had better be attended to.

13. As long as individuals do not interfere with members of the church you have no right to hedge up their way before them, but no set of individual members of the Church has a right to name a private institution, which they may originate, after the whole church as though it belonged to the whole church and the whole church was responsible for it. Never let this school be called "The Brethren's School." If you knew the grief in Indiana about Salem College, you would not wonder that I speak so earnestly. The brethren became responsible for the college, and soon $7,500 was needed to pay for the college. Let your institution in Pennsylvania be private, and brethren never lend your name as security to such a private institution, or you may have money to pay. We are in trouble now on that account and are trying to get out of it. I do not want to impose any restrictions not in accordance with right and justice, but I do not want the church involved in these things.

20. There seems to be a difference of opinion in regard to this thing. The query in my mind is this: Much we all agree to, and on one point is that the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was given in plain, simple terms, easy to be understood. Now, if Christ meant just what he said, and if he said just what he meant, did he give it in such a way that a plain simple man cannot understand, especially when enlightened by the Holy Ghost? Oh, no, we do not allow that. It was given so plainly and simply that the man of the least education can understand it. What is the need then of these high schools and colleges? Why not advise the brethren to stop such schools and so stop all troubles connected with them; as the brethren say that their colleges do cause trouble. There is a disposition amongst us of desiring to be somebody of importance in the world. If it is necessary that our ministers should have a preparation, something more than our ordinary schools can give, it is just as necessary to send our congregation there too.

29. It seems to me that there is no brother or sister but would say that it is wrong to call a private interest—to call a private school, the Brethren's interest, or the Brethren's school. Now, where is the propriety of arguing the case any further? Let us put the question to a vote and decide it.

The secretary then read the answer over again, as it had been amended. It then read as follows:

Ans. Referred to Minutes of Annual Meeting of 1855, Query 51; but the brethren shall not call the school "The Brethren's school," or by any other name that would involve the grand Brotherhood.

5. I object to the passage of the answer. I object to it.

13. I move to table it and fall back on the former answer.

3. I object to tabling it, for that leaves the brethren who are going to found the school the privilege of calling it "The Brethren's School."

1. I think I can remove the brother's difficulty by a word or two.

3. I object to tabling it, and the reason is—

1. I can help the brother out of his difficulty.

3. Well, if you do it brother James, I will take my seat.

1. I think I can do it. Does our brother—do our brethren remember that there are brethren who are friends of the school, whose hats may not be as low in the crown as some other hats, and whose coats may not be cut as round as some other coats, but who nevertheless have the love of God and the love of the Church, and the love of the brethren in their hearts, and I feel well assured that if it becomes known to these brethren, that the name, "The Brethren's School," causes all this trouble and offends some brethren, they will at once cheerfully withdraw the name. I am sure they will not hesitate to do so when they see that the name is objected to. I have no doubt, from what I know of the character and desires of the brethren interested in this cause, that the name of the institution will be changed when it comes to be organized.

3. I want to be distinctly understood. I have great confidence in brother James but I object the tabling it, for it leaves them the right of using the name of the Brethren in connection with their school. If brother James will will pledge himself, that the name shall not be used, I will cheerfully consent—

1. I do not pledge myself to a change of name, I cannot do that of course. But I pledge myself to use my influence, what little that may be, and to do all in my power to have the name changed.

3. No, that does not satisfy me. If you will pledge yourself to change the name—

1. Oh no, I cannot do that.

3. Well, then, instead of tabling it let us change the motion a little. Let us refer to the former decision, and re-affirm that that decision, adding that the brethren interested in this school shall not be allowed to name it "The Brethren's School." Let us re-affirm the old decision first and then decide that they shall not use the name of the Brethren for their college.

—— If the Church needs a school of this kind, why does she refuse to allow her name to be used in reference to this school and then aid the brethren who have undertaken it.

13. The young minds in this assembly may be more in favor of the school, while the old brethren are opposed to it. Some may think that the school is needed to help forward the cause of Christian education and Christianity. Other brethren think that Christianity needs no such help. Other brethren still are not opposed to the school, but merely to calling it "The Brethren's School." Why not all yield a little then, and drop the name that gives offence, but let the school go on? Why not decide simply that they shall not call it "The Brethren's School," and let it go on as that?

18. How are you going to prevent its being called "The Brethren's School." In the first place, it is a school, and in the second place, it is owned and managed by the Brethren, and when people ask what school that is, how are you going to prevent their saying, "That is the school of the Brethren, or the Brethren's School?"

The Secretary now read again the answer that was finally passed. It was as follows:

Ans. Referred to Minutes of Annual Meeting of 1858, Query 51; that the brethren shall not call the school "The Brethren's School," or by any other name that would involve the grand Brotherhood.

2. The brother has asked how we will prevent the school's being called "The Brethren's School." I will say in reply that the design of the answer just read is to prevent its being called so by the brethren themselves. We cannot help, of course, what outsiders call it. The world will call it what it chooses and we cannot help ourselves, but the brethren, who found the institution, will not be allowed, if this answer passes, to name the institution "The Brethren's School." I will say another word or two. When I was ordained, I promised that I would not bring in anything new into the church, and I mean to stick to my promise. I think we had better proceed carefully in our educational plans.

Another reading of the answer being called for, the Secretary read it again.

30. If I understand the feeling of the brethren, they don't want it called "The German Baptist School," either?

A voice.—You can't help people saying, "That is the Dunkard School, or that is the Brethren's School."

The answer last read, was then passed.

From the Southern District of Ohio came also the following paper:

Would it not be best if the brethren at the Annual Meeting would say to whom the Minutes shall be given to be printed?

Ans. The Minutes should be read at the close of the meeting, and conference should say by whom they should be printed and thereby prevent any suspicion.

Some one made a motion to table it.

5. I object to the tabling of the query. I can see no harm in the reading of the Minutes at the close of the Meeting. What wrong can there be in our saying by whom the Minutes shall be printed?

13. What advantage can there be?

5. Brethren have before advised in this matter. If any mistake occurs, and the Minutes are read at the close of the meeting, the mistake may be corrected and the Minutes ratified. After that there can be no question. Disputes as to the accuracy, cannot then arise. That is why I would do it.

On motion the paper was tabled.

From the same District came also the following paper?

This District Meeting, being assembled in the name of the Lord, feels the necessity of petitioning our Annual Conference to take measures, or provide some means by which those of our brethren who encourage high schools among us, and other things, to disturb the peace and union of the Brotherhood, may not be selected or appointed to be at the head of business at our Annual Meetings.

4. Who is it? Who is the man? Is it brother Davy, or brother Quinter, or myself?

A second reading was called for, and the query was read again.

5. I believe that the reason for getting up this query is this: The brethren at the head of the business should be examples to the whole brotherhood. Hence, if they will encourage a common harm and a common danger, and disturb the peace of the brotherhood, with these new movements, they should be called to an account for it, and be made to confess that they have

13. If they have done anything wrong let them be called to account in the proper time and place. This is certainly a new movement. No query of this kind was ever presented here before. You may just as well table it first as last. You can never carry it.

1. My position is not a very desirable one and the work is not very easy, but I am willing to bear all that is upon me, and God knows that there are others who disturb the peace of the brotherhood as much as those who are in favor of high schools. Don't forget that.

On motion the query was tabled.

From the same District came also the following paper:

We desire a reconsideration of the query (14) that was passed through the District Meeting and the Annual Meeting last year. The query was, Whether the Committee should not have the right to say who should pay the expenses of called committees—the one that called them, or the Church in which the difficulty exists? And it was decided that the committee should have the authority.

16. Seems to me that the brethren who form the Committee can say who ought to pay the expenses of the committee. I believe that the meeting is entirely satisfied with last year's decision.

7. I am not entirely satisfied. I cannot see that the committee must necessarily do just what is right in this matter, and a temptation may come up in the minds of the committee. Every one who wants a committee gets one, under present arrangments. Now here is where a temptation may come up in the minds of the committee. For instance, a member of the church loses his all and becomes a very poor man. He calls for a committee, thinking that injustice has been done him. His request is granted and the committee is called. The committee investigates and finds that the church is not in the fault, but that the individual member is in the fault. Well, now the question arises who shall pay the expenses of the committee. Of course, the committee wants its expenses paid. It is impossible for the party who calls for the committee to pay its expenses. The church is not in the fault, and yet the expenses must be paid; and, seeing the privilege is in the hands of the committee to say who shall pay the expenses, the committee, of course, looks to the church, the innocent party to pay the expenses.

13. Do you have such a case?

7. We had such a case in a neighboring district.

22. Sometimes when persons know that the expenses will be paid by the church anyhow, it encourages them to make expenses.

31. Suppose that a person of some means has been dealt with by the church and that he has been found in fault, but he desires a committee and a committee is called at his request and it finds him in fault and the church blameless. If the committee lays the expense on the man how can they collect it? They have no way of collecting it and hence they are tempted to lay the expense where it can be collected and that is on the church. Old brethren can be tempted in this way as well as young brethren.

32. Let us wait for a case, and until one comes up let us leave the matter of settling who shall pay the expenses, where it was, and that is in the hands of the committee.

7. We have had a case, and if the brethren want a case they will find one very soon. The expenses of a committee will be found to be generally laid upon the church, though the church may be decided not to be in fault.

25. I am sorry to differ from my brethren, but the question has certainly two sides to it. Suppose that a committee is sent to a certain place, and the party asking for the committee is too poor to pay the expense of a committee. You would not deny a brother the privilege of a committee simply because he was poor. The committee is sent and after a fair investigation finds that the party asking for the committee is in the fault. The party cannot pay the expenses' and so the committee lays the expenses on the innocent party, or, in other words, the church. That may seem at the first glance a little hard and perhaps hardly right. But suppose the committee should not get their expenses, how would that look? They would have to leave their business and spend their own time and money in serving the interests of the church and then get nothing to pay them back just the money they have spent. Which would seem to be the fairer, to have a church of two or three hundred members bear the expense when the amount which each one would have to pay would be very little; or to have the expense all fall on the five or six men who form the committee, men too who have already given their time and left their business in the service of the church? I do not think that the people of our church would send them home without paying their expenses. It is difficult to make a rule that shall seem equally fair all around, but I do not think that you can improve the rule we now have.

24. Let us wait for a case. Let us not dispose a trouble till we have it on hand. You cannot better last year's decision.

33. I do not think you can better the decision of last year. However you change it, it will still be burdensome to some party. I am sure you cannot do better than abide by that decision.

On motion the decision of last year was re-affirmed.

From the same district came also the following paper:

Will Annual Meeting state what relations are meant by nearest relations in Minutes of Annual Meeting 1838, Article 8?

Ans. Father and mother, brother and sister, son and daughter and their companions, and husband or wife, as the case may be of the accused.

From Northern Illinois came up a query on the same subject.

8. The trouble originated in the church up North. When we had a church trial and asked the relations to go out they said they were not used to that way of keeping house. They said they were unwilling that any relations should withdraw. I was called there last winter and I wanted them to withdraw. They said that they had no such relations. They said that they knew no man after the flesh. I did not want any hard feelings and so when any such thing came up I brought it before the church, but the church was not satisfied without the sanction of the Annual Meeting, so we brought it here. And that is the way it came to be here. That is the trouble that caused the query to come here. Some of the nearest relations refused to withdraw and they said that the nearest friends should cast the first stone. That is the reason why this thing is here, and now if you can help us out of our trouble, I am glad of it. I want to say more than this, that there is quite a difference in the way of house-keeping amongst the brethren. That is the trouble. We ought to all keep house-alke. I believe it would be better to have none of this difference. It would be better to have a settled rule, and then there would be no trouble. As it is now, when I tell my people that they have no right to have their nearest relations in at a trial, then they make trouble. If we could have one rule in our housekeeping then we would have no trouble.

4. I think it would do well enough in congregations where the accused had only a few relations, say only one uncle and aunt, one brother and sister, and one or two children, but there are cases come up for trial where if this rule was enforced nearly the whole church would have to withdraw. In such cases of course the strict enforcement of such a rule is impracticable. It seems to me that there is no need of so strict a rule. Relatives will see the justice of a decision when it is just, often as well or better than entire strangers. I have known children to withdraw when their parents were on trial and when they returned and the decision was made known to them they assented to it as just and reasonable. Even children can see the propriety of judgement in the case of an offending father. I believe that there is a truth in the remark that as Christians we know no one after the flesh, and the remark has a just application here.

10. The husband or wife of the accused party should go out during a trial, but nobody else. That is my judgement. I do not see any need of making the rule go any farther.

8. We want union in the church and union in the house-keeping. That is what we want, and it is because we have not that, that we get into this trouble. We want one rule all through the brotherhood and one way of house-keeping. Now in regard to the brother's assertion that we know nobody after the flesh. It seems to me that it was not meant to apply to such a case as this. I was brought up and taught that the near relations must withdraw when a member was in council. That is the way I was brought up. But I am willing to let that go and let the relatives stay if the council makes such a rule, but let us all have the same rule and keep house alike, and then we will have no trouble.

9. The apostle says that "all things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient." So while we have the rule and can enforce it to the full extent when it is thought best, we can and ought to use judgement in determining how many shall go out. We should have judgement in such cases, and where the rule would require almost the whole church to retire, we should decide who should withdraw. We can all of us use judgment in applying the rule.

21. Now I want to talk a little, I have not said much in the meeting yet. This rule, that when a member comes before the council, all the near relatives, the father, mother, brother, sister, husband and wife and children, must retire, is the rule that we have been taught in Ohio. It has always worked well with us. We have got to have a rule on that subject, and a rule that shall be applicable to the whole church. Our practice under it ought to be alike. There is no use of talking. The cases may be somewhat different in different parts of the country, but we must have a rule that is so simple that it will apply to all of them; and we must have the same rule. It will not do to have one rule for one part of the country and another rule for another. It will make confusion. One rule, the rule that we have been taught as the rule of the church, has been that the father and mother, son and daughter, brother and sister, and their companion must withdraw. That is the way we have been house-keeping in Ohio, ain't it brother Henry? You must have a rule brethren that will apply everywhere. I am willing if the last rule will do, to keep that rule, but whatever rule you adopt you must make it the same everywhere. If you do not, you will have confusion. We want unanimity and we must have it.

28. In some churches under my care, the rule would compel two-thirds of the church to withdraw Then there would be a difficulty in proceeding.

12. I have been accused a little, by my brethren, as an elder, in not taking a position to act in the case of my own brother. You may, by your decision here, help us out of that difficulty. This going by the opinion that we should know no man after the flesh is becoming prevalent in the church, and if the meeting will settle the question now, it will help me right smart here. I will have to explain to the brethren who were not satisfied that I did not conduct the trial myself, but if this meeting passes a decision, I will have something definite to go by.

25. I have listened with interest to the remarks of brother Ebersole, and I want to say that that is the way that we have ever kept house. The resolution of the brethren is to ...ntinue in the way they have been ...ght and obey the rules of t he ...rch. The query mentions uncle ...d aunt, but we have never carried ...se far as that. We have never ...ade an uncle or aunt go out when a member was before council.

27. It was decided by a previous Annual Meeting that a father, a mother, a sister, a brother, a son, and a daughter, and their companion should withdraw, but in the face of that decision some say that relations should not withdraw. Some say that the nearest relation must cast the first stone, but I would ask if it is not reasonable to expect that the nearest relation would take sides with the accused, and in that case no stones would be cast.

18. There has been much discussion on both sides of this question, and the result of the discussion is such as to impress on the minds of most of us this fact, that the old rule answered well enough, except in certain cases where the relations of the accused party were very numerous. Of course there are exceptions to all rules, and in my opinion we cannot do better than to keep the old rule, with the understanding that in cases where the rule would exclude too large a number, the church shall decide who shall withdraw.

21. That will do. We must have the same rule everywhere, and then we must keep house alike everywhere. We must have one rule for all cases, and make it so simple that it will cover all cases, and then we must live up to it and keep house by it. In that way we will avoid confusion.

2. We have erased from the answer the words "uncle and aunt," as that seems to be the common consent of the meeting. Certainly the original rule did not include "uncle and aunt." I think brethren that we ought to have a definite rule on this subject, and when we have it we should live up to it.

17. If a husband or wife has offended, then let the other go out; or if the children have offended, let the parents go out. That, it seems to me, is the intention of the rule. But it does not include uncles and aunts.

On motion, the answer as amended was passed.

The following paper, from the same District, was read:

As the brethren, for several years past, have been in the habit of erecting a stand at our Annual Meetings, for a few of the elders to sit on, and as such stands, or elevations, are rather offensive to some brethren—being something new among us, and is calculated to encourage the erecting of stands and pulpits in our meeting-houses, will not this District Meeting petition our Annual Meeting to put them away, and thereby set an example which the churches may in humility imitate?

Answer. We do ask the Annual Meeting to consider this matter and put them away.

A similar paper was presented from Illinois.

13. Brethren, if you understood physiological law you would not pass that answer. You do not want your brethren who are to speak to you down and the others up. The heavy air from the lungs and the bodies of these about your speakers, settles down upon them. It is because of the inhalation of this impure air from adjacent lungs and bodies that speakers so soon get hoarse. Suppose a brother wants to talk in a dense crowd like this! He is down among a mass of human bodies and as he speaks he must with each inflation of his lungs, inhale the exhalations of the mass of bodies around him, and as a consequence, the act of speaking is painful and he soon becomes hoarse. It is healthier for yourspeakers, as well as pleasanter for them, to be up on a platform above the people whom they are to address. Some of the men who speak have weak lungs and need purer air than others. Pure air to them is an essential, therefore just and proper, and in harmony with physiological laws. I am not afraid that any physician will successfully contradict that. Again, you want the speaker up where you can see him. You can hear him better, and your eyes help your ears to understand what he says. I have been very sorry that the brethren have put us down here. We have got along very well, but it would have been better if we could have been higher up. Don't pass such a decision as the one you are now considering. We want the meeting next year in Northern Indiana, and we want the privilege of fixing it just as we want it. Don't prevent us by passing this decision.

17. I don't think very many of my brethren could state so scientifically the reasons why the speaker should be elevated a little above the hearers, and some of my brethren here may object to the speakers being elevated; but I think that most of us want to see those who speak to us. As we are arranged here, facing the stand, all of you can see my face when I turn toward you; but how would it be if it were level? All their faces are up one above another, but how would it be if their heads were perfectly level? Our meeting-houses and school-houses,—are you going to tear them down where they have one or two steps up to where the speaker stands? For my part I want to see the speaker when he speaks, as well as hear him; and I want a little elevation above my hearers when I speak myself. A little elevation in our meeting-houses and in our school-houses, I would like to vote for in our Annual Meeting, and I would like it in the place where we hold our Annual Meeting, too. I hope the query will not pass.

8. I am not able to boast of any knowledge of physiology like my brother Sturgis; and I cannot make any remarks on the physiological bearings of this question to weigh with what he has said; but I point you to the best halls in the world in which the speaker is down and the audience rises on all sides of him. The speaker is down and the congregation is up. It is so in the halls of Congress, which are the finest halls in the country. It is so in Talmage's tabernacle in Brooklyn, where he speaks to six thousand people. I will not differ with brother Sturgis on the ground of physiology, but I do say that we do not want a stand here. Of stands in meeting-houses and of stands in school-houses, I do not wish to talk; but as for a stand here, I am opposed to it, and that is what the query is about, and what we are talking about. Suppose the stand here was as high as this table, these brethren from here could not see the speaker at all. Now, I want this stand out of the way. We don't need it. I want it out of the way so that when brother Stump gets up to speak the brethren can see him. We do not want the Standing Committee alone to be seen. We want them on a level with the rest of us. If the Standing committee was to do all the business and the Conference was merely to look on and listen, then the stand would be in place; but as it is, let us put ourselves on a level. As said before, I do not pretend to know much about physiology, but I do know that bad air rises and good air rushes in to take its place. At the top of the building you get the bad air, and the good air at the bottom.

34. Suppose we put all on a perfect level then when a man rises to his feet, all can see him. Why not have them all on the level? They could then have pure air and none could complain

12. Let us not be too proud and then we will get along. Don't try to find too many faults. Let us be humble and grateful. We are very comfortably provided for here and when we come to your meeting brother Sturgis, we will try to be satisfied. I presume we will have no more reason to complain than we have here. I am satisfied as it is

A second reading of the query being called for, the Clerk read it again.

35. You had better take the second query and its answer, it calls for just what we want. The first query refers not only to stands in the Annual Meeting but also to stands in the meeting-houses. The second refers only to stands in the Annual Meeting. That is what we want. Let us pass the second query and its answer.

36. I think if you make it that there shall be no stand at the Annual Meeting, it would be better; but at our meeting-houses I do not want them put away.

The stand is offensive to some of our brethren therefore it shall be put away.

21. I understand that by putting away the stand at the Annual Meeting, we are thought to discourage the stand at the meeting-house, but that the query does not require us to put away the stand at the the meeting-house, let us not refuse to the Annual Meeting what we allow to the fraternity in general.

The last of the two queries was read again on being called for, and its answer was, on motion passed:

Query. Would it not be better, and nearer the Gospel and our profession, to have no stand nor platform elevated at the place of holding our Annual Meeting, for the Committee brethren and others of the meeting to sit upon during the time of council?

Answer. It is best to have no stand or platform in the Annual Council.

From the Middle District of Iowa came the following query, which was read:

The Middle District of Iowa does sincerely ask the Annual Meeting of 1874 to prayerfully consider the propriety of a change in holding our Annual Meeting.

A similar paper from another District was handed up and read.

The first of the two queries was declared to be before the meeting.

The reading of the arrangement of 1866 was called for and read.

8. It is a good plan. It would take a good deal of labor off from the brethren; and yet all the privilege would be cut off from the young brethren. I do not want to take the privilege away from them. I was young myself once. I enjoyed my young days. Oh, I shall never forget how happy those days were. They were days of Pentecost. I like to see my young brethren here. This motion would take off a good deal of expense from the brethren There are great disadvantages on some accounts and some great advantages on other accounts. I do not know how to decide. I want to cut down expenses, and yet I do not want to take away any privileges from my young brethren.

18. I believe that the decision of 1866 has never been complied with and lived up to. It occurs to my mind that we cannot get a better decision than that same decision of 1866. What is the use of making decisions if we do not live up to them? When we have made a decision and on trial it does not answer the purpose, then we make a new decision; but it is folly to make a decision, and then without ever having tried to see how it will work, change it for another. Now, I say, let us live up to the decision of 1866. We will get along very well I am sure If the rest of my brethren can be at the Yearly meeting, I can do the same I say let us revive the decision of 1866, and live up to it in future; or, at least, till we find that it will not answer.

37. There has been an amendment to to this very arrangement of 1866. Aside from that one point in which it was amended, I believe it has been considered very good.

2. Experience teaches us some things. Let us look at the cost of our Annual Meeting for a few years back and see what we discover. The last Annual Meeting before the decision of 1866, was made cost by the brethren $4,400. The next Annual meeting cost only about $1,800. That seems to me to be a matter worth looking to I I am satisfied that this meeting will cost the brethren in this place, not much short of $5,000. Now let us work back to the cost of the meeting after the decision of 1866. The way to do it is to put that decision into practice. Let us live up to it. It would be best to adopt the last of the two queries, which simply says that we make no change and the decision of 1866 will thus be still in force.

38. Permission was given at the last Annual Meeting to deviate from the arrangement of 1866. Hence this great crowd We cannot do better than to put that arrangement again in force. Let us get right back to the decision 1866. That will abundantly suffice.

14. I move to suspend that part of the query which pertains to railroads and let that come up under the head of miscellaneous business.

9. It seems to me that it must be apparent to every reasonable man and woman, that the crowd here is too large to do business to any satisfaction. We attribute the greater part of the crowd to the railroad privileges which we receive for those desiring to come here. We are aware that competition among railroads has done a great deal to bring this very large crowd here.

BOOK NOTICE.

For a short time we were out of "Helping Hand" and "Discussion on Trine Immersion between Eld. B. F. Moomaw and Dr. Jackson." We have now a lot of both on hands and will fill all orders sent us.

Please Read This.

It is said, "a friend in time of need is a friend indeed." Now we claim all our readers as friends and we wish to tell you that we are in need of some money. We have bills to meet that cannot be met until some of our readers pay us that which is due us. As there are still a large number that have not yet paid their subscription we make this call hoping that all who can will respond and help us to pay our honest debts. We so far, have been very lenient toward our readers and therefore hope they will do all they can for us, especially such as owe us yet for 1873 and on hymn books.

Our Trip to Altoona.

On Sunday, June 21st, was the time set for the dedication of the Altoona, Pa., Church, and as we felt somewhat interested we concluded to be present on the occasion, the trains running up in the morning and back in the evening. On Saturday eve previous, brother P. S. Myers, of McVeytown, dropped in with us intending also to go there in the morning. Accordingly, on Sunday morning we both took the train for the dedication. At Tyrone our company was increased by the addition of Bro. W. H. Quinn and several others. By 9 o'clock we reached the City and wended our way for the Church, and found it located about three-fourths of a mile from the depot. The house had been built and used by the Methodists for a chapel. It was cheaply built and looks cheap all through, and to tell the truth, is not the kind of a house we should have in a place like Altoona, especially when it is understood that the whole Middle District of Pa. is responsible for the payment of it. But we do not wish in any way to disparage the judgement of the Committee in making the purchase, as we suppose they done the best they could under the circumstances, at least we suppose they thought so. The following ministers were present: P. S. Myers, of McVeytown, D. M. Holsinger, J. W. and G. W. Brumbaugh, of Clover Creek, and the resident ministers. The forenoon meeting was a little more than full. Bro. P. S. Myers preached the first sermon, an abridged report of which, we give in another column. We took it in long-hand and the facilities were not as good as they should have been, therefore on some points our report does the speaker injustice, but as we do not intend it as a verbatim report we hope it will be excusable on our part. G. W. Brumbaugh, who is always curious to know how things are done, was looking on while we were reporting and when through, asked us if we thought we could read what we had written. This would have been considered an impotent question to ask of any one else, but as it is not expected of editors to write a legible hand we took no offence and told him that we thought we could read the most of it. Brother Peter's discourse was well adapted to the occasion and, we think, fully met the expectations of the people. He was followed briefly by Eld. D. M. Holsinger, when the meeting was closed according to the usual order. Announcement was made for preaching at 3 and 8 o'clock in the afternoon. We, with a number of others were then taken to the home of Bro. Imlers, where we were kindly cared for till the afternoon services, when we were called upon to preach which we done with the ability given us, after which we, with a number of others, started for the depot for home. We could have enjoyed ourselves very much had it not been so exceedingly warm. The brethren and sisters are kind, sociable, and awake to their duty. They seem much rejoiced that they now can have a place of their own in which to worship God. On next Sunday they intend to organize a Sunday school and have made arrangements to have preaching every two weeks, the ministers of the adjoining congregations to assist in turn. This is a good arrangement but think there should be services held every Sunday, and it could be done if a proper order was established.

By the time we started homeward the air was getting cooler and we enjoyed one of those pleasant rides only to be had among, through and between the beautiful green robed hills of Pa. We just here wish to say to such as admire landscape scenery, after having enjoyed a view of the "Horse Shoe Bend" and passed Altoona, take your seat on the right hand side and if you do not enjoy the scenery between that and Tyrone we are no judges of landscape beauty, or somebody else has no taste in that direction. Never yet have we experienced so enjoyable a ride. Perhaps it was on account of it being Sunday and our mind being in a better form than on former occasions. There are some opposed to carriding on Sunday but we cannot see it in that light as we would much prefer to fly along after an engine that never tires than to be tugged along by a fagged horse which should have its rest as well as Christians. On the whole we enjoyed our short visit to Altoona and if spared, expect to call around that way again.

Dedicatory Sermon of the Altoona Church. Delivered on Sunday, June 21, 1874.

BY P. S. MYERS.

"Is it not written, My house shall be called a house of prayer for all nations? But ye have made it a den of robbers." Mark 11: 18.

I am not in the habit of making apologies but I feel as if it would be justifiable at this time, as I never spoke on an occasion of this kind and especially do I feel reluctant to speak at this time, knowing that there are those here who are older and more able to do the occasion justice than myself, but as it seems to be the request that I should take the lead I will endeavor to do so with the ability that God may give.

It shall not be my purpose to speak especially of this house or the material of which it is built, but of the spiritual house or temple and of its dedition to the Lord.

I shall now, make a few remarks concerning the temple at Jerusalem, the house wherein God had recorded his name, and where he promised to dwell or associate with or hear his people. Jesus goes up to this temple but as he is about entering it he finds it sadly polluted and defiled by ungodly merchandizing, and the spirit had taken its flight. His spirit is moved within when he beholds this desecration, and he begins to show his authority by reminding them of the original design of the house. "Is it not written, My house shall be called a house of prayer for all nations? but ye have made it a den of thieves." I truly feel as if I have not much to give but like the apostle Peter I can say, "Silver or gold have I none but such as I have, I give unto thee."

Before we enter the work of dedicating this building, let us talk awhile about the spiritual house. We all have a temple within us, and our first thought should be to dedicate it unto the Lord as we are taught and have learned by experience that it must soon dissolve and pass away. Though the doctrine of nonenity and annihilation is highly talked of by men of learning and of the world. I believe in the resurrection, that the just and unjust shall all arise and be accountable to God for the manner of their using the temple which God gave them. If it was dedicated to the Lord and ever held consecrated for his glory the reward shall follow. If not the punishment. On this ground it makes it the more important in what way our temples are dedicated. We all go up to Jerusalem bearing this temple in our bodies, it is a kingdom but where there is a kingdom there must also be a king, and it is important for us to know who is our king and to what kingdom we belong. It must be remembered that we are free moral agents, death and life is set before us and God holds us responsible for our choosing. These temples God has given us for our good and we have the power to make such use of them as we will, we may dedicate them sacredly to the honor of God, or defile them by introducing into them the most profligate idolatry. Just so with this house. The brethren, sisters, and friends of this place were desirous of having a house wherein you might worship God, you therefore laid together and succeeded in purchasing this. It is now yours, set apart and dedicated for the worship of God. You have control over it and it is in your power to keep it sacred for this special purpose. But suppose you begin to introduce into it some unholy things, the doves,—ice cream parties—and money exchangers desk—gambling fairs—introduce the unholy fire or turn it into a dancing hall. You have the power, but mark you, God will hold you responsible and the end will be terrible. For all, you are dependent upon God and by his aid and permission you have this house and everything calls upon you to dedicate it wholly unto God or for his worship, but notwitstanding all this you may devote it to the worship of devils. Therefore, my Christian brethren, sisters, and friends, I wish to impress you with the necessity of dedicating your own temple to the service of God, and by so doing, a holy and acceptable service will be kept up in this house. Christ found the temples devoted to merchandise, and just so we may dedicate our temples, our bodies, to the service of the devil. The reasoning faculties of some have run wild and have reasoned away the very God who made them. God has given us a pure and holy temple, hearts to love and serve him, but through sin we have made ourselves impure, unholy. When God made man he was holy, the temple was pure, but through disobedience of our first parents it was made impure, defiled and unholy. The doves were introduced and the money exchanger's table, but when Christ came he wiped away this sin, drove out the dove sellers and overthrew the exchanger's tables, and thus cleansed the temple. So I contend that when the child is born into the world its temple is as pure as was God's first temple before its defilement by disobedience, or as Solomon's temple first was recorded there, his name, and the question now is, have we dedicated our temples to the service of God or have we made it a house of merchandise? Is his name recorded there or is it devoted to the service of satan. When we closely examine our temples I fear we will find them grossly desecrated. When the temple is dedicated to the Lord it is full of peace and harmony, but when to satan it is full of hatred and wickedness. Christ is coming some day to examine every temple, and O, what a redding out there will be! What a terrible aspect will be presented! The dove sellers and money exchangers will be cast out and the temple destroyed because of its defilement. But if the temple is found right, the heart within will be in good order, hence the necessity of dedicating the heart to the service of God.

When we look around and see the great wickedness that is carried on in the world, we are made to wonder that the wrath of God is withheld, that it is not poured out as it was in the days of Noah and of Lot. As through or by the death of Christ every temple was cleansed, and is cleansed as they are brought into existence, it remains as a consequence that every one that is now defiled is made so through our own instrumentality and through the same instrumentality must again be cleansed. This is brought about by repentance and repentance is brought about by an examination of the heart. Every soul born into the world is dedicated to the Lord by the virtue of the sufferings and death of Jesus Christ, but as we grow up in the world we soon begin to contaminate the temple God has given us. The first step in this desecration is generally disobedience to the parents and then, step by step, other unholy things are admitted until the temple becomes wholly defiled. Pride is another very common step towards desecration. It is declared that God hateth the proud but giveth grace to the humble. Through pride the soul is gradually led into sin, first disobedience, then profanity, drunkeness and oftentimes from that to the gallows. Death is the result of sin, "The soul that sinneth shall die." The sinner becomes dead in tresspasses and in sin. If on an examination of our hearts we find ourselves in this dying condition, it will lead us to repentance. This examination is made by the word of God, and it teaches us that every violation is a step towards death. Knowing this and that there is a resurrection, a judgement and a final punishment for the wicked we become alarmed about our condition and repent of our former course with a determination to dedicate ourselves anew to the service of the Lord. Every violation is a death and dissolutes one christian virtue. Thus one virtue after another is destroyed or enslaved until so many good qualities are lost that the evil takes the sway and the soul is dead, the temple wholly descerated. This desecration is done by degrees, few men become great sinners all at once. A little sin always leads to a greater one, and thus step by step they are led on until it may end in filling a drunkards grave or a felon's cell. The young lady commences, through pride, by adding to her apparel some useless ornament for show and to gratify the flesh, and continues from one sin to another until she finally may become a profligate or libertine. We have before us a subject of great importance and we should consider it well. If we find that we have been and are still sinning against God, let us repent and do so no more. This is the time and place to dedicate ourselves, our house and our all to the service of the Lord. I have no doubt but what there are many good people present who are willing and desire to dedicate themselves to the Lord. They believe that there is a God and often think of death and the final condition of the soul. May the time soon come that many will be made willing to accept the humble doctrine of Christ, and thus dedicate their temples to the service of the living God. If all the people of Altoona would dedicate their hearts to the Lord, we would have a little heaven here. It is true this humble little house is a small beginning but by the grace of God and the labor of the brethren may the work grow and grow until it will require a house large enough to fill the whole lot. With these remarks, I will give the subject over. Many ideas have been advanced that have not been carried out but hope some of my brethren will take them up and complete what I have left undone, &c.

THE FATHER'S HOUSE.

In my father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you—John 15: 2.

The above words were spoken by our blessed Master to his disciples just before his departure out of this world. They knew him to be the Christ the Son of the living God, and had the words of eternal life for which cause they had been with him, and traveled with him from place to place receiving instruction from the gracious words which from time to time proceeded out of his mouth. But the time had now come that he should leave them and return to the Father's house where he tells them he is going to prepare a place for them, and they should follow him to those mansions in his Heavenly Father's house, where they might ever be with him in that New Jerusalem, the city of God. And the promise is not alone to them but to all those that believe his word and obey.

Then dear reader, the same promise is to you and I, if we from the heart obey that form of doctrine which was once delivered to the saints. Yes it is promised to all the righteous of the world. O what joy shall be realized when loved ones shall meet each other there in that unnumerable company of angels, the general assembly, the church of the first-born, where there shall be no sorrow but all will be love, joy, and peace. Nothing shall enter there to make sorrow, neither sickness pain nor death, neither storms nor winter, but it shall be one bright summer always. In this world we are compassed about with many temptations and often induced to commit sin. But there we shall rest from all these.

Then dear brethren let us be faithful in our calling. Though the world may speak of us as evil doers, as a certain person said of us a few days ago, that it was wrong for us to practice the ordinance of feet-washing. Whether such shall enter the Father's house I leave to them and their God. We know the promise is to the obedient. Then sinner why persist in wickedness? What reason have you for living in rebellion against your Maker? Why do you disregard the commandments of the holy child Jesus who died that ignominious death upon the cross that we might live. If you will thus continue in your sins, where Christ and God are you cannot come. No, you can never share of those mansions in the Father's house, you can never meet your friends in heaven. Why will you barter away your hope of heaven for a few vain pleasures in this world of sorrow? Come and say with Joshua of old that you will serve the Lord, let others do as they may, and then if you practice out this good resolution and be faithful until death, you shall receive a crown of life. If you would be happy live a Christian life. Then the people of God will be your delight. You will desire their company above all others, and your mind will be drawn heavenward and will long for the time of your change that you too may enjoy those pleasures in the Father's house where the weary shall rest and the wicked shall trouble no more.

OUR MINISTERS.

The great body of ministers in this day instead of learning of Christ to be meek and lowly, and ministering as of the ability which God giveth, reject with disdain his holy commands and with excellency of speech and human literature acquired in some college, and that wisdom which is foolishness with God, undertake to preach the Gospel. Who that has any true knowledge of Christianity can believe they are sent of God or that they will profit the people. But the fault is not wholly in the ministers. The people in a great measure are the cause of such a state of things for the time has come, foretold by the apostles, when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. Now in order to be able to fully gratify their itching ears, and obtain their favor and approbation, these who teach them must have a college education, and be skilled in all the nice arts of oratory, yet the minds of people are so blinded by the God of this world, or else they are under such strong delusion that they believe there is a great deal of true piety and religion now in the world. Hence none must teach them but such as will cry peace, peace, and daub them up with untempered mortar in their iniquities, and allow them while professing Christianity, full licence to revenge injuries, kill their enemies in time of war, enter into suits at law and carry their point to the utmost extent instead of enjoining upon them to be patient of injuries, to love their enemies, and take wrong rather than go to law, as the Gospel requires. Such, among many others are the corruptions of the present day, which carry a dark aspect with them, and cause sorrow to the pious mind.

THE SOUL.

"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Acts 7: 59. This passage is part of a prayer of crying Stephen. You see how much he felt the value of his soul, for in his dying moments he said, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit." His Soul was about to quit his body: he felt the time was drawing nearer at hand, and to whom could he commit his Spirit but to his Saviour? None but him could receive it, and keep it, and preserve it.

Little children, when they obtain any valuable gift, they ask their father or mother to keep it for them. What they cannot keep with safty, they give to their parents to keep for them.

Thus Stephen, when he was dying gave his precious soul into the hands of Christ.

The history of Stephen is short, but wonderful. He was chosen to be a deacon of the church; he was fitted and called to his office, but he only fitted it for a very short time. His blessed and useful career only lasted a few months. O what a character the Spirit of God gives him in the word of life! "And Stephen full of faith and power did great wonders and miracles among the people." He preached with such sacred eloquence and power that the people who opposed him, were not able to resist the wisdom and the Spirit by which he spake. This blessed man was the first martyr stoned to death by the malicious Jews because he was a servant of Christ.

It is not an easy matter to describe the soul. Though it is difficult, I will attempt it, hoping to be guided by the right Spirit.

The body is the house where the soul dwells. There is a great difference between the house and the inhabitant who dwells in it. What a great difference there is between the body in which the soul dwells, and the soul which dwells in the body You say the body is a very astonishing house. It is indeed wonderful but marvelous as it is there is a far more astonishing inhabitant dwelling in that house; that inhabitant is the soul: If you were showed the most beautiful mansion built of marble and adorned with gold, you would probably say surely some great and remarkable person must dwell in that noble and costly house. If asked what makes you think so? You would answer, "The house is so grand, so costly, I think it must be so." For the same reason the soul which is the inhabitant of the body, must be wonderful, since the body in which it dwells is so wonderful. David says, the body is fearfully and wonderfully made: this being the case the soul which inhabits it must be more wonderful than the body in which it dwells. Is the soul the inhabitant of the body? Then learn my friends to be more careful of the soul than the body. That man is not wise who is more careful of his house than of himself O! what a fool must that man be who is more careful of his body than his soul.

The body will not always be the dwelling-place of his soul. This clay will sink into the ruins of death. The instant the house or body shall crumble, the living soul will leave it; then they will part and never meet till the morning of the resurrection. On that glorious morning the body of the righteous shall be repaired; it shall be adorned with unfading beauty, and shall be raised to immortal life: then the soul shall return to the body, like a king who, after being long distant, returned to his magnificent place, and in this glorious body, likened unto Christ's glorious body, the soul shall dwell forever. The soul is a Spirit.

We have looked at the house in which the soul dwells. Let us now look at the soul which dwell in this house. What is the inhabitant of this house? It is a spirit. How worthy of notice here is a house in which a spirit dwells. God is a spirit; angels are spirits, and the soul is a spirit. Thus the soul resembles angels, and angels resembles God: think of this with wonder and delight.

The soul is that which thinks. O! what a blessing and privilege it is to be able to think. If you had wings by which you could fly through heaven it would be nothing compared with this. Though you never saw Jesus with the eye of the body, yet you can think of him with your soul, and as it were look upon him. You can think of him as born in a stable, and laid in a manger; and as it were, you see the stable, you see the manger, you see the lovely child Jesus. How valuable must that soul be which has such power. It can send thoughts to the distance of millions of miles, in one instant of time. In one moment it can send a thought to the depths of hell, and in another, to the lofty glorious lights of heaven. O! what a wonderful spirit then is the soul.

The soul shall never die. We say men die. Strictly speaking men never die. Their bodies die and see corruption, but the soul lives forever; it can never die. When we see a very large and strong edifice built of large stones, you are ready to think surely, that building may stand for many centuries. The time is coming when this buildings of strength shall be demolished and laid level with the ground. The time will never arrive when the soul shall be no more.

When millions of millions of years have passed away; when as many myriads of years, as there are stars in the sky, as there are drops in the ocean, have passed away, the soul shall only be beginning to live. The value of the soul! "What can a man give in exchange for his soul?" A man can give nothing in exchange for his soul. All the palaces on earth, with their marble pavements and pillars with their crimson curtains and rich canopies, are not fit to be given in exchange for the soul.

The soul appears very precious when we consider the purpose for which God made it. He made it to glorify him to enjoy him. Angels were made for this purpose. Can a creature be made by God for a higher purpose than this? It is impossible. O! what an honor God has conferred upon the soul when he has made it for this great end to glorify himself.

Suffer me to ask you, my reader, do you enjoy God? If you have with your hearts received God the Father as your Father, God the Son as your Savior, and God the Spirit as your Sanctifier, then you enjoy God. Do you delight in his power as your protection, and in his wisdom as your direction? Do you delight in Christ as your prophet to instruct you, as your Priest to take away the guilt of your sins, and as your King to reign over you? Then you enjoy God.

The soul appears exceedingly valuable when we consider what God has done for the salvation of it. I beseech you my dear reader to think of this with seriousness and prayer.

From all eternity the holy trinity contrived a plan of salvation for the soul Myriads of ages before man was made and fell this plan by which, he might be saved was contrived by the wisdom of God. If you saw a company of the greatest kings on earth sitting down in some magnificent palace to contrive a plan, you would certainly think it must be about some matter of great importance. When you learn that the Father, Son, and Spirit from all eternity sat in council to contrive a plan for the salvation of the soul, what do you think of the soul for which this plan was contrived? Surely you must think it very precious. O! think and wonder, weep and praise. Let tears of grief for the sufferings of Christ mingle with songs of gratitude and praise for the great salvation which Jesus purchased for the soul on the agonizing tree. Was it not possible for the soul to be saved without all this poverty, this suffering, this grief? Could not God have given the soul the smiles of his eternal love, without drawing them from his Holy Son? Could not God have raised the soul to the glories of heaven without requiring the blessed, the spotless humanity of his Son to be committed to the cold and gloomy mansions of the grave? To these most affecting questions we answer, No. If the soul is to be saved, God cannot do it otherwise. This is the only method. This is the wonderful plan which the Holy Trinity contrived before the morning stars sang together, before the Sons of God shouted for joy. O! think my wonderers what an awful, painful thought it is to live forever in that lake which burns with fire and brimstone.

Ye Christian friends who love Christ and serve him, your prospect is delightful beyond all conception. There is a heaven to which you are journeying. At death you will be admitted into it. There you shall see Christ. There you shall be with the Lord. JOHN B. WRIGHTSMAN.

Extract From the "Ante-Nicene Fathers."

For those readers of the PILGRIM who have no access to the writing of the "ANTE-NICENE FATHERS" I give the following Extract from JUSTINE MARTYR; who was born about A. D. 114, and suffered martyrdom A. D. 165 but it is said that his writings are among the most important that have come down to us from the second century. In the first APOLOGY in behalf of the Christian he says on BAPTISM.

"I will also relate the manner in which we dedicate ourselves to God when we had been made new through Christ; but if we omit this, we seem to be unfair in the explantion we are making, to many that are persuaded and believe that we teach and say what is true and undertake to be able to live accordingly, we are instructed to pray and entreat God with fastening for the remission of their sins that are past, we praying and fasting with them. Then they are brought by us where there is water and are regenerated in the same manner in which we were ourselves regenerated. For in the name of God, the Father and Lord of the universe, and of our Saviour Jesus Christ, and of the Holy spirit, they then receive the washing with water. For Christ also said, except ye be born again, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Now that it is impossible for those who have once been born to enter into their mothers womb, is manifest to all. And how those who have sinned and repent shall escape their sins, is declared by Esaias the prophet, he thus speaks: Wash you, make you clean; but put away the evil of your doings from your soul; learn to do well; judge the fatherless and plead for the widow and come and let us reason together saith the Lord. And though your sins be as scarlet, I will make them white like wool; and though they be as crimsom, I will make them white as snow. But if ye refuse and rebel, the sword shall devour you: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

And for this rite we have learned from the apostles this reason. Since at our birth we were born without our own knowledge or choice, by our parents coming together, and were brought up in bad habits and wicked training: in order that we may not remain the children of necessity and ignorance, but may become the children of choice and knowledge, and may obtain, in the water, the remission of sins formerly committed, there is pronounced over him who chooses to be born again, and has repented of his sins, the the name of God the Father and Lord of the universe; he who leads to the laver the person that is to be washed calling him by his name alone. For no one can utter the name of the ineffible God, and if any one dare to say that there is a name, he raves with hopless madness. And this washing is called illumination because they who learn these things are illuminated in the understanding. And in the name of Jesus Christ who was crucified under Pontius Pilate and in the name of the Holy Ghost who through the prophet fortold all things about Jesus, he who is illuminated is washed.

Of the Communion services Justin says, "But we, (in contract with the borrowed practice of devils (heathens) who borrwed the mode of Christian baptism from the church, required those who entered these temples to sprinkle themselves * * * entirly before they entered into the shrines in which the images were set' after we have thus washed him who has been convinced and has assented to our teaching, bring him to the place where those who are called brethren are assembled, in order that we may offer hearty prayers in common for ourselves and for the baptized (illumunated) persons, and for all others in every place that we may be counted worthy, now that we have learned the truth by our works also to be found good citizens and keepers of the commandments, so that we may be saved with an everlasting salvation. Having ended the prayer we salute one another with a kiss. There is then brought to the president of the brethren, bread and a cup of wine mixed with water; and he taking them, gives praise and glory to the Father of the universe through the name of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, and offers thanks at considerable length for our being counted worthy to receieve these things at this hand. And when he has concluded the prayer and thanks giving all the people present express their assent by saying Amen. This word answers in the Hebrew language to, so be it. And when the president has given thanks and all the people have expressed their assent, those who are called (by us) deacons, give to each of those present to partake of the bread and wine mixed with water over which the thanks giving was pronounced, and to those who are absent they carry away a portion."

"And this food is called among us—(translated the Eucharist,) of which no one is allowed to partake but the man who believs that the things which we teach are true, and who has been washed with the washing that is for the remission of sins, and unto regeneration, and who is so living as Christ has enjoined. For not as common bread and common drink do we recieve these; but in like manner as Jesus Christ our Saviour, having been made flesh by the word of God, had both flesh and blood for our salvation, so likewis have we been taught that the food which is blessed by the prayer of his word, and from which our blood and flesh by transmutation are nourished, is the flesh and blood of that Jesus who was made flesh. For the apostles in the memories composed by them which are called gospels, have thus delivered unto us what was enjoined upon them; that Jesus took bread and when he had given thanks, said, this do ye in remembrance of me, this is my body: and that after the same manner, having taken the cup and given thanks, he said, This is my blood; and gave it to them alone."

This being the manner the early Christians observed the commandment of the Saviour in teaching and baptizing, it will certainly not be amiss for some who are inclined to hurry people into baptism to pause a little. In that early day of Christianity the Christians prayed and fasted with those they had exhorted to fast and pray so that they might obtain the remission of there sins in the water. Those who sing and exhort some into a willingness to be baptized during an evening meeting, and the same night baptise them certainly run faster than they did in this period. Is there any wonder that pride and corruption; with a spirit of insubordination is in the church? To baptize and bring unregenerate persons into the church, is the greatest curse ever can fall upon her.

In reference to the Communion of bread and wine we discover but little difference between their practies and the practices of the Brethren. The brethren they call deacons distributing the elements; and sending a portion to the absent ones; and the mixing water with the wine, are the apparent differences.

The general prayers, the giving thanks for the bread and wine, and the salutation of the kiss before partaking of the emblems is as the brethren still have it. And none but those who were taught, had believed and were baptized were then permitted to partake of the bread and wine; neither do the brethren allow any one to do it. To exclude them was right then, and it is right to do so still.

From whence the early Christians obtained the idea of mixing water with wine in the Communion services, I have never learned. The Catholic church still observes it. There certainly is no evidence any where that the Saviour did so. I have wondered whether they got the idea from the circumstances of blood and water flowing from the wound in his side made by the soldiers spear.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

As preaching the gospel is the great command, the Master gave his humble followers the last time he spoke to them on earth, and as a general thing the brethren like to hear through the PILGRIM the incidents which occur in the efforts made to comply with the command, I will therefore try to note some of the things which took place in a recent tour of preaching, in April, in Yolo and Solano counties, Cal. The last day of March I received a dispatch from brother Benjamin Dennis, of Woodland, that his brother, John Dennie, was very low with consumption and could not hold out much longer, and desired me to come without delay and baptize him. I went immediately to Lathrop and telegraphed to Woodland that I would come on the first train. That evening when the train stopped at Woodland I was met by brother Hartman and conveyed to his home, 3½ miles west of Woodland. Next morning early, Bro's. Hartman and B. Dennis conveyed me to the sick man's house. After talking with him for a short time, he took courage and rejoiced that I had come to baptize him, as our Master, Jesus, has commanded. He was able to go into the water without help, and come out of it rejoicing, that he had now done that duty which had lain on his mind so heavily for some time. His death and burial is recorded in the PILGRIM No. 20. After brother John Dennie was baptized we returned to brother Hartman's, near Woodland, preached there a few days, waiting for the coming of brother Prather. This is the brother that accepted the call of the church last fall on the Merced, when they considered it necessary to call an anxious, zealous, clear-minded, traveling evangelist to preach the Word. Some may enquire who is this brother Prather? It is Enoch L. Prather, lately from Jefferson Co., Iowa. Bro. Prather come accordieg to expectation. We then, in company with brother Benj. Dennis, proceeded to the place where brother John Dennis lived (15 mila) intending to hold meeting there, and in the Canon near him for 5 or 6 days, but the weather being so rainy and boisterous, we did not get up in the Canon. In the little town near brother Dennis' in the mouth of the Canon, the Grangers offered us their hall, which was a good one, well lighted, where we held meeting two evenings, to attentive congregations. We baptized two at that place, then returned to brother Hartman's, preached every evening for seven days, baptized one. Quite an interest was manifested. It seems to me that a church can be built up there by gospel teaching. It was said by several. that they liked that kind of preaching, for it was both edifying and instructive to hear the gospel theme, and not to meddle in other men's creeds, and matters. Two years ago, there were but four members in Yolo and, Solano counties. Now there are 13 in Napa Co., west of Solano. The church there once numbered 23, now there is not over half that number.

Brother S. Broadhurst, the preacher in Napa, has moved to Merced Co. and is preaching and baptizing quite a number there. Others moved in different directions. From Woodland we went to Cordelia by rail, preached in the Episcopal church four times, baptized one. We then returned home, having been gone one month. After resting eight or ten days, my wife and I started up the San Joaquin valley, preached the first day in the evening in a school house in Paradise, staid all night with brother Gean. The next day we went to brother Broadhurst's, next day attended council to appoint their communion meeting, next day, Sunday, in connection with brother Broadhurst, filled an appointment at Oristimbers, Sunday night at brother Broadhurst's house, crossed, on Monday, the Merced river, visited the brethren and friends on the South side of the river, preached on Tuesday evening at David Chitester's, crossed Merced again, and staid with brother and sister Whistler on Wednesday night, Thursday crossed the San Joaquin river and steared our course for Jurisdiction, had an interview with Mr. Peterman, learned more through him of our son, Peter Wolf, than we can by letters, have not seen him for about 13 years This Mr. Peterman had been to Texas and Kaesas, thought he would like Texas or Kansas, but he made a mistake of $1.000, and hurried back to California. He stopped with our son, Peter Wolf, Cawker City, Kaesas, preached for the brethren and friends in Jerusalem on Sunday.

I am now at home, and will not make any more preaching trips until harvest is over. Brother Prather returned to Woodland, delivered 17 discourses, has now returned home again, and will continue in the occupation of a harvest hand until heading and threshing is over. To our brethren and friends who may chance to see these imperfect notes in the PILGRIM, know that our faith in God's werd is as strong as ever, yes, verily! I feel thankful to God that I am living in an age that people do see the difference between gospel preaching and vain babbling and contentions about things of no utility to the church.

ELD. GEORGE WOLFE.

Lathrop, Cal.

VINEYARD VALLEY, PA.
June 22nd, 1874.

Dear Editors:—

Not seeing a report of our communion from this, Aughwick, district I thought I would give a brief sketch of the meeting. According to announcement, on the 16th of May at one o'clock P. M. the meeting commenced in the usual way. Brethren David Long of Md. and Gibble of Ill. were the only ministering brethren with us beyond our own district, but they were ample for the important task. Bro. Gibble and sister Long Bro. David's companion, both took sick the first night of the meeting and neither were able to attend meeting the second day. Both recovered in a few days. Representation of members small, very few from other districts and not more than half of our members out. Congregation large at night and next day, being Sunday, it was larger still. Had the best of order. Had quite a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. A brother was called to the ministry. The solemn charge fell upon Bro. Seth Myers. Hope the Lord will make him a useful instrument in his hands. None came in during the meeting. One baptized since and others are on the way. Wish they would come by the thousands for there is room for all.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Please insert in the PILGRIM that on the 28, 29, 30, of August we purpose holding a Communion Meeting, at the house of Bro. S. Broadhurst, near the junction of the two rivers Saojoaquin and Merced, Merced Co. Cal. Also one commencing on the 15th of October on Cash Creek near Bro. and sister Hartmans, 4 miles west of Woodland, Yolo Co. This meeting may last 8 or 10 days.

ELD. Geo WOLF.

The Smith Fork Church, Clinton county Mo., have appointed their Lovefeast to be on September 26 and 27th, at the Brethren's meeting-house 1½ miles north of Plattsburg.

We publish it early in order to avoid conflicting with other congregations. A strong desire was manifested that old and experienced brethren should visit us at that time, and a hearty invitation to all brethren and sisters is cordially extended. By order of the Church. DANIEL B. GIBSON.

DIED.

In the lower Cumberland church, Cumberland county, Pa. of heart deseas, IRA, son of Daniel Landis, aged 21 years and 19 days,

He was an infant only seventeen days old when his mother died. She was 21 years and 2 days old at the time of her death, and a daughter of Elder Joseph Sollenberger of Upper Cumberland Church. She gave her heart to the Lord in her youth. She entreated her husband and friends earnestly on her death-bed. He that hath ears to hear let him hear.

Upon the writer's approach to the funeral of the above he found the way around the house lined with buggies, and upon entering the house, he saw so many grave faces and eyes swiming in tears, and in the room of the corps, was sorrowful weeping—a mother weeping for her son. (I thought his mother died more than twenty-one years ago, but I see she is here to-day weeping.) Fathers, mothers, two little sister, uncles aunts. Oh! how pitiful! God takes the dear young man—his qualities I need not describe—as a subjdct before your eyes to entreat you, Turn ye, etc.

He was buried at Moler's Meeting house on the 26th of March 1874, by the brethren. Text Isaiah LX.

I am informed of the fact that cars are chartered for small prices to come here. Of course the more cars that are taken, the less the amount paid for each one. If you can get one car for a small sum, you can three cars for a smaller sum per car. Then gamblers, thieves and business men on business, come at these cheap rates. Our railroads in this State are making a speculation by this very meeting.

14. I did not make my motion in order to cut off all business connected with the railroad privilege, but merely to suspend that decision, or postpone the discussion till we come to miscellaneous business, when the matter can be again taken up.

The last of the queries given above was amended as follows, and then read:

We do not consider it necessary to make any further change from the plan adopted by the Annual Meeting of 1866, than what has been already made, but we are deeply impressed from our experience with the present Annual meeting, of adhering strictly to the order established at the Annual Meeting above referred to, that of 1866; and urge upon the Churches holding the Annual Meeting, of holding it according to the order alluded to. And it is further understood that there shall be no provision made for boarding at the place of meeting until Monday. Also, there are no general arrangements to be made for reduced railroad fare.

Passed.

37. An amendment was made to the arrangement of 1860, in regard to the appointment of the Standing Committee. I want to know whether this answer which has just been read and which we are now considering, does away with the amendment and compels us to appoint our Standing Committee as before. How is it about that? If it restores the arrangement of 1866 just as it was, it must do away with that amendment and I do not think that the brethren are willing to do away with that amendment.

14. I do not see how our deciding not to make any changes here will, in any way effect the changes that have been made heretofore. Former changes will not be in the least affected, if we merely decide to make no change now,

The answer last amended and read was again amended and read, and after the Secretary explained it, it did not at all interfere with the amendment to the arrangement of 1866, by which amendment the manner of appointing the Standing committee was altered it was passed.

H. D. Davy.—There are no petitions for the Annual Meeting of 1875, but there are petitions for 1876. Hence we have concluded to call the brother rom the Miamaeren Valley of Ohio, who have petitioned for the Meeting in 1870, to meet to-morrow morning and see about changing the petition and calling for the meeting to be held in the Miama valley in 1875 instead of 1876 We have several papers from California. Among them is a petition for a committee to go to California and settle difficulties that have arisen there. There are only a few elders there, and they have called for help from the general brotherhood. We had the subject before the Standing Committee and determined to bring it before the general conference. We thought it best to submit to you the desirability of appointing two brethren to go there and operate with the three elders already there. We think this the wisest and the best, but unless the conference orders us to appoint such a committee and send it, we are unwilling to do so, for in that case we might have to pay the expenses of the committee which would amount probably to about $600. This would be a small amount to the whole Church, and the help of the brethren here is greatly needed in California. Will you authorize us to make this appointment? If you have any objections to it, raise those objections now, or I will take your silence for consent. Have you any objections?

38. I would say, brethren, that I have had correspondence for the last eighteen months, perhaps, with a brother who moved from our part of the country to California, and from the statement he gives us in reference to the condition of the church there, I for one think it really necessary to send a committee, and of course the expense ought to be born in the general brotherhood. I understand that the church in California is in a sad condition. I gather this from the letters which I get from there.

A committee went to California once and no report ever came from them.

(Several voices)—The older brethren are the best judges. If they think it necessary, all right.

14. In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. I I want to hear from brother Henry Davy. I thind he can give us some light on this subject.

2. For the last twelve months, and even before that, I have been watching the state of things in California. This matter was before the Standing Committee last year, but was not in such a shape that we could take hold of it and accomplish what it seemed necessary to accomplish. Therefore we did the best we could under the circumstances. From the last Annual Meeting till this one, we have been getting information from there from different brethren, and the matter has developed so that we now think that there is nothing in the way. If brethren go there who understand and know the case, brethren who are prepared to deal with it justly and prudently, the matter can be arranged so that the work in California will go on in harmony with the advice of the general brotherhood. I have received several letters from there and I have given several answers. My mind is that now is the time to bring about what may seem to be necessary there. One of the troubles I will name. A good many brethren and sisters have moved to California within the last six months. They do not hand in their letters when they see the state of things there but they kept them in their pockets. They want something done, so they can hand in their letters. They are waiting the action of this meeting. My mind is that we ought to send a committee.

26. I do not think that two are enough for the business. The committee that we send wants to be able to act independantly, if the occasion requires. I move that we send three. Then they can make a querom and transact business. Besides one of the committee might not be able to go, or something might happen to prevent the full number from going.

2. It is generally understood that when a brother is appointed on a committee and cannot go, it is his duty to see that some one else goes who can fill his place. If one of the brethren appointed on this committee would fail to go, through sickness, or for any cause, he would see to it that some competent person went in his place.

8. I have seen a good many who live there, and I learn from them that they have had a good deal of trouble there. It seems to me that it would be just the time now for the brethren to take action and send a committe of prudent men to straighten things there.

21. There are two parties in the church there, in California. My impression is that it would not be best for either party to be on the committee. I think it might harass the actions of the committee. It would not do to take one party on and leave the other off, and if both were taken on the committee it might make a division in the committee, or embarrass its action. I think that there should be three appointed on that committee to go to California. If such a committee will use the proper means

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

A LITTLE GIRL BURNED TO DEATH.

On Monday evening one of those fearful accidents occurred in this city which are daily chronicled by the papers, and which it seems ought to be avoided in the face of so many similar examples. BETTIE, a little twelve year old daughter of Mr. T. L. SALE, residing in this city, went into the kitchen to start the fire as preparatory assistance to her mother in getting supper. It seems she was tempted to apply coal oil from the can as an expeditious way of starting the fire. Immediately, a loud explosion was heard by the neighbors, and then the little girl was seen flying from the house into the yard enveloped in flames. Capt. J. H. THOMAS, who resides on an adjoining lot, and Mrs. WILLIAM RAY, who lived equally near, ran to the assistance of the little girl, who, when reached, was leaning against the fence having completely surrendered to the devouring violence of the flames; the poor child had given up in despair while the demon played upon her with irresistible fury. MRS. RAY had the presence of mind to bring a coverlet with her, and as soon as the child could be reached, it was thrown around her, and the flames were subdued. She was carried into the house, but it was apparent that the fiend had done his work; that the little girl was burnt almost to a crisp. Dr. ESSIG being summoned, said she could live only five or six hours, and at one o'clock next morning his prediction proved true, for then little BETTIE SALE, so lately full of life, hope and promise, the idol of a fond mother and doting father, was a corpse, sent by inscrutable fate to a premature grave. Her sufferings, we are informed, beggar description. Excepting her face and feet, the whole body was a mass of burned flesh. No applications could be made to it, and as the unfortunate child writhed and tossed in excruciating agonies of pain, the burned flesh would drop from the body. No human aid could even mollify the pain or sooth the dying spirit of the doomed little innocent. A short time before the vital spark had fled, she rested in apparent ease and comfort, and the death struggle was as tranquil as ever seen. Little BETTIE SALE is said to have been a favorite, not only with her parents, but all her little associates, and many of them who largly attended her to the City Cemetery on Tuesday evening stood round her grave with weeping eyes and saddened hearts. Rev. D. B. GIBSON conducted funeral services at the Methodist Church, and also at the grave. The mother was also there with her hands and arms bandaged for she had been badly burned in attempts to save her child. Who can remain unmoved at the recital of this shocking calamity. Mothers cannot be too careful with their children, and children should learn from the fate of BETTIE SALE to beware of the use of coal oil about fires.—Plattsburg Leader.

Secret societies, it is well known, are so obnoxious to the Catholic Church that to hold membership in them is to renounce the church. The rapid increase of the Grangers has made it a matter of some interest whether they would come under the same rule. Like Trades unions, it seems, they are regarded as in the same category with Free Masons and Odd Fellows, and the only escape for Catholic Grangers is to withdraw from the Grange immediately. So declares the Catholic Telegraph, the organ of Archbishop Purcell.

A Key to Report of A. M.

In compliance to the wishes of many of our readers who are praying us to give them some way of knowing the names of the speakers in our Report, we now inform all concerned that we are making a key, which will be published as soon as we get all the names, by which the names can be determined as readily as if they were inserted in the Report. We have carefully numbered each name. These numbers you will notice at the commencement of each speech, which will correspond with the name and number on our key. We give this notice so that all who wish to know the names of the speakers, can save their papers and send for the key, which will be ready to send out just as soon as we get all the names. They will be sent to all who desire them on the following terms: One copy, 10 cents, 6 copies, 50 cents, 10 copies, 70 cents, and 20 copies $1.00.

DR. PIEROE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION.

Is very strongly recommended by the Medical Faculty and is largely prescribed among their female patients. It is worthy of all confidence as may be seen from the following testimonial:

ATLANTA, Ill., July 14th 1873.

Dr. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.

DEAR SIR:—I have not words to express my gratitude to you for your advice and assistance in my case. There is not one who has used your medicines since they have been brought here but that can say with me they have been greatly benefited. Since I have been so helped by its use six or seven around me left off all doctors and other medicines, and now use it in their families, after being cured of the same disease as mine. You do not know what a wonder it created in our city, by its restoring my sister I wrote you about, for she had been under the care of three of our best doctors but could not sit up but for a few minutes at one time. I begged of her to try your medicines, and before she had used half of the bottles she could go all around the yard, and has now just come home from a visit five miles away.

MRS. THOS. McFARLAND.

The Second Edition is now ready for delivery. The work has been carefully revised, corrected and enlarged.

Put up in a neat pamphlet form, with good paper cover, and will be sent, post-paid, from this office on the following terms: One copy, 25 cts; Five copies, $1.10; Ten copies, $2.00; 25 copies, $4.50; 50 copies $8.50; 100 copies, $16.00.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 23x25 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. The Voice of the Spirit

BY WESLEY.

In solitude's shades from earth's busy cares sundered,
A soft whisper falls on the Penitent's ear;
It speaks of celestial pleasures unnumbered,
Where joy blooms forever undimmed by a tear.

How sweet to the soul is the voice of the spirit,
Which woos it to walk in the path of the just;
"Come look unto Jesus rely on his merit,
No longer in earth's fondest offerings trust.

It sings of the one who on Calvary's mountain,
Poured freely the tide that encircles the globe;
And ope'd for sinners Salvation's pure fountain,
In which they may find an eternal abodes

Across the dark waves of despondency' river,
It floats as a balm from the overgreen shore:
And tells of the love of the merciful Giver,
Where souls may find rest to repine never more.

It calls to the wanderer lonely and weary,
Upon the bleak mountains of unbelief;
When earth's fairest bowers seem cheerless and dreary,
And penitence opens the flood gates of grief.

Oh come; weeping soul, to the cross of thy Savior,
Recline on his bosom confessing thy sin;
And trust in his merit to win heaven's favor,
And open the portal that thou mayest go in.

LITERAL AND UNVARNISHED.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, a few Sabbaths ago, in preaching his fifth anniversary sermon in the Brooklin Tabernacle remarked:—The impression is abroad that you must fix up the gospel to suit the age, instead of fixing up the age to suit the gospel, and the young men coming out of our theological seminaries have the impression that they must palliate the prejudices of society, and must cover over the natural rottenness of the human heart, and that they must tell men what very clever people there are, and that they only need to be pressed in a little, one way and pulled out a little the other way, and then they will be all right. And they say: "All you want is development." Is it? Development! You might as well go to a man bent double with the cramps of Asiatic Cholera, and tell him all he wants is development. It is a lie. He needs to have his disease killed so that he may get well. Until our heart is changed by the grace of God, it is scabbed and ulcering with a great leprosy; and it is not development we want but it is the cure of an eating, loathsome, blasting, damning leprosy. Our whole nature throughout, and throughout and throughout is wrong, needs to be made over and over and over again. I wish that every word of that passage could come down with five tons weight of emphasis: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God;" though he had given $100,000 to religious institutions, though he had never used a bad word in his life, though he paid all his debts, though he lived on the tip-top round of respectability—"Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingom of God." But so little do we hear about this doctrine of regeneration in this day, that it is almost considered indelicate for a man to read in a public assemblage the words of Christ to Nicodemus about the new birth. And as to there being any hell, if we make any allusion to that, it must be with exquisite circumlocution, as "the place of high temperature," or "the word insalubrious," or, as a minister recently called it "the great elsewhere!" I say to the young men who are studying for the ministry, and there are thirty connected with this congregation, if you have any idea that it is nessary to preach an emasculated gospel in order to get people to come and hear it, you make a vast mistake. An eminent minister of New York, said to me some time ago, "I have a very large audience, but they are all christians. I can't get the worldly people to come in and listen to me. I hear that a good many worldly people come to hear you. You must preach some very strange things. What did you preach about yesterday?" "Well," I replied, "I preached yesterday morning on: "Seek ye the Lord while he is to be found," and in the evening I preached about; "Strive to enter in at the strait gate." Said he: "Is that all." Oh! my friends, there is a judgment seat in every man's heart, which tells him that the Bible is true, and that if it be true, the wicked and the righteous cannot go to the same place. So I say: Young men who are entering the ministry, if you really want a fresh theme, if you really want a novel theme to preach about, preach the old Gospel. Do not preach about "development," that is hackneyed. Do not preach about the Darwinian theory of the origin of our race:—that is worn out. But if you want something new, really new, so new that tens of thousands of people in this day do not know anything about it, then give them "repentance" in the morning, and "faith" at night; and in order to variety, next Sabbath give them "faith" in the morning, and "repentance" at night.

I believe that within the next twenty years, there will be an earthquake amid the American and English pulpit, and that those which have adhered to the old gospel, will stand, and that those which have preached anything else will go down. Paul cries out with great emphasis: "If any one though he be an angel from heaven preach any other gospel, let him be accursed."

Truth is truth though all men forsake it—it still remains unchanged the same, and its own excellence will recommend it, even though the conduct of its professors does not.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting held in Macoupin County, Illinois, on May 26 and 27, 1874.

there in love, it would do no good, I am sure. If you should take elders from either side, out there, on to the committee, it would make hard feelings. But if you send three persons out there from the States, three persons who shall go entirely unprejudiced, I think they would receive them and abide by their decisions, and all would go on harmoniously again. I think there ought three to go by all means. When we undertake to send brethren clear to California, let us send enough to succeed. We sent two brethren there before, but they did not get entire satisfaction out there. They did the best they could, no doubt, but now let us add to the team. If two can do well, three can do better.

39. Let them go independent of any prejudices and independent of any influences. There are two parties there. If we send two brethren and have them choose a third out there, it would be electing one of the accused to do all on his own case. Let us send a committee which can act independently upon the case. Let the committee act coolly and dispassionately, and go in the name of the Master. Unless those who go there act in this spirit, we shall see sad results. When the committee is sent, let it be composed of just such brethren as will do just right and show impartial justice to all. One party does not want a committee, but this should not make any difference. The committee should act justly to both parties, and then good will be done in the name of our Master.

29. Send wise and judicious men and then leave the arrangements to them. They can judge best, when they are on the spot, what ought to be done. Perhaps it may be best to take both the parties on the committee when they get out there, and perhaps it may not be best. They can tell when they are on the spot. Let us leave it all to them I do not think that we can at this distance, decide what is best to be done, especially when our knowledge of the case is so limited. We appoint our committee to attend to our business for us, now let us leave it all to them.

24. It is of the first importance that at at least a majority of the committee be disinterested entirely. Let us take these brethren from this meeting, and they can do as they think best when they get out there, about taking on any others.

18. You all know brethren, what good can be done by earnest, warm-hearted preaching the Gospel of Christ. Let us send brethren who will also when they are there, improve the time and edify the brethren by preaching the Gospel. I think it would do great good.

2 In my remarks I suggested the idea of two persons going on the committee. I did so simply because I only wanted to start the matter and put it before you for action. I think myself that three members of the committee would be better. Are you willing by silence to authorize the committee to appoint three persons to go on that committee to California?

No objection being made it was declared by the Chairman that it was the will of the meeting that the Standing Committee appoint three brethren to go to California and settle difficulties that had arisen in the church there.

B. F. Moomaw closed the day's session by prayer.

SECOND DAY.

MORNING SESSION.

The second morning session was opened by singing the 397th hymn, which was read by brother Sturgis. The vast congregation joined in singing,

"Come Holy Spirit, Heavenly Dove."

3. I feel that if there ever is a time when we ought to all pray, it is a time like this. While I feel more like having you pray for me than that I should bow and pray for you I do not decline the duty and the privilege. But let us all bow before the Lord and pray for one another. Let us pray.

R. H. Miller then led in a short earnest prayer asking the blessing of God upon the deliberations of the day.

1. Perhaps some explanation is needed as to the reason why I read the query which I hold in my hand instead of the Secretary's reading it. That explanation will be furnished by the nature of the query itself as will be seen as I proceed. It is from the Northern District of Indiana and is handed in by bro. Jacob Berkey.

Brother Quinter then read the query, which was as follows:

Inasmuch as many brethren and sisters are aggrieved at the statements made by brother D P. Sayler, in our periodical, Gospel Visitor, Vol. 22, No. 10, page 293, first column, commencing eighteen lines from the top, which statements we consider contrary to the Gospel and detrimental to our faith and practice. We ask bro. Sayler to publicly make satisfaction for the same. Should he not make public acknowledgement?

Ans. We ask brother Sayler to publicly make satisfaction for the same.

1. I propose the following answer to the query as a substitute for the one given by the District Meeting whence the query came.

Brother Quinter then read the substitute which was as follows:

As brother Sayler's view of the passage of Scripture in relation to which the objectionable sentiments were advanced, was given as his individual sentiment and not that of the brotherhood, and as the church expressed its view of the passage, we think it is premature to ask him to make public satisfaction.

4. Which would imply that he has made a private one. This is to disabuse the the minds of the brethren of the idea that he has made any satisfaction. However, so far as he is concerned, he has made it in writing and he is prepared to stand by what he has written; but let it pass.

13. I am satisfied with the substitute under the circumstances.

A brother in the audience.—Let us hear the passage in the Visitor read that we may know what it is all about.

Brother Quinter then read the passage which was as follows:

"Then you are guilty of a sin for which your life must be given. You may by a thorough repentance gain the favor of God to apply the blood of Christ to your soul, so as to save it from damnation in hell, but your life must be given up, and without repentance can not be complete; the laws of God and man require it. You must not hope, nor ask the Governor to spare it; by your crime you have forfeited it. You must pray God to give you grace to feel as willing to suffer death for it as you are willing to eat when hungry, etc. After instructing her she asked me to pray for her. The jailor, she and I knelt together in her cell, where I tried to pray God so to bless her, etc. This view was original with me at the time; I had not then heard or read an opinion on the subject. And now after sixteen years reflection and reading under the same circumstance, I would give the same instruction. I have never felt at liberty to give my name on a petition to the Governor to pardon a deliberate murderer; believing his sin to be unto death, and not to be prayed for, but given to atone for the life of his victim; and without he can have no acceptable repentance with God." —Gospel Visitor. Oct. 1872.

1. We hope the answer will be satisfatory. You can accept of it readily, after you have heard me read what has been read. This language was the objectionable part of the article, hence I have read that. It is not necessary to read the whole article. I hope the answer will pass.

7. I do not think that the brethren will consider that this Annual Meeting should criticise every brother's individual sentiment. If we do we are opening the door for such matters to come up each year. If he had expressed himself as giving forth the sentiments of the church, it would be a different matter. I do not see that we have anything to do in the case. If the Annual Meeting takes up such things the brethren will have their hands full. This certainly is not the place to call a brother to account for the expression of his sentiments somewhere else. So, if it is not proper to take up the expression of individual sentiments here—and it certainly is out of place—let us pass the substitute and be done with it.

A brother in the audience.—Would it not be better to keep private sentiments private.

17. There is one point that I do not like and that is that the law of God and the law of man both require and demand the life of a murderer for the life of his victim. Certainly the law of man demands it, but it is not so plain that in this new dispensation that the law of God demands it. My brethren do not teach me to preach that way.

On motion the substitute was passed

The Secretary then read from the Northern District of Indiana the following query and answer:

Will the District ask the Annual Meeting to decide that when a committee is sent by Annual Conference to any District, to settle difficulties, and elders or other members are involved more or less in the trouble to be settled, who live in adjoining or other Districts, that the committee have the right to call such into the District, they are called to and there settle the matter of their case also, or go into their District and there hear and decide in the case, that a final settlement of the trouble may be effected.

Ans. All committees should have the power to do so.

13. I rise to explain what is meant by the query. We mean like this: that somethings elders in adjoining districts come into districts where there is trouble, and through their influence, the part that is out of the order is strengthened. It was to settle and determine the question whether the elders were right in so doing, that we thought it best to bring the query here. We have such a case in our district and we thought it proper to settle it in our district, and we would probably have done so had not elders from another district come into our district and advocated principles which we consider contrary to the principles of the general brotherhood. This is why we brought the query here. I think the brethren understand now, not only why we brought the query here, but also what is meant by the query itself.

On motion the answer to the query was passed.

From the district of Northern Indiana came up also the following paper which the Secretary read:

Inasmuch as the Savior says, "In secret I have done nothing," will the Annual Meeting decide that the churches may ask the applicant for baptism all the questions in the presence of the whole congregation?

Ans. Yes. See Acts 3: 37–47, ala Acts 10: 42–48.

28. It seems to me that we should exercise our judgement about that. Circumstances may differ and we should take the circumstances into consideration. Probably it is not prudent on all occasions to ask the candidates in public and probably it is not prudent on all occasions to ask the questions in private. We should use judgement on such subjects. There is no need, in my opinion of an absolute and invariable rule on the subject.

18. We merely want the privilege, when the Church desires it, of asking the questions of the candidate publicly. We do not want to make it a rule that they shall be asked publicly, but only that, when the Church desires it, they may have the privilege of asking the questions publicly. Sometimes it seemed best to ask the questions publicly. The seeming necessity for this arose in the time of war. We had trouble. We had always put our questions privately, and when we said that we were pledged to peace we could not prove it, for no one outside of our own brethren had heard of the pledge. Up to that time we had always put the questions privately, but then we began to put them publicly, our brethren found fault with us for that, and so now we bring the matter here. Other reasons may arise why it may be best in certain localities, and under certain circumstances to ask the questions publicly. As I said before we do not want to change the rule and make it read that the church must ask the questions publicly, but that only where the church thinks best, to have the privilege of asking the questions publicly. We want that understood that we do not want a rule but a privilege, to be exercised when in the judgement of the church it is best. We ask to deviate from the present rule, under certain circumstances, when the church may think that there is good reason for it.

A second reading was called for, and, accordingly, the Secretary read the query and the answer the second time.

28. That will do for my part.

38. I move an amendment to leave it optional with the churches.

5. I am under the impression that all the churches should have one and the same order in visiting applicants for baptism. Ever since I have been a member of the church we have always visited applicants for baptism privately. I am in favor of the ancient order in this important matter. Then there will be no difficulty. Then there will be no confusion.

17. I understand that there is trouble in some places because the world says that we oppose secret organizations and that we are a secret organization ourselves at the same time that we oppose them. They say that we have as much secrecy as they. Now let us have it as the brethren proposed, and that is that where the the church thinks it best, it may have the privilege of asking the questions of the candidate openly. Let us not mind it brethren; but let us use some judgement in the matter.

11. We felt it necessary to ask the questions openly because so many were going into secret organizations, and they said that we were as secret as they were. And not only that, but on certain occasions we could not visit the applicants for baptism privately because of the cold weather. Under such circumstances we have questioned the candidates publicly and thought we were doing nothing wrong. There is a good deal of force, it seems to me in the argument of those who say that we oppose secrecy in others and practice it ourselves. I ask you when we disparage the idea of secrecy and then call our applicants for baptism into secret council, do we not make immediate contradiction of the faith we profess? It seems to me then that this Annual Meeting ought to give the churches the privilege of asking the questions of the applicants publicly where the circumstances may seem to demand it.

16. No, brethren, we do not undertake to deny that we hold some of our meetings secretly with the church and not openly with the world. We do not undertake to deny that. I am opposed to holding the church meetings with open doors. There is some business which we do not choose to transact publicly, but private among ourselves. I am opposed to visiting our applicants for baptism publicly, because that is not after the old established order of our church. But we may find other reasons for visiting the applicants for baptism in private. This custom is in accordance with other customs of our church. When we commune together we hold close communion. We have an alter whereof they have no right to partake. No, brethren, I am for standing by the ancient order of things, which has not wrought any great harm thus far.

20. Sometimes we are almost compelled to make little changes. Where I live we we have been going east of the Blue Ridge and preaching to all who would listen, but our doctrine seemed strange to the people there, and we were a good deal misrepresented. There was a good deal of talk about these Dunkards. Some said "These Dunkards say that they do not preach for money but they have a private affair of their own apart from the public preaching. After they get through talking to the people in public they take their members into a private council and make them promise to keep things secret. They have a sinking fund there, and all of them have to put something into it." Well, when they said such things, we, of course, denied it, but when we told them, and the applicants told them what they had to promise, they said "If that is all you have to promise, why not ask the questions and make the promises openly?" When we saw how it was going we began to visit our applicants openly. It seemed necessary that we should do so and we did. We did not see any harm in doing so. It is my opinion that it is often the best way. I am satisfied with the answer. I say let us pass it. It is the best we can do.

9. I say pass it by all means. You cannot do better. You will not get a better answer if you talk here all night.

5. I am under the impression that so long as we have a church here upon the earth, a church militant, so long will that church be misrepresented. If we have to change the ancient order of the church, in order to satisfy the world, in order to avoid persecution, we are certainly, brethren, getting far away from the words and principles of our Lord Jesus Christ. I, therefore contend that the ancient order, as regards visiting applicants for baptism, is a good order. It has always worked well. Why, then should we make a change, as it regards this order? Let us keep to the old paths.

40. Some years ago I moved to Iowa, when the Brethren were not very strong. Of course we were all opposed to secret societies, and we did not hesitate to let it be known. We told the world that we would have nothing to do with secret societies, but in visiting the applicants for baptism we did it in private. It was not long until some one came up to me and said, "Yoder you talk a good deal about secret societies, but you have a secret society in your own church. Is there not a certain part of your exercises that you do strictly in secret?" The next time I had occasion to visit an applicant for baptism I did it openly, and that ended it.

24. We have visited our members openly thus far. Is there anything wrong about it? Every question which we put to the applicant contains no duty which we do not preach publicly. What difference does it make? Why should we preach the doctrines publicly and ask the question privately? I do not see any reason in it. We let all the world know that we do not approve of secret societies. I preach that in public. And I ask the question in public too. When I was baptized,—I and my wife,—the brethren interrogated us in the presence of the whole congregation. The brethren have interrogated applicants in the presence of all the communion. We do it in Indiana. There are brethren who can testify to what I say. Applicants have been interrogated in the presence of all. I can see no harm in it either. All that we ask the applicants for baptism we preach openly to the world. Then is there anything wrong in asking question openly, in public? If there is then let us stop it at once, but it seems to me that there can be nothing wrong in it.

A brother in the audience.—At the present time we have nothing on the Minute to make our practice in this particular uniform. We want a uniform common practice.

21. Have we not got the practice of the church laid down in the Minutes of 1848? Does it not tell us first to examine the applicants in private and then bring them before the church. There is an order laid down. Now the question is, are we to add to the rules already made, and give the privilege of asking the question in public? Then the question would come up; what do you mean by the word public? It may mean before all the church or it may mean before the church and the world. The brethren have been giving some reasons why it would be better to examine the applicants publicly, but there are also reasons why it should not be done. Suppose you are examining an applicant before the whole congregation, and there should be some persons in the congregation who were in favor of secret societies, or members of them. Now, in order to avoid giving offense it would be nessary to avoid speaking of secret societies, for they think that we have no right to speak against secret societies, and you would have to offend them in that case. There may be nothing very wrong in brethren asking the question in public, but the brethren must guard against giving offence. So far as this particular care is concerned I have no objection in particular cases, where the circumstances may seem to require it, to allow the brethren to examine the applicant publicly; but I am opposed in general to making so many changes in our rules. No good can come of it. We seem to be all the while making changes. This particular case, though would seem to be of a different nature from that of many that came up. It appears that in some parts of the country the applicants have been examined publicly and no harm has arisen from the practice. I think we might make an exception of this case and allow the church the privilege of asking the question in public; when it is thought best to do so.

12. We expect to treat the evil of secret societies as we do any other evil, no matter who may be offended. We expect to speak against them publicly and privately, and warn our young men to shun them. But I am in favor of the answer of this query. I was received into the church in Pennsylvania 35 years ago publicly. I want the brethren to pass the answer.

17. We had a case in our church of a brother who went and joined the Grangers and he held up the idea that the brethren themselves were a sort of secret society, and took those desiring to become members one side privately and made them promise such and such things. He told this all about, and when the church trial came off he brought in some outsiders to prove that when members are received outsiders are turned out, and the thing is done secretly. He made capital out of it, as he could not have done had we examined our applicants openly.

9. The Apostle John writes, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth me not because it knew him not." We must expect that the world will misrepresent us. We should look out of danger when the world entirly agrees with us.

5. Our Lord Jesus Christ has taught us a private order. See the 18th chapter of Matthew. Read the 18th chapter of Matthew and you will find that our Lord Jesus Christ has given us an order which must be observed in private. Brethren, I am afraid that Babylon is getting into the church. We need to be on our guard.

A brother in the audience.—A word in regard to the practice of brother John P. Ebersole. Brother John has told me something I never knew before, in regard to the pratice of the church on this point. I will tell you how it was 30 years ago when I was baptized. I will tell you what brother John's custom was then. Brother John had a practice of examining the applicant in regard to the faith before the church. Then they withdrew a little and the church was consulted whether they were willing to receive such a one or not. Then if the church was willing to receive them, the brethren sat around with brother John in the centre, and laid things down to them while there would be perhaps a half-dozen outsiders looking on. In a new country it is certainly not expedient to rigidly enforce any such rule. In the first place there is no real need of it, and in the second place it is imposing a burden on the brethren. It would be extremely difficult many times to visit the applicants in private. We have often no houses for it.

13. We do not want to depart from the usages of the old brethren where we can help it, but when churches do sometimes feel compelled, by the circumstances which surround them, to depart in some particular from the regular, though it be in something entirely non-essential, brethren of other churches sometimes complain. This is an instance. So to avoid all complaints and give satisfaction we ask that churches which may desire to question applicants for baptism publicly, have the privilege of doing so. We do not want to make other churches question their applicants publicly. We only want the privilege of doing it ourselves, when we desire to do it. We want to stand by the decision of the Annual Meeting, and we want the Annual Meeting to stand by us in this thing. We want the Annual Meeting to give us the privilege of examining the applicant for baptism publicly, when we think it best to do so. We do not say hard things about secret societies. We tell our members not to have anything to do with them, but we do not say hard things of them. We try to live so that even many of the world say." I will go into an organization which people like 'The Brethren will not have anything to do with. It makes many abstain from secret societies when they find that "The Brethren" will not receive them so long as they acknowledge their allegience to them. The reasons for our request are reasonable, simple and plain, and we have, as we think, a right to ask that it be granted. We would prefer that the query and answer should not be changed. We wish you would pass it as it is.

18. These brethren are honest in bringing up this query and answer that by its passage, they may avoid deviating from an order of the church. The request is merely that churches that desire to question applicants publicly be allowed to do so. It does not ask for a rule, but a privilege. Considering what the request is, and considering the circumstances, it seems to me that we can not do less than to grant it.

2. This is a simple matter to call forth so much talk. I must cut off farther argument and put the question upon its passage. What do you say brethren?

4. I merely want to say a few things. If these questions which are proposed concern faith and practice you are bound to put them before the applicant for baptism publicly because the gospel must be preached before the world. When you try a member for acts of immorality, the 18th chapter of Matthew requires that you do that privately. Hence, church councils which investigate character, must be held with closed doors. If non-resistance is a doctrine taught by the Savior, it must be publicly laid before the candidate for admission into the church. It must be laid before men and women publicly, in order that they may make a good profession before the world. This has been the custom of the church always, so far as I know. The church has never reserved any practical part of religion for secret instruction. Let us pass that.

16. I deny that that is the practice. I have been a servant of the church a good while, and I want to tell you that I have been on the frontiers as much as any brother here. I have preached just as much as any of you on the frontier, and I have always practiced this way of examining applicants for baptism privately. Brethren have objected to it sometimes, but I never saw any bother grow out of it, in any shape or form. It has been the practice among the brethren wherever I have lived. I learned it from the brethren 30 odd years ago, and I have practiced it since. What is the use then of saying that it has always been the practice to examine the applicants publicly? I contend that we have the right to ask the applicants private questions. But then, brethren, we do not hold these things in secret. We ask the questions privately, but we preach the doctrines openly. All those questions which we ask the applicants in private, we preach in public. We lay all these things, which we preach in public, before the applicant in private. I apprise all applicants of all the facts which they have to meet in becoming members of the church. I remind them at our folks in regard to secret societies. Then when they are baptized in, if they afterward attach themselves to a secret society, the church deals with them. That is our ancient order, as I conceive it.

13. I [illegible] that we want [illegible] order? Nothing of the kind. We want liberty for the whole brotherhood to examine applicants publicly if it is thought best. We want to get out of all difficulty in regard to this thing.

(Several voices.)—Pass it.

41. In different localities we have different practices in regard to other things than this. This is not a very important matter. Let us pass it. I do not see anything very vital to the interests of the church in this discussion. Suppose some brethren do, in some instances, examine applicants for baptism publicly. What of it? What is the harm? Let us pass this query and answer, and let the brethren go and visit some in private and some in public, as it may seem best. I do not think there are any who will violate such freedom, and I do not see how it can be violated. Let us govern ourselves in regard to the mode of examining applicants, whether publicly or privately, just as circumstances may suggest. There are other things more important than this in regard to which different practices exist in the church. Why say that Babylon is getting into the church?

5. Because it is out of order.

4. It appears from the discussion that some of the brethren have reference to a question which is not expressed in this query. They have been talking about one set of questions and I about another. When we ask an applicant for baptism, in regard to his faith, whether he has repented or not, we do that in private, but if I understand the meaning of the query it does not refer to that question, but to question in regard to doctrine and practice.

35. We must be consistent in our principles and practice. When we take a candidate to the water-side and there read to him the 18th chapter of Matthew, we question him in public, and nobody says a word against it. Now, why can we not consistently also ask the other questions in public? There is nothing in the way of it, as I see. There is nothing in the word of God to forbid it, while there is much that would indirectly sanction it. There is no single case in the New Testament of a person being taken aside and taught the gospel privately. Christ taught before the world. Now, if brethren in certain localities find any advantage in examining applicants privately, let them do so; and if brethren in other localities find any advantage in examining applicants for baptism publicly, let them do so. It is my opinion that we had better pass this query and its answer. Some of the brethren desire it, and it can do no harm.

12. It seems to me that there is a little too much fire in the matter. It is a little too warm. We have always made the questions public before the church in our district, and we only want the privilege of continuing to do so, so that there will be no fault-finding. If the Annual Meeting gives the privilege to those churches which desire it no one can complain. We make no complaints. We are satisfied with the brethren if the brethren will be satisfied with us.

A brother in the audience—It seems to me that the brethren do not understand each other just right in the matter. The brethren do not understand it that the take counsel for the applicant publicly. I know that is not the case. I know that was always done, that the counsel was always taken for the applicant secretely, and these things were laid before the church. I have [illegible] years ago, that the brother visited the member privately, and then laid it before the church. The brother who visited the applicant taught him what he must deny, and when the applicants were taught that, afterward council was taken whether the church was willing to receive them; and this was done, not in public, but by the church called together alone. The way I would have it, would be: I would have the brethren first talk to the applicants privately, and see whether they would deny themselves according to the law of God, and then take counsel of the church for them, and after counsel has been taken for them, if the church is willing to receive them, they must be brought before the church and the questions asked publicly. In that way I would lay the questions before them publicly.

3. I move that the Standing Committee take the query and its answer into their possession again till the afternoon session.

Carried.

The following query was handed up from the Middle District of Indiana, and was read by the Secretary:

Inasmuch as the Annual Meeting is favorable to the holding of protracted meetings, what right have bishops and house-holders of certain Districts of the Church, to limit such meetings to series not exceeding three in number?

Ans. They have the right if not conducted in the order of the Gospel and the Church.

The query and its answer passed without debate.

The following query from the Southern District of Indiana, was read by the Secretary:

Will not this District Meeting petition the Annual Meeting of 1874 to reconsider the fourth query of the Minutes of the Annual Meeting of 1873?

Ans. Yes, and have the answer to read as follows:

A member should be tried in the church where his membership is, except when a member commits an offense in his church and changes membership before it is settled; he shall then go back to the church he left and be tried there.

The following query similar in import to the above, was hand d up from Northern Illinois, and was also read by the Secretary.

(This being similar to the above, it is omitted.)

1. I move that we decline to reconsider.

3. This query ought to be reconsidered and the answer changed a little. We have before us in the Minutes the query concerning where a brother who has committed an offence shall be tried; whether in the church where his membership is, or in the church where the offence is committed. Now, the reason why we want to make a change is because in some cases it is best not to have the trial in the church where the offence is committed, but in the church where the membership is held. What gave rise to the query and its answer was a matter of experience. There was some trouble which came under our knowledge. For instance, there are three churches near Cerro Gordo, and if a member of a church not in Cerro Gordo should go to Cerro Gordo and commit an offence, he must by the rule be tried in Cerro Gordo, though he may live and hold his membership at a short or long distance from Cerro Gordo. If he [illegible] and get drunk though he is not far from home, he must be tried in the church in Cerro Gordo. In Lafayette many members go to do business, and if they do wrong, they must be tried in that church. This answer makes it the duty of the church where the offence is committed, to take up a case and try a member of another church. The membership of a member who commits an offence may be five hundred miles away, but you must try him here, and if he is expelled, you must expel him here. That is the decision. I do not think that any of the brethren, when they rightly understand it, will be in favor of leaving it as it is. If a brother lives in one church and commits an offence there, and before the offence is settled moves away, we send him back. Even if he gets a church letter, if there is an offence found back there committed before his membership was changed, we send him back there. If he committed an offence after he changed his membership, then that church will try him where the membership was held. It don't seem right that one church should try me and expel me from another church. That is the shape the rules of the church are in now, if I understand them. Our church can expel the accused from another church. This is the reason why I advocate making a change. This answer that we would have, is as follows. (He then read the answer given above.) Suppose I live in Indiana and hold my membership there. While living there I commit an offence, but my brethren know nothing about, and when I desire to move to Illinois, they give me a letter and I change my membership to Illinois. Then it is found out that I committed an offence in Indiana which was never settled. They will, at once, send me back to Indiana to be tried for the offence.

12. Let me ask one question. We had one case of offence committed in Indiana, while the offender lived in Illinois. We had to bring our witnesses to Illinois, and it cost us considerable money. How would the answer you propose affect a case like that? While you are about it you had better make an answer that will give perfect satisfaction to all.

3. The answer is right enough in all cases. There was a brother moved into our church. His membership was in Ohio, but he moved into our neighborhood. He brought a letter from the church where he came from in Ohio, but we could not take it because they had found out by this time that he had committed an offence which had not been settled. They had found out what he had done and we could not take the letter. But we took up the case and got all the evidence in that we could in the case and sent that to the church where his membership was in Ohio. When they knew all about the evidence, they tried the case in the church where his membership was in Ohio. There is no trouble in that. A brother in Missouri comes to Indiana and commits an offence in Indiana. We take the evidence in the case and send it back to the church in Missouri and they try the case there, in the church where his membership is.

In response to a call for a second reading, the Secretary read the query and its answer the second time.

14. I object to the passage of the answer without some further understanding of it. I think this answer does not meet the case in the question of last year, at all. Brother Miller in his argument in favor of reconsidering the query and its answer, as it stands in the Minutes has referred to a brother who trespasses in the congregation where

HEAR THE CHURCH.

This is an important injunction and is the only thing that will give the Church a basis sufficiently solid to stand. But the question, apparently with some is, who or what part of the membership constitutes the Church. Is it the majority or minority, or is it the bishops? These thoughts were suggested while reading a part of the Report of our late Annual Conference. One brother avers that to be ruled by the majority is dangerous, and that it will lead to loose discipline, or, in other words, will hurl the Church into the common errors of popular Christendom.

Now just here is the whispering of a spirit that is very antagonistical to the spirit of Christ, and is equivalent to saying, "I am righteous, but over one half of my brethren and sisters are possessed with the spirit of heresy, of the devil, and therefore it is not safe that the majority should rule." There is no use of brethren trying to go around the stump or to evade the force of language. Words have meanings and these are thought to be understood by those who use them, hence when we hear men use certain words we gather their ideas from their legitimate meanings, and when brethren say that the majority should not rule we take it for granted that it is the outgrowth of a spirit of insubordination, a spirit that is unwilling to hear the Church and one that dares to set up his own righteousness above that of his brethren on the ground of being more holy than they. Is not this a presumptuous thought, a pharisaical idea of perfection? Think of a tree thriving that is over half dead! Will it grow? Can it live? When brethren once get such an exalted view of their own righteousness it would be far better for them to separate themselves and form a new body without spot and without wrinkle, but as men are prone to evil it would be still better not to allow the majority to rule but invest the power in a holy few. Such is the spirit of popedom, and should be crushed by every lover of the liberty as vouchsafed to us by Jesus Christ in whom we are made free indeed. This is the same spirit that stands up at our Annual Meetings and declares, "I will not consent, be it understood, I oppose," and thus refuses to hear the Church. No matter how plain the garb or how great the profession of humility, there is a proud heart there, a stubborn will that will resist and persist until the the majority submits to the minority. These are the ones that are continually brewing troubles, and distressing our Annual Meetings and the brotherhood.

They have set their standard and everything that does not come up to that must be condemned. That point of holiness happened to be in the Church just about the time they became identified as part of that body, and as a consequence, every change that has since been made, unless they made it, is wrong—the result of fast brethren.

Those who read carefully, the report of A. M. will notice that one of the brethren stated that the object of the meeting was to defend the ancient or old order of the Brethren. We say, God forbid that the brethren shall have either an ancient or modern order to defend. Why not leave these unmeaning terms out of our Church vocabulary? The Brethren as a Church have ever emphatically declared that they have no order, no discipline but the bible. Then, the object of our Conference is not to defend the orders and traditions of men but the Scriptures of divine truth. Let us be consistent and learn to call things by their right names. If we intend to risk our salvation on the opinions of men and have an "Encyclopedia" for our Church government let us call it the "Brethren's Discipline," for that is just what it will be as soon as we accept it as our creed instead of the Bible. We are beginning to feel somewhat distressed when we examine closely the spirit of some of our brethren in regard to these things, and it is high time that we get our eyes opened to the glaring facts that are staring us in the face. We respect and revere the spirit that was manifested by our old standard bearers who have gone home to their reward, but little did they expect or think that those who would follow them would accept what they said and done as their creed instead of the Bible. When we study the history of the Church we find it was a work of progression, and that our old brethren were ever ready and willing to exchange error for truth, and perhaps there was no time since our present organization that there were so many important and radical changes as there were in the first fifty years. What would have been the result had our brethren within the first ten years after their organization got to work and published a book of formulas, a discipline and called it the "old order" with the understanding that every departure would be a violation of law? Every rational brother cannot fail to see that such a course would have been very unwise, but not a particle more so than for the brethren now to claim that just fifty years ago the Church was perfect, and what was then thought, said, and done was perfect and that we ought now to accept it as our creed. This creed system has led every other Church away from the gospel that used it, and if we are not careful we will fall into the same current. If our hearts could only get full enough of Christ to forget the unwise and unscriptural terms of "old brethren," "young brethren," "slow brethren," "fast brethren," and "old" and ancient orders it would remove a great stumbling block away from the Church.

These things are the natural outgrowth of not hearing the Church. When we say the Church we mean its members, and not its bishops or its ministers. So long as we are willing to abide with its decisions so long can we hope for a pure Church, or rather, Church government. But as soon as our A. M. commences to pass decisions to please a few who are unwilling to hear the Church so soon will those decisions be ignored. Such decisions have been passed, and prominent among them was that of withholding the names from the report. We do not hesitate in saying that we believe that at least two-thirds of those present were in favor of having the names with the report, but for the sake of peace and to gratify such as are not willing to submit to the majority they yielded. Bro. Kinsey, in the July No. of the Vindicator, expresses himself rather freely in condemnation of those editors who try to please their readers. We are not the least ashamed to admit that we try to please our readers when they will be pleased with the truth as it is in Jesus, and what is reasonable and right. We are all brethren having equal rights and privileges. Every brother and sister in the Church has as good a right to hear or learn the deliberations of our Annual Conference as bishops, editors, non-professors, and even the gay and giddy worldling, but a great many of them have not the means to go there. From such, our dear brother would rob the privilege of sitting down in their own houses and there, free of charge, read the whole proceedings. Why should they be robbed of this privilege? Because the brethren and sisters want it,—want the very same thing that bro. Kinsey and five thousand other brethren and sisters want ed. Let us reason with at least a show of fairness. If it is wrong for our brethren to read the deliberations it is just as wrong to hear them. For such brethren to be consistent they should remain at home, unless they think that they are the Church and on that account their services are especially needed there. These may seem to be rather pointed conclusions, but they are the legitimate deductions of that spirit which denies others liberties equal with themselves. We hope that this spirit of the minority usurping power over the majority may soon die out and that the Church may be acknowledged as the body of Christ, and that body be composed of its legitimate members, for we are all one in Christ if it so be that we obey him. We are determined to stand by the Church and its decisions as long as they are made by the Church, but when it once becomes so corrupt that the majority will be a dangerous element and the minority must rule, we want the Church to have a voice in saying who the minority shall be.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

The Good Dog "Beel" And the Wounded Soldier.

"Here, again, I met two or three wounded, but in a fair state of convalescence, limping about slowly. One of these men had a little dog—an iron gray terrier, unmistakably English—following at his heels, but only on three legs. If the story the man told me is to be believed—and for my own part I had not the slightest hesitation in the matter, his manner of telling it was so simple and earnest—the dog had been the means, under Providence, of saving his master's life. He had been struck by a ball in the chest, near Ham, and lay on the ground for six hours when the fighting was over. He had not lost consciousness, but the blood was flowing freely, and he was gradually getting weaker and weaker. There was none but the dead near him, and his only living companion was the English terrier, who prowled restlessly about him with his master's kepi in his mouth. At last the dog set off at a trot, and the wounded soldier felt sure his only friend had deserted him. The night grew dark, the cold was intense, and he had not even the strength to touch his wounds, which every instant grew more and more painful. At length his limbs grew cold, and, feeling a sickly faintness steal upon him, he gave up all hope of life' and recommended himself to God. Suddenly, and when it had come to the worst, he heard a bark which he knew belonged to only one little dog in the world, felt something lick his face, and saw the glare of lanterns. The dog had wandered for miles till he arrived at a roadside cabaret. The people had heard the cannonading all day, and seeing the képi in the dog's mouth, and noticing his restless movements, decided to follow him. He took them straight to the spot—too straight for a little cart they had brought with them to cross fields and hedges—but just in time. When the friendly help had arrived the man had fainted, but he was saved. There were honest tears in the man's eyes when he was telling me, and I fully believed him. The dog, too, had been slightly touched in the leg by a ball in the same battle, and had since been lame. He got him when a puppy from an English sailor at Dunkirk, and called him 'Beel;' very probably the French for bill."—Angel of Peace.

The Vagabond Sage.

An old man of very active physiognomy, answering to the name of Jacob Wilmot, was brought to the police court. His clothes looked as if they might have been bought second-hand in his youthful prime, for they had suffered more from the rubs of the world than the proprietor himself.

"What business?"

"None; I'm a traveler."

"A vagabond, perhaps?"

"You are not far wrong. Travelers and vagabonds are about the same thing. The difference is that the latter travels without money and the former without brains."

"Where have you traveled?"

"All over the Continent."

"For what purpose?"

"Observation."

"What have you observed?"

"A little to commend, much to censure, and a great deal to laugh at."

"Humph! what do you commend?"

"A handsome woman that will stay at home, an eloquent preacher who will preach short sermons, a good writer that will not write too much, and a fool that has sense enough to hold his tongue."

"What do you censure?"

"A man that marries a girl for her fine clothing, a youth who studies medicine while he has the use of his hands, and the people who will elect a drunkard to office."

"What do you laugh at?"

"I laugh at a man who expects his position to command that respect which his personal qualifications and qualities do not merit."

He was dismissed.

NO NEED OF FIGHTING.

There is no need of fighting among children. They can get along better without it. They cannot obtain peace and comfort by fighting. Peace never comes by war: loves never comes by hatred; nor good by evil; nor safty by destruction; nor life by death. To fight to settle our difficulties is always dangerous to both parties, and to every individual concerned. Disputes among children, or men can never be settled in this way. On the contrary, they are always increased by it. It always takes two or more to fight. One cannot fight alone. There must be two parties—the hater and the hatred—the striker and the stricken. Now it is always in the injured party to prevent a fight. If a person strikes me, and I keep cool, and show a kind and loving spirit toward him, and do not strike back, I can soon overcome him, and make him ashamed: but the moment I get excited and and angry, and begin to strike back, I lose all influence over him. So it depends on the injured party to prevent fighting and make peace.—A Kiss for a Blow.

DIVINE SUNSHINE.—There is no more beautiful passage in Tyndall than the one in which he says all the forces now woking in nature are solar ones. The public power of steam and the emence coal desposits are only condensed and preserved sunshine. So devine influence, are all through the centurice, is stored up in the institutions. How sweet and bland this sunshine! We look up and the whole globe above us seems as a vast goblet of sunlit wine. As it falls on the blending yielding willow its influence seems only gentle and harmless. But let it fall on the living are growing by the wall, and it will cause the tree to force the harvest stone or brick wall out of its way. So the soul grows, and Christian character is developed under the divine sun.—Beecher.

BUFFALO WELD CO. COL. }
JUNE 19th 1874 }

Dear Pilgrim: —

That I may keep interested parties posted by their earnest request, I will pen a few lines at this time. The smiles of nature are bright this morning having had an excellent rain last night. So far we have had an excellent season, sufficient of rain for crops. There has been no urgent necessity for irrigation in this section. A much larger crop has been put out in Colorado this year than ever before and from every quarter comes cheering news of the prospects, grass is unusually good and the thousands of cattle and other stock are revelling in fatness. Dairy men are turning out an abundance of the pure golden butter. Business in this locality is dull, the prospect of an early completion of our R. R. at this time is not so flattering as sometime ago. The financial crisis has so paralized Western enterprises of the kind that it will take some little time to revive activity. A railroad we will have beyond doubt but just when is a problem to be solved in the future. About one million has been expended on the grading of the road up this valley, one half to three quarters of that amount is yet needed to complete the road and put it in running order, we may get the road the coming fall but at present we have no assurance that such will be the case. Owing to uncertainty of the road this year, scarcity of fuel and other causes, some few of those that come here have taken a bad movement. Never, in the history of the territory, has there been such an emigration to her borders as this summer. Long trains of teams can be seen about daily wending their way up the valley. Many bring heads of stock with them which is wise indeed. Occasionly we see some Eastward bound disgusted with the West because they did not find chances for wealth and indepedence in any thing lying "around loose" to be had just by picking them up. Nature has so arranged matters that man must toil, sweat, and endure some privations ere he can become in possession of the coveted prize. Of the many who come here or elsewhere in the frontier regions of the west the industrious energetic and determined are as a general thing the ones that remain, the timid and wavering minded return east to seek shelter under the "vine and fig-tree" of others planting where it would be good policy for them to remain and leave the work of development in the great west to men and women with strong nerves and determined purpose. Such men as came here a few years ago with not a dollar' now are worth their thousands and like the woman I might mention who is running a dairy ranche on her own hook and clearing a thousand dollars a year. Chances for almost every occupation are here but the chance amounts to nothing unless the person is qualified to fill it and right here let me say persons, who with chances in the east have done but little need to come here expecting to do well simply because there are good chances. The same law that governs labor and capital, indolence and poverty, in the East governs them here.

My advice is called for in regard to persons coming to this locality now. I could not advise any to come here now who would have to depend on their labor for a living, while good land can be had almost for nothing it takes means to improve it, and to support a family or even ones self. At the price claims can now be bought it would be better for those of small means that want homes here to purchase land and wait until times and conveniencies are better, then come and live on their land and improve it. Good lands, such as can be watered, can now be had, owing to the dullness of times, for from 2 to $4 per acre. But persons with some spare means, and on account of seeking a healthy climate may come at any time and do well here. As to our facilities for irrigation we can say our canal is so far constructed as to give us water for our present crops. The town site of Buffalo is so that it can have adundance of water when needed. (Let me here say to correct erroucous impressions that Buffalo is as yet only a laid out town site containing 640 acres, on the line of the Colorado Central R. R.) On the south side of the river there is also an irrogating canal in good order, crops of all kinds look well.

We have appointments for preaching regularly attended and order good, hope the gospel seed sown may germinate, vegetate, and produce a copious crop to the honor and glory of God our Father and Savior. Yours truly in love and hope.

A Visit to Snake Spring Church.

PILGRIM OFFICE, June 29, '74.

This morning I arrived at this place on my return from a lovefeast held in the Snake Spring Congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., commencing June 26th, at 10 A. M. This Church is under the care of Eld. Andrew Snowberger, who has been, for some time afflicted with the dropsy. Thinking that this, in all probability, might be the last meeting he might be permitted to enjoy, he was anxious to be present, and notwithstanding his afflictions he came and was present during the greater part of the meeting. The meeting was largely attended and good order maintained. The following ministering brethren from adjoining Churches were present: D. M. Holsinger, from Clover Creek, Leonard Furry and Daniel Snowberger, from Yellow Creek, and Jacob Steel and Henry Clapper, from Hopewell. During the meeting Jacob Koontz was advanced to the second degree in the ministry, and three were added to the Church by baptism. There was also preaching next A. M. (Sunday) in the Church, and in the afternoon at a school-house near a sick brother who was not able to come out to the Church. I am now on my return, and this evening, will take the train for home. GRABILL MYERS.

JELLOWAY, O. June 17, 74.

Dear Pilgrim :—

This morning, after reading the first part of the Report of A. M. a brother being present, liked it so well that he concluded to take the PILGRIM the remainder of the year, and if more of the brethren would come to the same conclusion I think it would be better for them and their children, but the political papers are taking the attention of some too much. I imagine that when I go into a brother's house I can tell what kind of a paper they take, whether political or religious, without asking them. I know a sister who gave the last dollar she had for the Times and refused to buy a hymn book or take a religious paper. But such is the case when the love of Christ is not there. O, let us think to what we are bringing our children. By putting into their hands political and fictitious papers instead of those published by the Brethren, we drift them into the current of the world, when we should make use of all lawful means of directing their minds towards the Church and to religious reading. Dear Brother:—Enclosed please find 80 cents. for which send PILGRIM including the copies containing the full report of the Annual Meeting. The dear PILGRIM ceased to visit me after number 50 for 1873.. I cannot do without it any longer, it seems as if I had lost the best friend I had. Here after please consider me a permanent subscriber. This arm of the Church (Cold water) is not prospering as it ought to, there seems to be a lukewarmness between the brethren that ought not to be, but our hearts desire and prayers to God is that there may be a oneness and a willingness to bear one anothers burdens in the embarrassments that are hanging over this branch of the church of God. There might be a great deal said and written on the above state of things but I forbear hoping that all will be right and we may all be able, by the help of God, to speak the same things. Fraternally yours. NICOLAS TRAPP.

H. B. Brumbaugh :—

We are just through with hay-making. The hay crop is good. Had fine weather for making it. Harvest is at hand, and in a few days the farmer will be cutting wheat, to be gathered into the garner, to supply the millions with the staff of life. God, in the meekness of his loving kindness, seems to shower around us abundantly of the things to gladden our hearts. Why not praise him! "Praise him, O my soel!" "All within me praise the Lord."

In the abundance of the blessings the people not altogether forget the the benefits of the goodness of the Lord. Some in lifting their hearts in praise to God, others are only willing to present body and spirit to him.

Since Spring we have had about eight additions to the church by baptism. Among the number, there were some who tried to serve the Lord in other faiths, but found that the faith of Jesus is the life-giving faith. One of the Methodist persuasion, three of the Lutheran, and two of the River Brethren. One of the lost was one of their principal ministers, and his wife. I hope they all now enjoy the full right of the ways of Jesus; the length and the breadth of the righteousness of God as revealed by his Son, our Savior Jesus Christ.

ON PRAYER.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

As this is a rainy day and I could do no out-door work, I thought to improve the time by writing a few thoughts for the PILGRIM on the important subject of prayer. Prayer is the offering of the emotions and desires of the soul to God in the name and through the mediation of Jesus Christ; it is the communion of the heart with God, through the aid of the Holy Spirit and is to the Christian the very life of the soul. Without this filial spirit no one can be a Christian. Job 21: 15. In all ages God has delighted in the prayers of His saints. From the promulgation of the law the Hebrews did not intermit public worship daily in the temple or the tabernacle. It consisted in offering the evening and morning sacrifices every day, accompanied with prayers by the priests and the Levites in that holy edifice. Every day also the priest offered sacrifices, incense offerings and first fruits, for individuals. They also performed ceremonies for the redemption of the first-born or for purification from pollutions, in a word, the people came thither from all parts to discharge their vows and to perform their devotions, not only on great and solemn days, but also on ordinary days, and none of these were performed without prayer.—1 Chron. 23 :30. Pious men were accustomed to pray thrice in a day at fixed hours.—Ps. 55: 17., Dan. 6: 10. Social family prayers were also habitual with Bible saints, as well as brief ejaculations often in the midst of their ordinary business.—Neh. 2: 4. No uniform posture in prayer is enjoined in the Bible. Standing with the hands outspread, 1. Kings 8: 22, bowing the head, Gen. 24: 26, kneeling, Luke 22: 41., and prostration on the ground, Matt. 26: 39. were all practiced. Prayer should be offered with submission to God's will, fervently, perseveringly and with a confiding reliance on God in Christ. It should be accompanied by humble confession and hearty thanksgiving, and with supplications for all living men as well as for our friends and those dear to us. Habitual prayer to God is a duty enjoined upon us by sound reason and by right affections, and he who lives without it thereby reveals the atheism of his heart. God requires all men thus to to worship him.—Ex. 20: 37, 1 Jn. 11: 6, 1 Peter 2: 1—3; and for neglecting this duty there can be no sufficient excuse. It is often said that prayer cannot alter the unchangeable purposes of God. In the great scheme of his providence embraces every prayer that shall be offered as well as the answer it shall receive. It is objected that prayer cannot increase his knowledge of our wants nor his readiness to supply them, and that in any case he will do what is for the best. But it pleases Him to grant many requests in answer to prayer which otherwise he would withhold. He will be very gracious to them at the voice of their cry when he shall hear it, he will answer. The words of David will be the words of every praying man. This poor man cried and the Lord heard him ond delivered him out of all his troubles.—Psa. 34: 6.

False and formal religion makes a merit of its prayers as though much speaking and vain repetition could atone for heartlessness. Hypocrites also are wont to pray chiefly that they may have the praise of men. These sins Christ reproves in Matt. 6: 5—15, and gives to his disciples the form of the Lord's Prayer as a beautiful model. In Eph. 6: 18, 1. Tim. 2: 8, Paul directs that believers should pray in all place and at all times, lifting up pure hands towards heaven and blessing God for all things, whether in eating drinking or whatever they do, and that everything be done to the glory of God, in a word, our Savior has recommended us to pray without ceasing. Many thoughts come to my mind as I think of the thousands in the Church who are living and raising their children without ever offering a prayer in their presence or in their behalf. I am thankful to the Lord that my parents were praying parents. Although my mother is gone to eternity many years, I still recollect some of the prayers she offered up for herself and her children. When we thank the Lord for past blessings, and ask him to bless ourselves and our neighbors and our children we can then live at peace with all mankind. We can then say with the poet:

"Prayer makes the darkened cloud withdraw,
Prayer climbs the ladder Jacob saw,
Gives exercise to faith and love,
Brings every blessing from above."

Epistolary.

To the Churches greeting, and to all whom it may concern. I vouchsafe to write an epistle. I know your works, your patience, and your faith, and how you cannot bear them that are evil, and them which love not the order of the old brethren, and them that love high things, (high schools) and frequent assembling together, (protracted meetings.) And I know that you despise every new thing under the sun, and love not those that love new things. But I have a few things against you, and unless you speedily return to your first love—as the love of many is waxing cold—I will speedily expose your shortcomings. You have those among you that are teachers and preachers and rule over the house of God, and cannot rule their own house well. For if a man know not how to rule well his own house, how shall he take care of the house of God? Now dear brethren, while we stand on the mount gazing at you approaching the tabernacle to offer your oblation, and to sacrifice for the sins of the people, we see satan's colors floating from the rear end of your chariot. We see you bringing in those that are wearing satan's uniform. We know that they dwell in your own cast-off satan's soldiers are camping in your own tents, and that they are servants of your enemy. Now how shall you give a certain sound when you are in league with the enemy? You have closed your eyes to the approach of the enemy, so you did not see them, i. e. you allowed fashion to creep into your house without very great resistance, and now they have taken possession of your camp and you must surrender unconditionally. How can you fight the battles of the Lord when you have yielded your right and influence to the soldiers of the enemy?

But to be plain, brethren, how can you preach with a clear conscience to a sin stricken world—asking the sinner to lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset him, when your own children are so fashionable, when they wear unbecoming things, bought with your own money if not directly, indirectly. No wonder we hear persons say, "Why do your preachers hammer so much on pride when they dress their children so fine, no marvel that you do not preach with more energy; no wonder that you cannot convert more sinners because your mouths are muzzled by your own family. You say you can't help it—poor excuse. Are you so devoid of zeal, so weak, and so careless that your own children control you, and yet you would rule the house of God, when you cannot rule your own house, those that you have raised from their infancy.

Where is the purity of the Church, or where will it be the next generation? If you raise your children in the fashions of the world, how can you expect them to do otherwise? You talk about the order of the old Brethren, and in word you adhere to it, but in action you deny it. We know very well that they did not raise their children as you raise yours.

"And let the deacon be the husband of one wife—ruling their children and their own house well." You brother, as a subordinate officer in the Church, the apostle leaves you an injunction, or rather mentions your qualifications, and that in particular in regard to your family, and that is the point you neglect most. How stands the case with you? You will not deny the fact that you who make the yearly rounds to visit the Church to enquire concerning its union and the faith of the members, have yourself neglected the all important point, and that is the training of your children.

You who are set apart for the purpose of watching over the poor, you may sometimes complain that it takes a good deal for the poor, but we never heard one complain that it cost much to buy fashionables for their children. Just think for one moment how you spend money for such things, and when poor Churches call on you for help to build a house to serve God in, you can do nothing. Brethren, when you talk about order think of these things, think how your children contrast with those of our old brethren. No marvel, brethren, that your children do not become members of the Church, but rather join some other Church or some secret society. Oh! let me appeal to your conscience, think where we stand, think where is the primitive purity of the Church! You have made your own houses the dwellings of sin. We know no hope, we see no hope. You think your children will turn from their evil ways in time; so they may, but that does not clear your skirts. If they die in their sins their blood will be required at your hands. O brethren, plead with your children, lay siege to their hearts, a little perseverence, a little patience, a little faith, a little compassing, and the wall around their hearts will fall like did the wall around Jericho. Speak not harshly. Be not rude. They are your children, and the way, even to heaven, would be lonely without them. Weep with them, touch their heart strings so that they can't help but weep with you. I tell you their souls are worth weeping for. You may think you have done all this; we do not see the evidence. But if you cannot convert your own children at home, how can you expect to convert sinners abroad. I tell you your words will have effect, for there is nothing that will affect as quickly as the appealing words of the parent. Try it brethren, try it sisters, and if it proves good, O how happy you will feel to see the change.

A PILGRIM.

PLYMOUTH, IND., June 28, '74.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

This beautiful Sabbath morning, before Church hour, presents to me a few leisure moments in which I concluded to briefly state a few items of Church news. As we are always much pleased to read news from the arms of God's visible Church here below, we think it not wrong to occasionally let our Church be represented.

This is one of the most beautiful of Sabbath mornings—with a gentle breeze blowing, pure in consequence of a refreshing shower of rain on last evening. The health of our section is very good, and we also feel to thank God that our Church is in love, peace, and fellowship and enjoy the united blessings of our Master, both in spiritual and temporal matters. To-day, our meeting is at our Church, 5½ miles south west from Plymouth, handsomely located, and in the central point of our congregation—in general have quite a large membership and are continuing to increase steadfastly in the truths of our Lord and Savior.

When we come to meditate over the destinies of man and see so great a field of harvest, which is daily ripening and many sheaves going down to destruction for want of more laborers, we are made to sigh and think of the passage "The harvest is great and the laborers are few." Would to the honor of our Master and the salvation of souls that the Church would awaken to work off that responsibility that we believe is resting upon us. Christ commanded us to go and teach all nations, baptizing, &c., and the Church makes no provisions for such a mission. Are we faithfully discharging the duty enjoined upon us? If we are not, then let there be some movements made that this precious bread of life may not be hidden from famishing souls. The command is to go and preach and teach. Will the Brethren say to their servants, go, and make no provisions for them on their journey? Think of this matter and see if we are scripturally doing that which our Savior intended us to do. If not, let us procrastinate no longer, let each Church body examine themselves according to the truth as founded on the words of our Master.

We would be much pleased to have our ministering brethren stop on and preach for us, for we feel and know that much good has been done by the brethren coming and tarrying with us many days. May the good work of our Master still go on and many be drawn from darkness into light is the desire of your servant.

We have a splendid Sabbath-school organized and much interest is made manifest by all who attend. May many souls he eventually brought to the Church and Christ by the means of Sabbath Schools. Let os brethren everywhere, engage boldly in the service of our Master, and examine ourselves daily to see if we are in possession of that faith once delivered unto the saints. Remember us in your prayers. brethren. Yours in love.

WM. G. COOK.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

As I, with the rest of my brethren, have a work to do, yet as I have never written anything before for the press, it seems quite an undertaking for me. I would say like this, that if you will find room in the PILGRIM for this, you will hear from me again. I will now present a subject and try in my weakness to present my ideas on the same.

"Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life." Acts 5 : 20

I sometimes feel as though we fall short of our duty in this respect. We feel, at times, to timid about speaking all the words of this life, which I must truly say that we should he very bold in speaking. We should not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. Brethren, be firm to your post and work and labor manfully for Jesus. For this purpose you are placed on the walls of Zion, to work for the benefit of souls, and for the general interest of the Church of Christ, the pillar and ground of the truth. We hear ministers preach sometimes when we truly believe they preach to suit their hearers. Now brethren, we believe this to be wrong. Jesus Christ never intended that we should be men-pleasers, but says that we shall speak all the words of this life. Let us then wake up to a sense of our duty, and preach Christ and him crucified to a dyiog world, and let us always be found ready at our post, and labor for Jesus out Master, and for the benefit of each other. I shall closely examine myself and see whether I am truly speaking all the words of this life or not. This should oe our earnest care, to know what we are doing.

BENJAMIN FRYFOGLE.

THE LORD'S DEPARTING.

"Wo also to them when I shall depart from them." Hosea 9. 12.

When will this dreadful sentence he executed? I believe at death unquestionally it is. No person's sins will be pardoned beyond the tomb, neither will there be any mercy exteded to those who have passed from this world and died unredeemed. The gracious influence of the Spirit of God may at any time he withdrawn and the sinner may be left in his chosen course of sin and ruin. My spirit shall not always strive with men." Look at Saul, how bitter was his lamentation when he saw that God had left him. I am sore distressed for the Phillistines make war against me and God is departed from me." 1. Samuel 28: 15 There can he no doubt that many have decided there eternal doom, the spirit that strives with them now may not come any more, and however long there lives may be they only treasure up wrath against wrath. Sermons may be preached to them, tears may be shed for them people that are righteous may talk to them but all to no avail; they still will reject mercy and perish at last. They hold fast to deceit, they refuse to return, the difficulty is. they have not enough faith, no, enough faith when hat holy Spirit knocks at the door of their hearts, there is a change to make, the sinner thinks the people will laugh at him but still he hears something within saying "Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden and I will give you rest." The sinner of course is heavy laden very sorrowful. Just then he thinks and says to himself, I think God will let me live a while yet at any rate. I may after a while try to do better and serve God and get religion and live a godly life, and besides there is so much to do. I have just got married and have bought a yoke of oxen, and have bought land, so you see I must go and pay for it. The sinner loves all kinds of worldly sin and the Gospel requires holiness, it requires them to be humble but they are proud. The gospel requires them to seek the glory of God, but they would rather have the glory of men. It wants them to trust in God but they would sooner trust in themselves. The Gospel wants them to love God, honor and obey him. Say, poor sinners, am I saying too much if I say that you are honoring the wicked one? "Wo! unto ye when I shall depart from you." Then I say unto you that have not made your peace with God, turn, O! turn to Him.

"Death, 'tis a melancholly day,
To those who have no God,
When the poor soul is forced away
To seek her last abode."

You have tasted the bitterness of sin come now and taste the sweetness of redeeming mercy, come now to the fountain of life and bliss before God departs from you, yes when he leaves you once oh, how desolate and gloomy you must be. There is something awful beyond description when the Saviour departs from you. He will not knock at the door of your heart any more that, is, if he has knocked and you have not made an effort to do better and you have told the shirit to go thy way. I cannot tell my views any better than to give an illustratiou.

The late Rev. Harman Norton tells the following instance. "An aged man took the minister by the hand and says do you believe there is any mercy in heaven for a man that has sinned over 80 years? The minister replied there is mercy for those who repent of sin and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. The man still pressing his hand he cried out in agony, I know I shall not be forgiven, I shall not find any help but 'll die in my sins." He said that when he was twenty-one he was awakened to feel that he was a sinner and for five or six weeks he read his Bible and prayed in secret. "One day" I'll, tell it in bis own wrods, "I said that I would put the subject off till I am married and settled in life, and then I would make my peace with God. After I was settled in the world I thought back and remembered my resolution I had made years before, I was not ready then yet, and put it off ten years longer. The time came, and I had no anxiety to do better, and vowed again that after another term of years I would then do better. That time has come and I see my awful situation. O! I am lost, I know I shall not be forgiven, no never. Has not the holy spirit departed from him?

J. H. NEHER.

TO THE CHURCHES IN VIRGINIA, WEST VIRGINIA AND TENNESSEE.

You will please take notice in the minutes of the proceedings of the late A. M. that a committee is appointed to visit California to set things in order that are wanting, and that all the districts throughout the brotherhood are called upon for an appropriation to defray the expenses of this mission. Apportions are as follows:

Tennessee,	$15.00
Virginia. 1st. district,	30.00
" 2nd. "	15.00
" 3rd. "	25.00

And that I am made receiver for these districts, I therefore take this method to call your attention to the matter, and ask prompt action, so that the demand is met at once, and the money on hand by the time designated, the first of September next. Let each congregation make it a point to consider the matter at once. All that will be necessary is to give the number an opportunity, and the amount will be raised. The proportion of each being so small a matter, let each church or congregation, send their contribution directly to me, and I will keep account of it, and finally report through the papers, the several amounts received. When it is convenient, the safest way is to send by post office orders, and if not convenient, then by letter registered.

NOTICE.

We have now on hands a supply of "Discussion on Trine Immersion," between Eld. B. F. Moomaw and Dr. Jackson. Price 60 cents. Also a good supply of "Helping Hands," price 25 cents. Minutes of the Annual meeting, German or English, 10 cents per copy. Key giving the names of the speakers at the A. M as numbered in our Report. Price 10 cents.—a deduction on large numbers ordered—see notice on the eighth page. We expect to have them ready for distribution the first of next week. Send in your orders at once and thus get them as soon as published.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Will you or some other brother give us some light on the 19, and 20 verses of first Peter? The question is whether Christ preached to the Spirits in prison himself or was it done by Noah before the flood? Sent by request.

BRO. JOSEPH THRUST

After the 24th of June, until further notice, my post office address will be changed from Fostoria Ohio, to Sheffield Franklin Co. Iowa.

JOHN P. EBERSOLE.

DIED.

STONER.—In the Wanesboro' Congregation Franklin Co., Pa., June 14th, 1874 Benjamin S. Stoner aged 27 years, 3 months and 22 days.

The diseased was second son of friends Andrew and Elisabeth Stoner, grand child of our venerable brother David Stoner (now soon 94 years old.)

Friend Benjamin had a notice of some weeks of the probable approach of death yet with his friends, cherished the fond hope of soon getting well again, but death was doing its work, on the 14th inst. quickly and unexpectedly breathed his last.—Though a young man of remarkable social and moral integrity he passed into the hands of God without any manifest evidence of conciliation with him. Truly this is another warning of the danger of delaying religious duties.—May this call, this voice from heaven; induce a father, mother, brother, and sister to turn their feet to the sure testimony of God and give their bodies a living sacrifice to him. D F. GOOD.

Waynesboro Pa.

LETHMAN.—Ont the 28th of June, 1874, Brother Christian Lehman, a consistent member, and house-keeper in the Shade Creek Church, Somerset Co, Pa. Aged 71 years 3 months and 14 days.

Funeral occasion improved by Elder Tobias Hoover from 2nd. Corinthians 5th chapter, 10th verse to a large concourse of friends and neighbors.

HIRAM MUSSELMAN.

BOWSER.—Of inflamitory rheumatism, in the Jonathan Creek Branch of the Church Perry Co., Ohio, on the 11th day of April 1874 our much esteemed brother Henry Bowser aged 60 years 1 month

The subject of this notice was confined to his bed for a number of months, during the time he called us in and I fixed up his matters as he wished to have them, and we think he did all in the fear of the Lord and very justly too. First providing well for the widow who is a sister beloved, and then making his children equal in the distribution of all the balance said he wanted to do right. We staid all night and prayed with him at his request. We visited him twice after that and prayed for him. He seemed to enjoy the season of devotoin very much; was perfectly resigned to the will of his heavenly Father. He leaves a sorrowing wife, (a sister) and two daughters one son and an aged mother, besides many other friends to mourn their loss; but we have every reason to believe their loss is his eternal and great gain. On the 13th his remains were followed to their last resting place—his burial was attended by a very large concourse of the people, the procession being, we think fully one half mile long.

Funeral dicourse by the writer and followed by Elder Eli Stoner.

he had his membership, but afterwards he receives a letter of recommendation and moves to another congregation and joins there. It is then found out that he has committed an offence in the place where his membership was formerly held. The question is, would it be proper for the brother to go back to that congregation where the offence was committed. He said that it would be proper. There where the membership was formerly held and the offence committed, is the body of the testimony. There is the evidence in the case. There is where the trial should take place. Well, now I do not see much difference in the two cases. It seems to me that there is not much difference whether the brother is tried in the one place or the other, When a brother has his membership in one congregation and goes out into another congregation, why try him in the former congregation? What is the difference? No matter where his membership is, let him be tried where the offence is committed, for there the body of the evidence will be found. Suppose I commit a trespass outside of my own congregation, ought I not to be tried in the place where the trespass is committed? Otherwise the case must be examined in one place and after the case is examined and the evidence obtained in one congregation, the case must be sent to another congregation for sentence. To me, that seems like a very singular mode of proceedure.

On motion the query with its answer was passed.

The following query was handed up by David Rittenhouse from the Southern District of Illinois, and was read by the Secretary:

If a church is dissatisfied with members that go to Sunday School Conventions, and pass a decision that members shall not go to such places, and if they do go, they must make an acknowledgement for the same, can the church enforce such a decision without the sanction of the Annual Meeting?

Ans. We think it has the power.

Passed.

The query with its answer was passed without debate.

From the same District came also the following query and its answer, which was read by the Secretary:

As there is not a union of practice among the Brethren in reference to saluting our colored members, will not the Brethren in Annual Council give us a decision that will enable us to be one in practice, and not be respecters of persons?

Ans. We think it best to make no change in regard to this matter.

(Several voices.)—Make no change in the rules. It is all right as it is.

1. I thought we had come to the time when we would make no difference on account of color among our brethren. Certainly if we are not yet come to that time, we are making progress toward it. Since there seems to be some opposition to the answer to the query before us, and some of

TANKTOWN, Delaware Co., O., March 20th, 1873

To Dr. R. V. Pierce:

Your discovery needs only a fair trial and it will do all you recommend it to do and more too. When I was fifteen I caught cold and for twenty eight years I have been a perfect wreck of disease, and all the medicines and Doctors' bills have run up at times to two and three hundred dollars, and never any better but worse, when I give up all hopes less. Spring of living the Summer through. I received one of your Account Books and told my husband after reading it that it was too late to try further, but he said it was never too late. He went and bought two bottles, and I found it was helping me very much. Since 1841 I was troubled with Catarrh and Sore throat and was almost entirely deaf in one ear and my voice was as dull as could be. There was constant pain in my head. Now my head is as sound as a dollar, my voice is clear, and I have used ten bottles of your Discovery. It has cured me of Catarrh, Sore Throat, Heart disease, Spine affection and Torpid Liver. My liver was very bad. My skin was rough. When I put my hand on my body it was like fish scales. Now it is smooth and soft like a child's. In conclusion I will say I have been well for three months. I am a wonder to myself and friends. This is but an imperfect statement, half has not been told.

Yours with respect, HESTER LACKEY.

A Key to Report of A. M.

In compliance to the wishes of many of our readers who are praying us to give them some way of knowing the names of the speakers in our Report, we now inform all concern of that we are making a Key, which will be given soon, as we get all the names, by which the names can be determined as readily as if they were inserted in the Report. We have carefully numbered each speech. These numbers you will notice at the commencement of each speech, which will correspond with the name and number on our key. We give this notice so that those who wish to know the names of the speakers, can save their papers and send for the key, which will be ready to send out just as soon as we get all the names. They will be sent to all who desire them on the following terms: One copy, 10 cents, 6 copies, 50 cents, 13 copies, 75 cents, and 26 copies $1.00.

Trine Immersion

TRACED

TO THE APOSTLES.

The Second Edition is now ready for delivery. The work has been carefully revised, corrected and enlarged.

Put up in a neat pamphlet form, with good paper cover, and will be sent, post-paid, from this office on the following terms: One copy, 25 cts; Five copies, 1.10; Ten copies, $2.00; 25 copies, $4.50; 50 copies 8.50; 100 copies, $16.00.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single Immersion ever having been, the Apostolic method. Single copy, $0.50. Four copies, $1.50. Sent post-paid. Address the brethren seem unwilling to salute their colored brethren for the present let the answer be as it has been on the Minutes. We have not yet come to the time when we shall make no difference among our brethren, but we shall certainly come to that time soon.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting held in Macoupin County, Illinois, on May 26 and 27, 1874.

(Several voices.)—It will be some time yet before we come to that.

A brother in the audience.—You cannot get the brethren in the Southern States to salute colored brethren. They won't do it.

The answer was then by common consent amended so as to read that no changes be made in former decisions on the subject, and the answer was so amended was past.

From the Southern District of Illinois came up the following query and its answer which were read by the Secretary:

Is it consistent with the gospel, or the order of the brethren, to join the Farmers' Club, and even act as officers in the same?

Ans. No not consistent with the Gospel to unite with any organized body of the world, and any member that will not abandon it after being admonished so to do, shall be dealt according to St. Matt. xviii.

9. In Iowa there is a great difference betwsen a Farmers' Club and the Grangers. One is a secret and oath-bound society and the other has no oath and is not secret. I proposed the question to some Grangers whether a Farmers Club would not do just as well. They said no, that there was nothing to bind them. It was not a secret organization and had no oaths.

3. A Farmers' Club is not necessarily secret, but there are Farmers' Clubs that are secret. Some of them I know are secret. There are some in our part of the country which are secret.

(Several voices.)—They are Grangers.

3. I know what I am talking about. I know the one from the other. There is no danger of getting the two confounded where I live. The Farmers Club and the Grangers fight one another. Some of the Farmers' Clubs in our country are not secret, but some are.

42. There is a difference between Farmers' Club and the Farmers' Club. A Grangers Club looks a little too black for some, so they join a Farmers Club, but I notice that it is considered a good step to join the Grangers.

43. While we do not cultivate religious intercourse with everybody around us, we are necessarily compelled to hold social and commercial intercourse with the people about us to some extent. Now, in regard to these farmers clubs, I understand that they differ in their aims and purposes and in the means which they employ to effect their purposes. Where there associations do not conflict with our religious principles,—where they are gotten up as benevolent institutions, for the purpose of promoting agricultural enterprises, I cannot see any impropriety in associating with organizations of that kind. I feel an interest in the question on account of the fact of the existence of an organization in the country where I live, which has for its purpose simply benevolent objects in which good people of the world, sober, moral honorable people of the world associate with the brethren. It is called "The Farmers and Mechanics Insurance Association." We pay no salaries to officers and a mere pittance as fee for membership, to defray the expenses of printing and so on. There is nothing secret about it. It is simply for the benefit of the members and their families in cases of sickness and accident, and only makes uniform what we would feel like doing for an unfortunate neighbor without the organization. It is not necessary to go into detail. We give you the principles upon which the organization works. Its object is purely benevolent without any prospect or intention of making a speculation in any shape or form. I suppose that this organization might be considered as coming under the meaning of the answer to the query before us, as being a worldly organization, but it is strictly put down in the law of the organization, that those who are so dishonorable as to go into bankruptcy shall not be received into the association. The association itself is composed of the brethren, and of the best people of the country.

39. I have no connection with any Farmers' Club and do not speak from any personal interest I might be thought to have in the matter, for I have none. But we have some brethren who belong to such an association. All I know about the Farmer's Club, as it is with us, is that it is an agricultural association, formed by farmers and mechanics for the purpose of facilitating the purchase of agricultural and other instruments directly from the manufacturers. (Several voices.—That is the Grangers.) Their design is to do away with the profit of the middle men to themselves. Its meetings are held entirely public. Every body is admitted into the association. There is nothing in it detrimental to strict moral and good behavior. I can see no harm in it. If the answer to the query would prevent a brother who desired to do so, from joining such an association, formed for such purposes and conducted in such a way, I am opposed to passing it. The Grangers movement in our country is very limited, but I notice this, and it shows that the two things are different, that when a farmers club forms an association with the Grange, it becomes no longer a Farmers' Club, but a Grange.

21. Would it not be better if the brethren would leave all such clubs alone. (Several voices.—Yes that is it.) The Church of God is all the club we want.

A second reading of the answer being called for, it was read by the secretary a second time, and without further discussion, it was passed.

The second verse of the 209th hymn was then sung,

Chosen of God to sinners dear,
Let saints adore the name.

The session was then declared adjourned to convene again as soon after dinner as practicable.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was called to order about half past two o'clock in the afternoon. The first verse of the 47th hymn was sung.

Come let us all unite to praise
The Saviour of mankind.

The Standing Committee, through the Chairman reported back the following answer to the query in regard to the public examination of candidates for baptism, which had been by the meeting re-committed to it:

Answer.—We think it best to make no change from the order given in the Minutes of 1818; neither do we think it necessary to make any change to meet the question now before us, since in the order of 1818 above alluded to, it is not said whether the questions shall be put privately, and so in particular cases it may be done publicly. But when there is no necessity of doing otherwise, let the questions after the examination be put to the candidates before the church alone, as is the general practice of the brotherhood.

This answer passed.

A query as to whether the brotherhood would purchase the tent underwhich the meeting was held was read and its consideration postponed till later in the meeting:

Will this Annual Meeting purchase the tent under which she is now sitting?

From the Southern District of Iowa, came the following query which was read by the Secretary and passed without debate:

Would it be right for the church to grant an expelled preacher—who violated the council of the church and still goes on preaching— a committee when all the members are opposed to to a committee, and if the church would grant a committee under the existing circumstances, and such a preacher would be found guilty, would it be right for said brethren and sisters to pay the expenses?

Ans. No; and such preacher shall be required to provide a sufficient amount to pay such expenses before a committee serve.

Passed.

From the same District came the following query and its answer, which was read by the Secretary:

Whereas the Annual Meeting of 1873, query 20, advised all the churches to keep the Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book out of the churches in time of public worship, this District Council humbly asks the Annual Meeting of 1874 to reconsider said query, and allow District Churches, that wish to do so, to use them even in public worship.

No change.

41. What are the objections to the Tune and Hymn Book?

1. I certainly hope that my interest in the matter will not influence the matter. I do not think that it did last year and I hope it will not this.

44. This seems conservative enough. This is only leaving it to the District. Certainly if a whole district consents to it it must be all right, and the consent of the district is required. It seems to me that we might pass this. If a whole district sees fit to allow the churches the privilege of using that book it is right that they should enjoy the privilege. I do not see any harm in it. And the brethren should remember when they require things that there is no good reason, or prohibit things that have no harm in them, their decisions seem arbitrary. The grand idea is this, that where we have testimony in the word of God, we should be one in obeying it. But where the Captain of our salvation has given us no orders, it is not necessary, nor is it right for us to give extra orders. The grand order of all is that we should love one another. If I find it to my comfort to have this book in meeting, my brother should no interdict me because he does not find it to his comfort to have the book in meeting. He should be glad with me that I find comfort in it. It is asking too much that all should agree in matters of this kind.

13. An objection that was brought up was this: These notes are adapted to sing by. Old brethren and sisters cannot sing these notes not having been to school to learn the notes. Hence where the notes are used in singing in meeting, the young people who know the notes must do the singing. They learn to sing and then when they come to church they must do the singing. This cuts off an important privilege from some of the older brethren and sisters. Some of us would rather not have the note book, then all can sing. Let them bring their hymn books and sing the old tunes which all know, but let them keep their tune books for the singing school. The church is the place to worship God and no the place to learn to sing. It is the place to sing what we have learned at home. That is the objection we have to the use of the tune book in church. We have adopted the tune book but we do not take it to church.

3. I want to make a motion in regard to this query. The subject was up last year and freely discussed and setteled in a certain way, and has remained settled only one year. The decision of last year has done no great harm, as it appears, and why not let it stay? We have not time to discuss these things over and over every year, and go all over the same arguments year after year. When we have made a decision once and it is doing no harm, as we can see, let it remain. I make a motion to get shut off this query, without injury to any one, that we table it.

It was concluded to let the decision of last year stand.

The question of buying the tent now came up, and brother Vaniman stated its cost and all the arrangements in regard to it. Action on the proposition was then again postponed.

From the Southern District of Iowa came up the following query and answer, which were read twice by the Secretary:

Is the plaiting of the sister's hair (1 Peter 3:3) wrong under every circumstance.

Ans. Not wrong under every circumstance.

On motion, it was tabled.

From the Southern District of Missouri came up the following query, which, with its answer was read by the Secretary:

Inasmuch as the use of musical instruments among us has caused considerable trouble, and the decisions of Annual Meeting are differently construed.—Therefore will this Annual Meeting give us such a decision that will fully authorize the different branches of the church to keep them out of the brotherhood and get those out already among us?

A brother moved to make no change in the former decision.

19. What do you mean by making no change? Brethren have never seen their way clear to allow musical instruments. It belongs to the world. In the other decisions there is a feature in them which says that the use of musical instruments is damaging, and warning the church against their use. The brethren have advised the church that in these things are the appearances of evil. We are to abstain from every appearance of evil. To be sure it does not say positively that brethren shall not have them in their houses. In every decision the council has shown us that such things ought not to enter into the houses of members. It seems that in these former decisions there are little clauses which say that, if applied strictly to sacred music they would not be considered as really wrong. Brethren take hold of this little provision that if strictly applied to sacred music, musical instruments would not be forbidden, and go and buy instruments, and put them in their houses, and when the brethren speak to them about it, they say that if strictly applied to sacred music the instruments are not forbidden, and shelter themselves behind this provision and justify themselves by it. When we take the safe view and endeavor to show them that the meaning of the decisions is to caution us against the use of the instruments, they get up and say, "You are trying to enforce here what they allow in other places and what the decisions themselves allow." There's the trouble. These instruments are about to be introduced into the Southern District of Missouri, and are already causing offense there. When we want them in love to accept our counsel and submit, they are stubborn and will not submit. We do not know any other way than to take them before the church as disobedient brothers. We have things now in about that shape. The time when the church was about to act on it was so near the time of the meeting of the council that they concluded to wait and ask the advice of the council about it. Hence we ask for a decision that shall be plain and definite, either that the instruments are not so damaging but that the families of members may have them, or that they are so damaging that the members must not have them. The families that have them make many excuses for them. Some say they are like tune forks and help them to pitch the tune and help them to keep it. Others say they are a source of harmless amusement, and instruction in the family, and keep the children from going to pic-nics and such places. The time has come when we must say that they may be allowed, or that they cannot be allowed, and that those who persist in keeping them must be dealt with as disobedient brethren.

44. The brother wants to know what will be understood by making no change. I would understand that the Annual Meeting, by deciding not to make any change in the former decision, did not want to be too rigid in this matter. They do not want to be particularly strict about it. They want to leave the brethren somewhat at liberty to act as their own conscience may dictate. They have been remembering that David of old had a harp. Perhaps some of them cannot see that a musical instrument, rightly used, is very bad. Some of them are in bad company sometimes, but that is nothing against the nature of the instrument, and we need not go into bad company to find them. It seems to me that the council is wise in not being to rigid in condemning them. I understand from the former decisions that the council does not really object to musical instruments when strictly applied to sacred music. If the decisions do not mean that, they had better be replaced by something else. But to my mind their meaning is plain, and I hope no change will be made

A reading of the former decision being called for, the Secretary read them from the Minutes of the preceding Annual Meetings.

4. While I do not approve of musical instruments when introduced into families to worship God by them, at the same time I cannot give my consent to a decision that would make the having of them in the house a test of membership when we have no "thus saith the Lord" to forbid it. I think that in this matter it would be better for the brethren to heed the admonition to love one another and not give offense to any of the brethren by keeping in their house an instrument which they know is disapproved by some of the brethren. I think this would be best, but if the brethren choose to keep the instruments in their houses, I would never, I could never make it a test of membership. For that we need an explicit "thus saith the Lord."

5. We are exhorted to sing with the spirit, and with the understanding also, and many claim that the organ and other instruments help us to do so at home, it will help us just as much to do so at the meeting-house, and, brethren, mark you, if there be no restrictions like the one in the Minutes of the Annual Meeting in 1870 on this subject, I am afraid it will not be long before we shall have them in our meeting-houses, and then in our divine worship we shall sing with the organ, etc. Therefore, let us try to guard against this growing evil. This evil is growing rapidly in the church. Unless it is checked, it will continue to grow, and finally we will have these instruments among us and in our meeting-houses, like other denominations. I know certain religious denominations, which were at one time very much opposed to having musical instruments used in divine service, but now they have them very generally in their churches. If we are not very careful, I am afraid we shall have them in our churches before very long.

43. In every Annual Meeting when this subject has been under consideration, the remonstrances against the use of these instruments has been as strong as any one could make it. They clearly show to us that they are regarded by the brotherhood as among those things that have an appearance of evil. This is the general feeling in the brotherhood. The exception to this feeling, if it could be ascertained, would be very small indeed. As the brother remarked, we have no "thus saith the Lord" to make this thing a test of membership. While there is certainly none so far as that, we have no command in the word of God expressly and directly applied to these instruments, still, though I will not stop to enumerate items that has been forbidden by the church, we all know that there are other things that are strictly forbidden by the church, for which there is no emphatic "thus saith the Lord." Suppose we look upon the church as a family. We all feel deeply interested in the well-being of the family. Now suppose we see a brother, a member of the family, doing something that is tending toward the injury of the family, and when he is remonstrated with he does not pay sufficient regard to the family remonstrance, would it not be right to expressly forbid him to continue doing the thing that is doing the injury to the family? That has been the course of the council thus far. It has not thought it necessary to say, "you shall not do thus and so." It has thought that if it intimated that the given thing was injurious and wrong in its tendencies, the brother would at once desist from it. So far as the use of musical instruments in sacred music is concerned, that cannot be considered by me, brethren, as being appropriate to the question. What do we understand by the use of these instruments exclusively in sacred music? What is sacred music? Is it the tune that is sacred or the words expressed in the tune? I ask, can instruments express words? How, then, can they be used in sacred music? Don't we all know that the tunes that have been applied and used in worldly songs have been applied to sacred words? Many of our best hymns are generally sung to tunes that were first used in connection with worldly songs. We have the tunes "Auld lang syne," "Nelly Gray," "Old Dan Tucker," and many others, applied to sacred words. Now if we use these tunes, which are applied to any words worldly as well as sacred, what makes them sacred music? Why is the music more sacred in one case than in the other? It is said, again, that these instruments are needed in our families, and that they cultivate our children in the art of music and in a moral direction, and keep them from engaging in other things that are worse. We are told that instead of reading novels, etc., their time is taken up pleasantly and profitably in playing on these instruments. If the inclinations of our children are for reading novels, are we not substituting one bad thing for another? The tendency of these fashionable instruments is bad. When we have introduced these fashionable instruments into our homes, we must next employ teachers to educate our children in the art of instrumental music. Then what is the natural tendency? We first have fashionable instruments, then next we must have fashionable music, then we must have fashionable company. Where does that company lead? What does fashionable company engage in? In pic-nics, parties, and such sinful amusements, and I may say that finally, perhaps, we will find our children engaged in drunken, dancing frolics. These things have been under our own notice. While we never yet have had a decision of the Annual Meeting expressly forbiding the placing of musical instsuments in our families, still almost the universal sentiment of the brotherhood is against their use. Those in favor of them form a very small exception compared to the whole fraternity. The brethren have said, and I will say again, that I am inclined to think that the safe side is the best, and that we had better have nothing to do with them. If we can get nothing more definite in the way of a decision from the Annual Meeting, we must, I suppose, content ourselves with this decision; but the trouble is that the brethren do not all accept the advice of the council, and there are no means to enforce that advice.

44. I wish to say a few words in reply to a remark of my brother in regard to sacred music. I think he was saying that as the instrument does not, and cannot speak the words, the music which is made upon a musical instrument cannot rightly be called sacred music. Now I am not one of those who understand that the sound of the accordeon is sacred, but at the same time I think that it is among those very pure and very good things which are sometimes misapplied, but which, when rightly used make us better. I think that the influence of what is called sacred music, when played upon it, is calculated to do good, and it certainly makes me feel good. It is caluclated to lead us to pleasant thoughts. The true theory lies right here, in regard to all harmless things, or things that have no quality of good or evil in themselves. They are good or bad, just according as we make a good or bad use of them. When we appropriate these musical sounds to something good, then we make a good use of them, and when we appropriate them to something bad, then we make a bad use of them. No one will contend that the sounds in themselves are sacred, but when they call up in our minds sacred words and pleasant holy thonghts, because we have learned to associate them with holy words then they form what may rightly be called sacred music.

19. We ought in our districts to accede to the advice of the council. If we have no "thus saith the Lord" to enforce a decision strictly prohibiting the use of musical instruments in our families, there are some things whose evils stand forth so apparent, and so easy to be discerned, that our own course in regard to them can not for a moment be doubtful. We have no trouble to see the damaging influence which follows the introduction of these instruments. Some things have only and always the appearance of evil. Now, we have a "thus saith the Lord" to abstain from the appearance of evil. The apostle also tells us to obey those having the rule over us. It is the plain duty of those having these instruments in their families, or contemplating getting them, to submit themselves to the advice and council of the brotherhood on this subject, and that advice is to have nothing to do with these instruments. There are many things in the book which refers us to the tendency of worldly things and it is our daty when we perceive that our brethren are indulging in anything that has a tendency to lead away from the pure principles and religion of Jesus Christ, it is our duty, and we have the authority of the New Testament to admonish them in love, and it is their duty to submit themselves to our admonition. But if they will not do so, then we have the authority of the New Testament to go farther. Sometimes men and women have been stubborn and said "I will not submit." Are there not things which come to us from holy men under the influence of the Holy Spirit, that the stubborn may be asked to submit, but when they refuse we are to compel them to do so. We do not need these instruments. Here are our noble bodies, this instrument that God has made. Let us use it in singing his praises. We can sing and make melody in our hearts to the Lord. I do insist ubon it, brethren, that we ought to pass this query and its answer. I am aware that this thing has been argued for and maintained in a kind of temper and for a purpose that is not proper here. It has been born with by some now numbered with the dead.

We wish them well. These things have been permitted against the wish of the general brotherhood. It has been born with us till it has made some trouble. Let us prevent it from making more trouble. If our language is too strong in that query, it does not exactly express what we mean by it. What we mean and what we want, is to get rid of these instruments; to put them all away. It is simple enough to say, that we had better not have anything to do with them in the family. We said that in the Southern District of Missouri, but we have some rich families there living in big houses, in which there are separate rooms for these things. We would like to have it stopped.

45. There are a great many things for which we find no "thus ssith the Lord," yet we know them to he wrong. If we have no "thus saith the Lord," to forbid the use of musical instruments, there is a commandment that we are not to mar the peace of the brotherhood. When brethren have these things in there houses, even if they delight in them and think there is no harm in them, why not put them away to make peace. We must bear one another's burdens, and when we see that something we are doing is making trouble in the church, why not stop it at once and put away the trouble. You must bear with the weak. I am one of those weak ones, I entreat those who are stronger than I am, to favor me a little and help me along a little. If so small a matter as musical instument makes trouble in the church, let us sacrifico ourselves a little and put it away.

44. What the brother advises, I did. I had a piano in my house but I put it away. It seems to me that we ought to go to the root of the matter I cannot see that there is any thing more sacred in a sound made by the human voice than in the same, or a similar sound made by an instrument. Why is it not wicked to sing out with the voices? Our singing, if we can as well might make us vain. Now in regard to musical instruments, the only argument against them, is that they are expensive. Some can afford to have them and some cannot. Perhaps it would he more equalizing if we did not any of us have them, but I did not enforce such a decision against anybody. If any body should ask me "Can I have a musical instrument?" I might perhaps tell him "Brother, you had better give the money which you would pay for an instrument to the poor," but could not forbid him to have the instrument. There is or may be another evil that has not been referred to yet in this discussion, but it is a very bad evil. It is worse than having a musical instrument. That is envy,—a feeling that you don't want your neighbor to have something because you cannot have it. That is a very bad evil. We should guard against that. It is very wrong. I do not have such feelings myself, I thank God. At least I do think I not have. Brethren, let us not take any arbitrary action.

The decision of last Annual Meeting upon the subject of musical instrumnets was re-adopted.

From Southern Kansas and Nebraska came the following query and its answer which were read by the Secretary.

(Not preserved.)

28. In explanation of the query, I would say that the question which it states is this: Is a trespass both private and public, or it is merely private and not public.

46. That is just like a great many more things that come up here. A trespass is both public and private. We are referred to two passages, but we must first make out what a trespass is, and what a transgression is. Both are sin. If a brother trespass against us we are to go to the brother and tell him his faults, between us and him alone. If he hear us, then we have gained our brother, but if he hear us not then we make it some what more public. We take one or two of the brethren with us. Now, it becomes a little more public. If he hears not then what is done? It then becomes very public. It is brought to the church. There is an order which came from heaven. There is something in that, brethren. I refer to the query. It is important. Here is one thing. If I should go to the dancing hall, is not that public? Will you take me to the 5th chapter of Corinthians? You did not find me there. You bring it before the church. You cannot take me to the 18th chapter of Mtthew. We can do any thing in the church that we find in the 18th chapter of Matthew, but we must go to the individuals, if an offence was a private thing. If there was no testimony, you cannot first take it to the church. You must just leave it. There is no trouble in our church. My old housekeeper and I get along very well.

On motion, the query was tabled.

From Southern Kansas and Nebraska came the following query and its answer, which was read by the Secretary.

A brother buys a piece of land from a sister living in another District of the State; the sister makes the brother a warrentee deed. Said brother pays $1000; five hundred dollars fall due, but the brother did not meet it when due. Six months after the five hundred dollars were due, the brother having the money ready, finds he had not a good title, and refuses, to make said payment until he has a good title. Upon this the sister sues said brother without counseling the church in which she lived. After this the elder of said church, being notified, appoints a council in said church, and decides to let the sister go through with said suit. Will this District Meeting sanction the course of said church? If not, who is to pay the cost of said suit?

Ans. We think the brother done no wrong, after finding the title defective. by withholding the money. This meeting cannot sanction the course of the church, and that said church lays herself liable with the District to pay all the cost.

47. There is not nearly all in that. I think it ought to be tabled.

2. I call for an explanation.

7. I do not see why this should be sent to us from Kansas. It seems to be a private matter.

2. It may be that the query and the answer are a District matter, but I am inclined to think that there is more in it than appears, and the answer may be a little premature.

46. There is in the query about all the evidence that was produced there in Kansas.

44. Suppose we consider for a moment the propriety of bringing such queries to the Annual Meeting. It seems to me to be inappropriate to bring matters of dollars and cents to the Annual Meeting. Let District Meetings at home, that knows all about the case, decide it.

Some one in the audience calling out that brother Davy knew about the case, several voicis called him out.

2. I am knowing to the circumstances of this case. The sister lives in Ohio. The brother lives in Kansas. The dead I will not go over. Trouble rose and a committee was called, an investigation was made and a decision was given. It seems that one of the parties did not comply with the decision, while the other side did exactly comply with the decision; hence matters went where people go to settle such matters outside of the church. That you will understand I suppose. It seems to me that it would be hard for us now to settle the matter, and reach the decision, that would touch the case at this time, because it is not yet settled. How much the cost may be we know not. For my part, my mind is, for the present to lay it down. Let them settle the matter there in law between them selves. Then whatever wrong there may be, let the different churches settle the matter. This answer is permature. Now, if you say table it, that is the best thing you can do.

It was tabled

This was the last query to be considered.

James Quinter then read the list of the committees. It was as follows:

1. A request for a committee to visit the White Oak church, Brush Creek church, Clear Creek church and Fall Creek church, in Highland and Adams Counties Ohio. The following brethren were appointed: H. D. Davy, Samuel Mohler, J. Wise, R. H. Miller, and D. Brower.

2. A request for a committee to visit the Newton church, in Miami County Ohio. The following committees were appointed: R. H. Miller, J. Wise, D. Brower, Jos. N. Kauffman and Daniel Bowman.

3. A request for a committee to visit the church in Bottetourt County, Virginia. The following brethren were appointed: D. P. Sayley, H. D. Davy, D. Long, C. G. Lint, and M. Miller.

4. A request for a committee to visit Washington Creek church, Douglas County, Kansas. The following brethren were appointed: John Hershey, John Forney and Jesse Studebaker.

5. A request for a committee to visit the Deer Creek church, Indiana. The following brethren were appointed: R. H. Miller, Jesse Meyers and Jacob Berkey.

6. A request for a committee to visit the North Manchester church, Indiana. The following brethren were appointed: H. D. Davy, R. H. Miller, John Wise, D. Brower and D. B. Sturgis.

7. The following brethren from the committee sent to California: H. D. Davy, D. P. Sayler, and B. F. Moomaw.

8. The following brethren form the committee to publish the Minutes: H. D. Davy and J. Quinter.

9. A request for a committee to go to St. Joseph County, Indiana. The following brethren were appointed: H. D. Davy, R. H. Miller, and J. Metzger.

10. A request for a committee to visit the Vermillion church, in Livingston County, Illinois. The following brethren were appointed: Jos. Hendricks, Enoch Eby, and D. Fry.

11. A request for a committee to visit the Indian Creek church, in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. The following brethren were appointed: H. D. Davy, D. Long, D. Keller, D. Garlach and C. G. Lint.

The sum of $600 was appropriated for the expenses of the committee to California.

The matter of the purchasing of the tent came up again and was finally settled by the Meeting concluding not to purchase it.

J. P. Ebersole now read the 648th hymn.

Now brethren to your homes repair,
And as you pass along.

After the hymn had been sung, Bro. Ebersole continued:

I hope, brethren, and sisters, that we can heartily unite with the poet, and as we pass along raise our voices in praise to God. We can truly say that the Lord has been with us. I have attended a good many Annual Councils and it seems to me that this one has gone off as well as any I ever attended. We have been pleasantly situated and God has blessed us. We have had a beautiful time. The weather has been in our favor. There has been nothing to hinder or molest us. Then for these blessings, as well as for the influence of the Holy Spirit, we are bound to be thankful to God. Let us then thank God, and let every brother and sister pray for Zion that she may be ever prospered, and that her offerings may come up before God as a sweet smelling savor, that God may be glorified in our coming together and in our separation. Let us pray.

Brother Ebersole then led in prayor, and so closed the Annual Meeting of 1874.

The next meeting will be held in the Miami Valley of Ohio.

Little Things.

Little things and little people have very often brought great things to pass. The large world in which we exist is made up of little particles, smaller than the sands of the seashore. The vast sea is composed of little drops of water. The little busy bees, how much honey they gather! Do not be discouraged because you are little. A little star shines brightly in the sky in the dark night, and may be the means of saving many a poor sailor from shipwreck; and a little Christian may do a great deal of good if he or she will try. There is nothing like trying. Let all our little readers try and see how much good they can do, and if the live to be old they will never regret it.—Children's Paper.

Morality without religion, is only a kind of dead reckoning, an endeavor to find our place on a cloudy sea by measuring the distance we have to run, but without any observation of the heavenly bodies.—Longfellow.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINGDON, PA., JULY 14, 1874.

☞ How to send money.--All sums over $1.30, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

Last week our paper was delayed a day or more on account of the report not arriving in time, and in addition to this the mail-sacks failed to arrive at the usual time, which delayed the paper until Wednesday. We usually mail on Saturday morning. We will be on time in a week or so again.

On account of bad ink and the press becoming somewhat out of order, last week a great many papers were spoiled and the consequence was we run short. In some instances we sent out papers that were scarcely readable, and even then we had not enough to supply all. We are sorry for this but cannot make it otherwise now.

The American Pope.

We have now before us a copy of the Irish World, a large eight page weekly published in New York. Almost every sentence is frightful with the spirit of Catholicism. Among other things, we notice the assertion of Pope Pius IX.

"The United States is the only country where I am really Pope in the eyes of the Government. I am always afraid lest European Governments shall oppose or control my acts; whereas I can freely send pontifical documents to the United States without fear of opposition on the part of its Government.

Such a declaration should cause protestant America to examine where she stands. If what Pope Pius says is true, Catholic power is either rapidly declining in the European countries or greatly increasing in the United States. That this country should be the asylum of the oppressed and the home of the free is perfectly in harmony with its principles, but that Pius IX should establish his popedom here is more than a protestant world is willing to admit.

CLOSE OF REPORT.

With this number closes the Report of the Annual Meeting, consisting of 87 pages of foolscap paper, and 34,803 words. There were a few who tried to make it appear that we publishers were anxious to have a published report for the sake of gain. Such can be undeceived by making a calculation of the cost at 20 cents per hundred words, and in addition pay the reporter's boarding and traveling expenses, making a bill of nearly $100.00. Had we been allowed to publish the names in connection with the Report, it would have been the most interesting and complete that was ever published by the Brethren. We have the names of 47 speakers, which embraces all who took part in the meeting, except a few who spoke out of order, or could not be heard. These names are all in our "Key to Report," and shows who and how many it would take to do the business of our Annual Meetings. This "key" was gotten up seperately and cost us money, and therefore we would be pleased to have those wishing it to to send for it at once. Only ten cents, and still less in quantities.

A Trip to Berlin, Somerset County, Pa.

On Thursday morning of last week we stepped aboard the Brard Top for Dale City, Somerset county Pa. At our side and on the seat behind us, were Mr. Place of Huntingdon and a Mr. Bowman of Somerset county, both patent right men. Of course they were both good talkers, as such men always are, and with the motto, "Men of business should push their business," circulars were distributed, and then followed a lively conversation on the merits of their respective patent rights. The one was selling a patent clothes washer and the other a patent gate latch, and according to our judgement, both posessed merits that should not be overlooked by those interested. We are seldom much interested in patent rights and soon succeeded in changing the subject, and found our companion a man of general intelligence and free to talk on most any subject. We spent the time very pleasantly, and when we reached Saxton we discovered that brother Grahill Myers had been added to our number somewhere along the way. He was on his way to the Snake Spring Valley Lovefeast, and continued with us to Mt. Dallas, where he was met with conveyance to convey him to the place of meeting. At 12:45 we reached Bridgeport. All who have traveled this road will, no doubt, remember this place. We had about concluded to take a stroll among the hills to while away the two long hours we were obliged to spend here, but soon the train South arrived and with it brought sisters Emma Miller, Rosie and Barbara Snowberger, and a Miss Furry from Bedford county, who had been attending the Lovefeast at Myers Dale, and were on their return home. We also had the pleasure of speaking just a few words to Eld. C. G. Lint, who was on his way to a Lovefeast somewhere in Virginia. Soon the train was off, and we were glad that it had brought us company. Sister Emma Miller formerly worked in our office and we had not the pleasure of meeting her since she left, which has been more than a year ago. While in our office she gave entire satisfaction, but seemed to prefer school teaching, and has pursued that calling ever since to general acceptance. We hope that success may attend her efforts in this high and noble calling. The teacher is truly in a position to accomplish much good and by a christian deportment may make impressions that will save souls from sin and misery.

At the appointed time the train west arrived and we were off for Dale City. Here we met brother J. W. Beer and went along with him to his home. In the evening we went to the home of brother Quinter where we had the pleasure of meeting broth. S. Z. Sharp of Tennessee. We were much rejoiced to meet him once more. Ten or twelve years ago we went to school to him in Kishacoquillas Valley, Mifflin Co., Pa., and our relation to him as a pupil at that time will ever be remembered with pleasure. We were glad to learn that he expected to remain in the county some days, and that we would have the pleasure of his company at Berlin during the meeting which was to commence on the following Sabbath. We remained with brother Quinter and family until next morning, and as they had to leave in order to attend a Lovefeast in Virginia, we spent part of the day visiting elsewhere among the brethren. We had a very pleasant time at the homes of brethren J. W. Beer and Dr. U. M. Beechly. In the afternoon we started for Berlin, and when we arrived at Garrett, the nearest station, and which is some 8 miles from Berlin, we found the hack already full and had it not been for brother Forney, who was at the station, we would have most likely had to walk. Brother Forney gave us a seat on a frieght car and we had a ride on the Buffalo Valley Railroad which is now being made from Garret to Berlin. It is completed to within about two miles of that place and will be finished in a short time. We enjoyed this ride very much as we had a good view of the country. Along the way the train stopped a few minutes and here we saw a very beautiful mineral spring. It is very deep, in fact some say it has no bottom, but that is not probable. At last we reached the present terminus of the road and in company with brother Forney footed the remaining two miles which appeared pretty long as it is a gradual ascent, but finally we reached the top and after enjoying the hospitality of brother Forney for a short time we went to brother H. R. Holsinger's where we felt at home, and had our home during our stay at this place.

It will be remembered that this is the place selected for the Brethren's school, and as we feel much interested in this school we felt a desire to see the proposed location. In the first place we can say we were not disappointed as to its merits as a location, although we were never so favorably impressed with the idea of sending our youth so near the top of the Alleghany to obtain their education. Perhaps our brethren's idea of heaven is up, and they want to get them as near there as possible, and this reminds us of a private letter that was sent to a brother in reference to the location previous to the meeting held at Martinsburg, Pa. He thought if the school were to be located down here at Huntingdon the devil would carry it off at once. We were made to wonder how much better it will be up at Berlin. The devil presented his temptations in the mountain top and even in the wilderness as well as in the highways. But enough of this, we do not want to disparage Berlin as a location and if the brethren of that congregation do as they said they would at the school meeting held at Martinsburg, they are fully entitled to the school, and all the friends of education should go in heart and hand with them to make it a grand success. It will be remembered by all who were at that meeting, and by the statements made in our periodicals afterwards, that they obligated themselves to raise $30,000 in the Berlin congregation, and the town of Berlin $4,000, making in all $34,000. In addition to this there were two other congregations in Somerset county that promised to pay $10,000 each. This looked very good indeed, as over half the money was already raised, and from the manner in which the statement was made by the delegates we thought it as good as though it were put down on paper in black and white. We were sorry however to hear a few insinuations that there is a drawback in this matter, and if so, it will be a great barrier in the way to success. Our solicitor ought not to go outside of Somerset county to solicit subscriptions until every red cent of that money is raised. If this is done it will undoubtedly be a success, for it will show that the brethren there are in earnest and reliable. The brethren at Clover Creek did not feel so able pecuniarily, at the time of that meeting, yet every cent that was promised would have been paid, and so it would have been at James Creek. We hope then that there will be no failure in this matter, for a failure at the start will have a tendency to make it a failure all through.

On Saturday morning in company with brother Holsinger and Sharp, we started out to take a view of the surrounding country. We went to one of the places proposed as a site for the school building. It is on an eminence west of the town, and is a very beautiful place indeed. We do not think a more beautiful site could be had anywhere for a school building as far as scenery is concerned. Here also ten acres of ground can be procured, a part of which will be donated. From here we went to brother Jacob Myers' who is very much afflicted. He has been confined to his bed for some time, but seems to endure his affliction with christian patience and forbearance. We remained with him part of the day, and then his son Peter kindly offered us a seat in his buggy for a ride, in company with brother Holsinger and Sharp, to the mountain where there are several very beautiful springs. We enjoyed this ride and stroll along the mountain very much. If these springs were some place where they were brought into more general notice, and at a place easy of access, they would no doubt become a place of considersible resort. There is certainly very excellent water all through this locality, and plenty of it. We also saw the site at the eastern end of town for the proposed school building. It is at the edge of a beautiful grove and in some respects would be a very pretty place. All things considered, we think this would be a very desirable location for a school. Of course there are plenty of places just as good, but our brethren here have the means to give the enterprise a start, the church influence is all that can be desired, and other things which render it suitable as a location being tolerably fair, we think there should be a unity of effort on the part of the entire brotherhood to make this enterprise a success. On Saturday evening there was an appointment for preaching in the Methodist church in Berlin. Brother Sharp preached a very interesting discourse from the 23rd verse of the first chapter of Corinthians. Here we had the pleasure of meeting a brother Musser whose acquaintance we formed on the road to Annual Conference in Berks county, Pa. We went along with him to his home and enjoyed ourself very much with him and his kind family. On Sabbath morning at 10 o'clock services commenced at the Brethren's meeting house about one mile from Berlin. The congregation was very large indeed, not more than one half of the people in the house at one time, and we thought from appearances many did not care to be in. This is a great country for young men to sport fine buggies and horses, and we thought perhaps a little more money is spent in this way than is for their good. If we were to visit the homes of those young men that have nothing but drive to and from the place of meeting, we would not likely find much of libraries. At least, such a course does not indicate very much culture, and perhaps if a little more time was spent in reading and reflection, instead of pleasure riding, there would be a perceptible difference in the actions of such young men. We believe in books more than we do in fine buggies and horses. When we make these remarks we refer only to such as have their mind and affections set on these things to the exclusion of things of more importance. Those of our young brethren who have buggies and horses, yet count them as nothing, and whose minds are concentrated upon that which should be the great central object of this life, are in posession of the conveniences of this life which when lawfully used are not objectionable.

The ministers present besides those of Berlin were Bro. S. Z. Sharp of Tenn. and John S. Holsinger of Alum Bank, Pa., and several others whose names we did not learn. We were very pleasantly and profitably entertained by discourses from brethren Sharp and John Holsinger. In the afternoon there was also preaching in the grove. The order during the exercises in the evening notwithstanding the large assembly was excellent. The meeting was a good one, and it was certainly a season of refreshing in the presence of the Lord. This church we understand is in a prosperous condition. At the council meeting previous to the meeting 14 were baptized, and these too mostly young persons. There are still others, it is said, that are counting the cost and we hope ere long they may enter the ranks and fight valiantly under Emanuel's banner. There was no preaching the next morning, and in company with brother John Baer we went to Somerset where we attended church in the evening. Bro. Sharp preached in the Disciple church at that place. We also attended church at Trent's meeting-house on Tuesday evening and then started for home. We stopped at Myers Dale, and this time we had the pleasure of meeting brother C. G. Lint at home. We spent a very pleasant time with him as we suppose every one does that visit him. We also spent a short time in the Companion office with brother Quirter. The Companion seems to be prospering finely. Our papers do not meet our ideal of what they should be, but we suppose we are doing the best we can under the present circumstances, and will therefore labor together as best we can for the promotion of the good cause: About noon we took the train for home and arrived there in the evening.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

CHILDREN'S EVENING HYMN.

The little birds now seek their nest;
The baby sleeps on mother's breast;
Thou givest all thy children rest,
God of the weary,

The sailor prayeth on the sea;
The little ones at mother's knee;
Now comes the penitent to thee,
God of the weary.

The orphan puts away his fears;
The troubled hopes for happier years;
Thou driest all the mourner's tears,
God of the weary.

Thou sendest rest to tired feet;
To little toilers, slumbers sweet;
To aching hearts, repose complete;
God of the weary.

In grief, perplexity, or pain,
None ever come to thee in vain;
Thou makest life a joy again,
God of the weary.

We sleep that we may wake renewed,
To serve thee as thy children should,
With love, and zeal, and gratitude,
God of the weary.

Learning the Verses.

A young friend, who had been for days laying at the gates of death, remarked one Lord's day to the children, who were repeating the Bible verses in her room:

"Oh! I would learn all the verses I could now, while you are young. How much I would give if I knew the Bible as your mother does! How I should like to say it over to myself when I lie here, too weak even to read!"

The poor girl was early left an orphan, and thrown upon the tender mercies of worldly people, who cared only for the amount of labor that could be got out of her young hands. There was no Christian training, no blessed Sabath influence. Yet a mother's prayers followed her, and even then she sometimes prayed most earnestly to herself, and made resolutions to seek the Savior. For six years she had professed Christ, and he does not desert her in this hour of sorest need that ever comes to mortals.

I wish all our children would heed this message from Annie's dying bedside. Learn many Bible verses. You do not know how much or how soon you may need them. It is thought a piece of commendable prudence for children to begin to save little sums of money, and put them in the savings bank. It will be useful to them in maturer years, when they wish to set up in business for themselves. It may be their sole dependence in some time of adversity, when fortune frowns or sickness comes.

But what fund in the bank could ever compare with a bank of golden texts, all payable by a banker so rich that no possibility of a failure can ever for a moment exist? Do you think that millions in money could buy from this poor dying girl her interest in that verse "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin?"

It will make no difference a century hence whether you laid up money in bank or not. But these precious verses are enduring treasures. You can take them with you when you leave this world.

I Will Stop.

"I shall never become like him," a a young man said to me as he pointed to a poor reeling drunkard across the street. I had been trying to warn him of the danger of touching alcohol in any form, for, alas! he sometimes drank cider, beer, and wine.

"I shall never become like him," he reiterated again, earnestly.

"Do not be too sure, Charlie," I answered, "for you have taken the first few steps in the path that poor L—— is now traveling. Unless you now stop at once, you will become the same wretched thing that he is—a drunkard."

"No, you are mistaken," the young man said, "for whenever I discover danger ahead I will stop; I know that I can."

"You will never discover it till it is too late to turn about, Charlie. Poor L—— yonder, was lost before he knew it," I answered.

"Do not borrow trouble about me," he replied with a laugh, as he turned away.

Five years have elapsed since the above conversation took place between Charlie S—— and myself, and to-night he sleeps in a drunkard's grave. Poor Charlie did not see the danger until it was too late, and so he went to ruin. He did not possess the moral courage that he was sure he could call into command at any moment, and his frail constitution gave way in a little while, and Charlie was lost in darkness.

"I was mistaken," were the last words he ever said to me, "for I have become just such a wretch like poor L——."

Boys, look at the poor, bloated wrecks of humanity all about you, and be saved while it is possible. You will become just such a poor object of pity, unless you leave the paths of intemperance. Leave it now, for if you wait until tomorrow, you may be bound in chains that can never be broken.—Cross and Crown.

QUEER TOM.

Tom Flossofer was the queerest boy I ever knew. I don't think he ever cried. I never saw him. If Fleda found her tulips all rooted up by her pet puppy, and cried, as little girls will, Tom was sure to come round the corner, whistling, and say:

"What makes you cry? can you cry tulips? do you think every sob makes a root or a blossom? Here, let's try to right them!"

So he would pick up the poor flowers put their roots into the ground again, whistling all the time; make the bed look smooth and fresh, and take Fleda off to hunt hens' nests in the barn. Neither did he do any differently in his own troubles. One day his great kite snapped the string and flew away far out of sight. Tom stood still one moment, and then turned round to come home, whistling a merry tune.

"Why Tom" said I, "aren't you sorry to loose that kite."

"Yes, but what's the use? I can't take more than a minute to feel bad. 'Sorry' will not bring the kite back, and I want to make another.

Just so when he broke his leg.

"Poor Tom," cried Fleda, "you can't play any mo-e o-re!"

"I am not poor, either. You cry for me; I dont have to do it for myself, and I have a splended time to whistle. Besides, when I get well, I shall beat every boy in school on the multiplication; for I say it over and over till it makes me sleepy, every time my leg aches."

Tom Flossofer was queer, certainly; but I wish a great many more people were queer that way.—Wood's Magazine.

HE COULD BE TRUSTED.

Alfred was missing once after sunset. Mother was getting anxious, for she always wished him home early. A neighbor, coming in, said a number of boys had gone to the river to swim, and he thought it likely Alfred was with them.

"No," said the mother, "he promised me he would never go there without my leave, and he always keeps his word."

But seven o'clock came, then eight and mother was still listening for Alfred's step; but it was half past eight when his shout and whistle was heard when he ran in at the gate.

"Confess now," said the neighbor, "that you have been away to the river with other boys, and so kept away till late?"

How the boy's eyes flashed, and the crimson mounted to his cheeks!

"No sir! I promised my mother that I would never go there without her leave and do you think I would tell a falsehood! I helped James to find the cows that had stayed in the wood, and didn't think I should stay so late."

James coming up the street just then, came in to say he was afraid they had been alarmed; he and Alfred had been so far in the wood it made them late in getting home.

"I think," said the neighbor, turning to the mother as he took his hat to go home, "there is a comfort in store for you, by him. Such a boy as that will make a noble man."—Ex.

He who thinks he can find in himself, the means of doing without others is much mistaken; but he that thinks others cannot do without him is still more mistaken.

Blessed is the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child, for there is no saying when and where it may bloom forth.

Libraries are the shrines where all the relics of the ancient saints, full of true virtuss, and without delusion or imposture, are preserved.

Correspondence.

Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

PATTONSBURG, VA., July 5, 1874.

Dear Editors:—

I seat myself this evening to give you a little church news from our part of God's heritage. I hope it will interest some at least, who have never heard that there is a little band of pilgrims who worship the God of our fathers in this part of the world, namely Purgatory Creek, Botetourt Co., Va. Some 12 or 15 years ago, the Brethren while passing through this valley, to preach the gospel of peace and to sound the trumpet of Salvation, it so happened that they were blowing the trompet some four miles from where we lived, and upon my father and some of our neighbors hearing of it they were desirous that they should come and preach in our neighborhood; and accordingly my father and one of our neighbors, who is sleeping in the grave long since, went to the place of meeting and solicited them to come and preach for us. They promised to do so and in a short time, sent an appointment that they would preach for us on a certain evening. It so happened that when the time arrived it proved to be a disagreeable night, having rained all day, and the night being dark and rainy, the congregation was small and they not expecting to meet a minister. But imagine their surprise after a while the noise of wheels told them that the longed for ministers were approaching, and what was more surprising upon coming to the light, one of the ministers proved to be a very aged man, I suppose about 75 or 80 years old. His name was Miller, from Rockingham Co., Va., as well as I recollect. And so it is with all of God's faithful ministers, they will never disappoint if it is in their power to fulfill We had a good meeting on this occasion and afterwards had regular appointments. It was not long before there were some who wished to unite themselves with the Brethren, and were baptized, my father being among the number. Since that time we have had subsequent additions and at this time we have an organized body consisting of about 50 members, one eld r and two ministers and four deacons. As regards our prosperity here in the past, we owe it principally to the faithful labors of Brethren Peter Winniger and B. F. Moomaw. God grant that they may spend th remainder of their lives in peace and go to the grave with hope in Jesus' blood and at the resurrection morn of the just, may they come forth bringing us as sheaves into the garner of the Lord, and as brands that they have plucked from the fire of eternal destruction.

At present we are increasing very slowly but we hope the time is not far distant when we will have a mighty turning to the Lord. I hope and pray that many of our neighbors friends and relatives will embark in the gospel ship before she launches from the shores of time and it will be forever too late. We look around and about us sometimes with surprise and wonder why it is that more in our midst do not come out on the Lord's side and choose the straight and narrow way that leads to the Lord; but when we take a second look at the church, at those who profess to bear the cross of Christ, we need not be so surprised; for the most of us must confess that we are lukewarm in the cause of Christ, and that we are bearing the banner of the cross but droopingly. I hope that by the help of God we will at once arouse from this state of lethergy and go about our work with double diligence.

O, how uncertain is life! How certain is death! We see on our right and on our left that the monster death is cutting down and bearing to the tomb our fellow mortals, and the time may not be far in the distance when we too will have to return to our mother dust. Then how important that we have the wedding garment ready to go in to the marriage supper when the cry is made, "The bride-groom has come, go ye out to meet him!"

We will now conclude by giving a few words of encouragement and consolation to our bereaved friends Lewis and sister Julia Sale, of Plattsburg, Missouri, upon the loss of their little girl, Bettie, whose death we are informed of through an obituary notice in the PILGRIM. Friend Lewis and sister Julia Sale, formerly lived in our neighborhood before moving to Missouri. Little Bettie was some 2 or 3 years old when they left this country, was a very intelligent little girl indeed, but for some good cause or other, God has taken her away from her earthly parents and we hope has taken her to his home in heaven. Then dear friend and sister, look upon this affliction and bereavement as being laid upon you from one who is too wise too err, and to be unkind. It may be that His spirit has been striving with Bettie's father for a long time in order to wean his affections from earth to heaven. It being fruitless he has resorted to other means in order to induce him to prepare for a home in heaven. He has seen fit in His Providence to take little Bettie to himself in order to draw the father's affections to heaven. Then dear friend delay no time but prepare yourself at once to meet your daughter in heaven, for it remains for you to go to her for she nevermore will return to you.

AUGUSTINE F. PURSELEY.

A REPLY TO QUERY.

In PILGRIM No. 25, page 196, current Volume, I notice a query that I am not sure that I understand. I do not fully comprehend the idea that is meant to be conveyed—whether every member shall engage in feet-washing, i. e., wash feet—or whether it is meant that every one shall have their feet washed, at every communion.

Concluding the latter to be the idea that is meant to be conveyed, I will proceed to give a few ideas.

As we have no "thus saith the Lord," directly on the subject, I do not know whether I can advance any thing that will interest, and especially since we have not taken much time to examine the subject; but I will, however introduce one symbol that may have some bearing on the subject.

It being evident that in the beginning God saw fit to give man a law—a law to test his fidelity. This law however was a law of omission, so to speak, i. e., that law did not consist in doing but in not doing.

After man had violated that law, God saw fit to give him another law, a law of commission, or one that consisted in doing, and the introduction of that law was after the manner—in regard to the passover—"Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all in water but roast with fire: his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof, and ye shall let nothing of it remain till the morning: and that which remaineth of it until the morning ye shall burn with fire.

And thus shall ye eat it, with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet and your staff in hand, and ye shall eat it in haste, it is the Lord's passover."—Ex. 12: 9, 10, 11.

It seems from the foregoing that it was a very precise law, yet it was not a perfect law. But then who would conclude that if the childred of Israel had neglected a part of that law, that it would have been satisfactory to the Lord? It was not to be only partly observed, but to the letter, and nothing short would have justified them.

But now we have a perfect law, whose giver is perfect as its author, consequently it is doubly necessary that we should obey it in full.

Feet-washing being the first in order, it is necessary that every member should have their feet washed before approaching the Lord's table: it being a cleansing operation, "not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience; ye are clean every whit," saith the Lord, after He had washed their feet. If we do not observe all we may easily eat and drink condemnation to ourselves for the Lord instructed the spostles to teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, &c.,—not only a part, but all. If you take away a part of a machine you have not a perfect machine left. So in this case, if you do not begin right you are not apt to get right. If you do not wash your feet you have neglected the great lesson of humility. If you do not eat the Lord's Supper you have neglected the lessons of liberal charity, and are most likely to partake of the communion, not discerning the Lord's body.

In conclusion we would say that in our great weakness we have endeavored to give briefly the reasons why we think that every brother and sister should have their feet washed before going to the communion table. But on the other hand we think that it is not particularly necessary for every one to wash, from the simple fact that Christ did not so instruct, neither is it according to the example, and not only so, but it could not be done unless each one would only wash one. That, we believe is not the particular order. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

THE LOVE.

"Yea I have loved thee with an everlasting love." Jer. 31: 3.

"Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." 1st. John 7: 10.

As God is love, so also is the Son of God love, and he being love, so also is his word, and his walk, and his life, suffering, and death, so is all in him pure love. Love is the spirit of the life and doctrine of Jesus. Love breathed the whole New Testament. According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love. Eph. 1: 4. From the beginning did God have nothing else but thoughts of love and peace for us, his counsel and will worked from all eternity thither how he would love us in time, and, while here below trying to show us all good. And when the time was fulfilled, came the love and became self, a man, enrobed herself in our flesh and blood, became our blood's friend and like us in all, in order that she might love us more.

"The love became my kinsman,
My brother is self the charity."

The walk and the life of "the love" on this earth convinces us that we did not love God, but "the love" loved us first and that she gave herself for us. We may look at "the love" where we will, in the manger or on the cross, in the hut of the poor carpenter, or in the desert, whole nights watching in solemn prayer or in the daytime walking in her station, suffering, and silent among her perseceters, or teaching, comforting and healing the sick and sinners, blood sweating in the prayer of agony in the garden of Gethsemane, or forsaken, wrestleing with the death on the cross, or wherever we meet her we find her always as the loving love, from there nothing else but blessing, light, and life flows.

"Thy look was love, life did flow
From the seam of thy robe."

But how have men received "the love"? Alas! they granted her no lodging, she was obliged to be born in a stable, doors and gates were closed up for her. Yes, she had to fly over the frontier and live in exile. Men persued her life, tried to cast her out of the world again, when she just had taken the first step into it. For this reason was she hidden for for thirty years and lived unknown in poverty and contempt. But when she made her appearance in public, opening her mouth and hands, and walking about in pure welldoing and blessing, what did men do then? Some of them pushed her away with force, others armed themselves against her casting stones at her, and others again prayed her to depart out of their coasts. At last they nailed her to the cross and killed her. But the love can not fail, disgrace, cross, injury of all kind, and death itself could not kill her, it only raised and increased her more. Therefore could she not rest in the grave, the love became life again and started now to lay the foundation to her kingdom, while she, going back to the Father from whence she came poured out the spirit of love and sent it down on all who desire to be benefited by her.

See there a short biography of the love, who is now on the right hand of God who reigneth over all the heaven and worlds, filling them with her blessings till all be with her of one mind, and she be all in all.

Whoever now likes to know the love and learn how to love her, or will let himself be loved from her, he go to her to school, and read and learn diligently in the two books which the love leaveth for her scholars. It is only one book but written on the in and outside, and must therefore be read two fold. There is an inner and an outer word of love, an inwardly and an outwardly written Bible. The love speaks to us inwardly in our hearts and reveleth herself outwardly to us through the holy scriptures. We must read in both books. Everywhere must we hear the words of the love. The inner connection with "the love" in the heart where she lives and reigns in the spirit interprets the outer word, and the outer word in the scriptures is the test on which the inner experiences and communications of the love can and shall be proven. It is a great joy and comfort to the soul, when we have the same language and thoughts of "the love" in us of as we learn in the holy scripure by reading, hearing, and observing.

My dear reader, let therefore "the love" be thy inhabitant. The outwardly speaks to thee in the word, she also speaks inwardly to thee in the spirit. She will come to thee and make her abode with thee, yea, she will send thee the spirit of love and it shall abide with you forever, shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever she hath taught and done on earth and has left for you.

A BABBLE OF BAPTISMS.

We have thought the above caption an appropriate name for a scene which we witnessed last Sabbath, (June 28th). Of the folly and absurdity which we then and there witnessed it is our purpose to give a brief description and submit it to the discretion of the Editors of the PILGRIM for publication or rejection.

In the morning of the above named day, prior to the observing of this "Babble of Baptisms," a sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Irvin of the "Albright Church." He commenced by reading from the 2nd chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, from the 38th to the 41st verse, inclusive. The words, "Repent and be baptized every one of you," formed the basis of his discourse. He defined repentance as being sorry for having sinned against God. This he said must take place prior to the administration of baptism. After noticing this very briefly' baptism became his theme He defined baptism with the words' of the Apostle Peter. "It is not the washing away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God and man." He then went on to tell his hearers that it was a matter of no import as to how, or by what mode, a believer was baptized. He signified his willingness to administer baptism by any form or mode that a person may desire. He also informed his hearers that it was abominable for a minister of the Gospel to contend that there was but one mode of baptism whereby believers are to be initiated into the visible church of God. Oh what sophistry! Oh will not people cease to blindfold people, telling them it matters not whether they follow the example of Christ or their own inclinations. Christ emphatically declares, that He is "the way the truth and the life and no man comes unto the Father but by me." As I do not wish to intrude upon the columns of the PILGRIM with this article I will refrain from further comment upon the sermon above mentioned, but should this ever appear in print and come under the notice of any of those who were unable to cope with such sophistries, I beg them to examine the following passages of scripture. Acts 13: 24, and 19: 4, Rom. 6: 4, Col. 2: 12, Eph. 4: 5, 1st Peter 3: 21, Rom. 6: 3, 1st Col. 12: 13. Examine the above named passages of scripture and if you are a seeker after divine truth you must acknowledge that to be properly baptized you cannot follow or choose your own opinion, but that you must be made subservient to the will of God. After the conclusion of the sermon the applicants were requested to come forward, and a series of questions were then asked by the minister, and affirmatively answered by the applicants, after which prayer was offered when all repaired to a stream of water close at hand. Here prayer was again offered after which the minister proceeded to baptize the applicants as they desired. By continued singing and prayer the animal passions of some became so much aroused as to make the woods resound with shouts long and loud. Some of the applicants entered the stream where the minister proceeded to pour water on their heads, and called it baptism, others were immersed once backward. Some of them became so loud in their exclamations that a person passing by and not aware of what was going on would have supposed them to be madmen. One applicant was immersed three times forward. The sixth attempt was however made before the desired result was accomplished. This was owing to the inexperience and utter ignorance on the part of the administrator as how to properly baptize a person as Christ gave an example. O, how pitiful when professed ministers will make themselves expert in carrying out the traditions of men and remain in ignorance of the example of Lord and Master. One of the applicants requested the minister to baptize him with the Holy Ghost. O what delusion! O what a day of final reckoning will there be when men will be called to an account for making a mockery of the holy ordinances of God, and subjecting to ridicule the examples of our Lord. Would to God that such iniquity and every vestige of it might be banished from the earth. The whole scene seemed to us hypocritical. Surely the partakers of such sacrilegious performances must give "an account for this day's uproar."

I have not been prompted by any uncharitable motive in thus exposing this ridiculous madness, but because I believe it to be the duty of every one who has a just regard for the holy ordinances of God to condemn such senseless acts. May God make us all wise unto salvation is my prayer.

JOHN J BROWN.

Hampton, Pa.

VAN WERT, July 6th, 1874.

Dear Editor:—

It is my painful duty to inform you of the death of the father, in age, of our branch of the Church:

Old brother William Kauffman died on Friday evening, 3rd, was buried on Sunday at 1 o'clock. The occasion was improved by brother Ezra Smith and brother Solomon Seiber.

Old brother William was called off very suddenly. On Friday evening he ate his supper in good health and after supper lay down on the lounge to rest and was reading a hymn. He asked some of the family whether the hymn was in the new books. The book fell from his hand and he was speechless and motionless, gave a few short gasps and the spirit had fled. Thus in life we are in death.

TAKE NOTICE.

To the Churches of the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

Be it known that the Church of Altoona must prove a failure, and the brethren of that vicinity fall into disrepute, except the Churches of the above named district sends in their money subscribed according to promise. There has been some brethren from neighboring congregations somewhat disappointed when seeing the building; it being so small. So much the worse if it is small. It will not take so much to pay for it. It has been dedicated, and on last Sunday there was a Sabbath-school organized, and now it would be a pity to let it go back, when the Church is so immensely rich in this world's goods. The man that the building was purchased from, made his arrangements to pay out the money positively on the agreed time, as he believed it would be paid to him according to promise. Now the Treasurer asks the churches to send the money at once.

By order of the Church of Altoona.

Fraternally yours.

WM. H. QUINN.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Please announce through the PILGRIM that our Love feast in the Manor Congregation Indiana Co. Pa. will be held on the 28th of August. An invitation is extended to all who wish to be with us, especially the ministering brethren.

S. S. CRESSWELL

DIED.

HOFFMAN.—Near Oakland Mills, Pa., July 5th, 1874, Michael, husband of Lydia Hoffman, aged 61 years and 4 mos. Funeral services in Lost Creek Menonite church, by Bro's Solomon Seiber, Andrew Beshore, and Christian Grabill.

W. H. Kurtz.

MACK.—Also in the same church Licking Co. Ohio Artimas son of brother Jacob and sister Eliza Mack May 20th 1874. aged 11 months and 13 days.

Funeral sevises by the writer. Thus the tender branch is torn away from its kind earthly parents but taken to a far better parent and s home of unceasing rest.

Somerset Ohio.

BRUMBAUGH.—In the James Creek congregation, Huntingdon Co., Pa., May 30th, 1874, brother Peter Brumbaugh, aged 37 years, 10 months, and 6 days. Funeral services by Joseph Snowberger.

The deceased was a son of Eld. Isaac Brumbaugh who died several years ago. His affliction was long and severe, but he bore it with christian fortitude, and is now, we trust, in that blissful abode where sickness and pain is felt and feared no more.

PLATT.—Near Mechanicsburg, Pa., June 10th, Wm. Henry, son of friends William and Margaret Platt, aged 1 year, 0 months, and 57 days. Funeral services conducted by brother David Neisley and the undersigned.

The material cause of this little boy's death was the penetrations of an iron churn handle into his head between the frontal bone and the ball of the eye, while he was alone at play with the churn. He suffered intensely, lingering nearly two weeks between life and death, when the Lord set the struggling spirit free. It is hoped that his parents will not forget or neglect to go where he is. J. B. GARVER.

MEADER. | In Boston, Cumberland Co. Virginia, April 18th, 1874, Mrs. Anna R. wife of James Meador.

She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church for a number of years and though she had not the privilege of attending meeting very often, yet in her daily walk she was a bright example for the wayward and Christian. Few posess as many lovely traits of character, and was so amiable and good. As a wife, she was devoted, kind, and true; as a mother, she was all that a mother could be, and as a sister, friend, and neighbor, she was unsurpassed, as all who knew her can testify. She had been a sufferer from a complication of diseases for several years, but in unassuming patience she bore it all—never complaining but in weakness. She died as she had lived, in the full assurance that she would soon bask in the sunlight of her dear Redeemer's presence. Few, if any ever witnessed such a death-bed scene. She bade each loved one farewell with a strict admonition to meet her in heaven—especially to her beloved husband. May this sad dispensation of God's providence work for her sorrowing loved salvation, is the prayer of one who knew and loved her.

SALLIE J. COOK.

ITEMS.

The Elklick church Somerset Co. Pa. seems to be in a prosperous condition. Some 30 were baptized within ten weeks.

Bro. S. Z. Sharp is now in Somerset County laboring in the interest of the contemplated school. He is engaged in teaching at Marysville Tenn., and reports his school as being in a flourishing condition. He has now a vacation of a few weeks and can only remain North during this time. He seems much pleased with Tennessee, and reports things there as looking upward. When he left there in the latter part of June, harvest was over and some threshing done, and they were already having bread from new wheat.

This season seems to be especially noted for storms and hail. About three weeks ago a hail storm passed over some portions Huntingdon county that did much damage Hail, that actually measured seven inches in circumference. On last Saturday eve, a hail storm passed over this place, but the hail was not so large, and did not do so much damage. At Lewistown the same evening the storm was terrific. The long railroad bridge over the Juniata river was blown down and with it a number of freigh cars. Some four or five persons who had taken shelter in the bridge were killed. The storm also reached Baltimore and other places. On Wednesday evening last a severe storm passed over Altoona, Pa., which did considerable damage. Some few houses, it is said, were blown down. A storm of great severity burst upon the city of Washington and other parts of the country on the 4th and 5th insts. At Washington it was at its height about 8 o'clock in the evening of the 4th. The roar of the wind was terrible, and the condition of the people's minds was one of terror and apprehension. Trees were uprooted, the walls of houses were overthrown, chimneys were blown down, houses were unroofed, windows broken, carriages overturned, and other damages inflicted of a more or less serious nature. In some parts of the city the excitement reached almost to a panic, for at one time it appeared as though the whole city was to be swept away. The damage was very great to private property, to say nothing of the damage done to the fine trees in the public parks which was considerable.

A terrible death by nitro-glycerine occurred near Parker City, Pa., last week. A young man was carting six cans of the material over a rough road in a wagon, when, from some cause which will never be explained, it exploded. The man, horse and cart were literally blown to pieces. The man's head and part of his breast were found three hundred feet distant, having been blown over the tops of the highest trees. Fragments of his limbs were scattered in different directions, and his right hand was found half a mile from the spot. Even the horse's shoes were torn from his feet.

The month of June is noted for terrible earthquakes. On June 7, 1692, 3,000 were destroyed by an earthquake in Jamaica; on the same date of the same month in 1755, 40,000 persons perished in Persia by an earthquake; again, on June 7, 1773, Santiago with its inhabitants was swallowed up. Several other instances of severe June earthquakes might be mentioned, one even so late as June 10, 1867, in Java, when 400 persons were destroyed.

HORTICULTURAL.

We just now notice on our table a new monthly for public favor entitled the Cumberland County Horticultural Journal, published at Eberly's Mills, Cumberland Co., Pa, at 50 cents a year, by "we don't know who."

We believe that this is the first journal that ever came to our office without the name of its author. But no matter, it has an author, one too, that we think will spare no pains to make the journal richly worth the price asked for it. It is to be devoted to horticultural subjects generally and entirely. Send 50 cents to the "Horticultural Journal," Eberly's Mills, Cumberland Co. Pa., and learn what our brother has to say and teach on this important branch of American industry.

A Sad Accident—Warning.

Last evening about six o'clock Amanda Johnson, a young woman, not quite seventeen years old' (the daughter of a widow, of feeble health, residing in Jamestown, Elkhart Co. Ind.,) who was working for a family in Elkhart, while endeavoring to kindle a fire took the kerosene can and poured some oil on the wood; there still being some fire in the stove, it immediately caught, exploded the can and set fire to the clothes of the young woman, who ran out of the house and with some difficulty was caught and the fire put out, but not until her limbs and body were so badly burned that she died about 12 o'clock. To-day (June 25th) she was brought home to her mother and buried. The mother's heart was filled with the deepest sorrow, and it seemed almost impossible for to give her daughter up. On Monday morning she had left home in the full enjoyment of health, and little did the mother think that so soon she should be brought back a corps, but indeed there is only a step between us and death. The girl was entirely resigned to the will of God. She did not wish the word to be brought to her mother till she was dead; as she felt her mother could not survive the shock; she requested that all her clothes should be kept for her younger sister. She seemed willing to die, and said she was going home.

This should be another solemn warning never to bring kerosene near to fire. Herald of Truth.

DREADFUL CALAMITY AT SYRACUSE, N. Y.—On Tuesday evening of last week a fearful calamity occurred at the Central Baptist church at Syracuse, N. Y. About 300 people, most of whom were young persons and children, were assembled at a strawberry festival in the parlor of the church, which was on the second floor, a room about forty feet square. The floor suddenly gave way, precipitating the mass of people into the room below amid broken timbers and falling beams, killing thirteen persons outright and injuring many more.

—ANOTHER VICTIM OF HYDROPHOBIA. Another fearful death from hydrophobia occurred in N. Y. last week in the person of Mr. McCormick, a butcher of East 51st street. McCormick was bitten by a small dog a little over a month ago, the wound being only a slight scratch and he never dreamed of such a thing as hydrophobia until he was attacked, on Monday, and died in terrific agony after some forty hours illness. A large number of eminent physicians attended the sufferer, and afforded him some relief toward the last by injections of morphia. After the death of the patient a post mortem examination was held and a careful scientific analysis of the vital organs will be made.—N. Y. Observer.

—Crop reports from the central and northern parts of Illinois give promise of a large increase of the corn crop, a full average yield of wheat; other grains are considered as promising well. Wheat harvesting is now in full operation in Morgan county, and if the weather continues favorable more than half will be done this week. The yield is immense, perhaps the largest ever known.

—The colored Methodist Episcopal church in America has four bishops fifteen annual conferences, 607 traveling preachers, 74,799 members, 535 Sunday-schools, 1,102 teachers, 49,956 scholars, and are endeavoring to establish a school for the education of its young ministers.

—There are now 150 Presbyterian ministers in India, ministering to a Christian community of not less than 30,000 persons, of whom 8,000 are the fruits of missionary labor.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

See Deuteronomy Chap. xii, verse 23. The blood being the source from which our systems are built up and from which we derive our mental as well as physical capabilities, how important that it should be kept pure. If it contains vile festering poisons all organic functions are weakened thereby. Settling upon important organs, as the lungs, liver, or kidneys, the effect is most disastrous. Hence it behooves every one to keep their blood in a perfectly healthy condition and more especially does this apply at this particular season of the year than any other. No matter what the exciting cause may be, the real cause of a large proportion of all diseases is bad blood. Now Dr. Pierce does not wish to place his Golden Medical Discovery in the catalogue of quack patent nostrums by recomending it to cure every disease, nor does he so recommend it, on the contrary there are hundreds of diseases that he acknowledges it will not cure: but what he does claim is this that there is one form of blood disease that it will not cure and that is cancer. He does not recommend his discovery for that disease yet he knows it to be the most searching blood cleanser yet discovered, and that it will free the blood and system of all other blood poisons, be they animal, vegetable or mineral. The Golden Discovery is warranted by him to cure the worst forms of Skin Diseases, as all formes of Blotches, Pimples and eruptions, also all Glandular Swellings, and the worst forms Scrofulous and Ulcerated Sores of Neck, Legs, or other parts and all Scrofulous Diseases of the Bones as White Swellings, Fever Sores, Hip Joint and Spinal diseases, all of which belong to Scrofulous diseases.

CONFIRMED.—HIP JOINT DISEASE CURED.

W. Grove Station, Ia., July 4th, 1872.
DR. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dear Sir—My wife first became lame nine years ago, Swellings would appear and disappear on her hip, and she was gradually becoming reduced, and her whole system rotten with disease. In 1871 a swelling broke on her hip discharging large quantities, and since that time there are several openings. Have had five doctors at the expense of $125, who say nothing will do any good but a surgical operation.

July 16th, 1873, he writes thus: My wife has certainly received a great benefit from the use of your Discovery, for she was not able to get off the bed and was not expected to live a week when she commenced using it, a year ago. She has been doing the most of her work for over six months. Has used twenty bottles and is still using it. Her recovery is considered as almost a miracle, and we attribute it all to the use of your valuable medicine. I can cheerfully recommend it as a blood purifier and a strength restorer. J. M. ROBISON.

What is The Church.

A home not made with hands;
Christ, the foundation stone on which it stands;
A temple reared on earth to tell the praise
Of the great Ancient of eternal days.

What is the Church? the body—Christ the head,
Members of Him the first-born from the dead;
One Lord, one life, one sympathetic soul
Indwells the frame, breathes in, and thro' the whole.

What is the Church? Not wood, nor brick, nor stone,
No temple reared by human hands alone,
No place where Christians meet for praise and prayer,
Though e'en the Master designs to meet them there.

The Church! It is the Lamb's own holy bride,
Washed in the stream which issued from His side,
Bought with the ransom price He freely paid.
When on the alter He for her was laid.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the name of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.

There is perhaps no subject upon which there has been more theorizing than the one now before us, and none doubtless that is more imperfectly understood. The question often presents itself to us with great force, does God require perfection? In the light of his word we are forced to answer this question in the affirmative. Our text informs us that the ultimate design of all Scripture is, that the man of God may be PERFECT.

"ALL Scripture." If we would know the will of God concerning us, we must search the Scriptures thoroughly, we must take them as a whole, and not isolated portions. This blessed book contains comfort and instruction for us under whatever circumstance or condition we are forced to be in, therefore if we are conversant with this sacred volume we may understand why we are forced to endure so many trials, and afflictions. There we learn that "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Rom. 8: 28. Having faith in this promise, how it nerves us for life's journey. We look upon it as a school where we are being trained for heaven. We know that the more difficult our lessons, the more thoroughly they will develop us, if we perfectly master them.

The Scriptures not only teach that perfection is attainable, but they teach that without this we cannot be admitted into the Celestial City. Heb. 12: 14. 1 Peter 1: 15, 16.

If then perfection is required, what is the standard of perfection to which we must attain? Or, in other words, what model is presented to us for imitation? God commands that we be holy, and why? for, or because he is holy. Lev. 11: 44, 45. A holy God will have holy beings worship him. Our Savior commands, "Be ye, therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Matt. 5: 48. This is certainly a high standard of perfection. Webster says even, means likewise, in like manner. We are then to become perfect like God. He is presented to us as our model for imitation. We frequently hear it explained that we must become perfect as men, and not perfect as God. We learn nothing like this from the Bible, but quite the reverse as shown above.

The 8th and 10th verses of 1 John 1 chapter seems to argue against sinless perfection, and to avoid, as they think, this dilemma, many have adopted the following dogma: that we can only become perfect in our sphere, that is, perfect as man. But this, like every other system that is fixed up and clothed in human garb, will not bear to be tested. What is it to become perfect as men, but to become sinlessly perfect. There never was but two men that were perfect within themselves, and they were sinless. The first Adam before his fall, and the second Adam. If man is sinful he is imperfect.

If then perfection is demanded of us, and we cannot of ourselves attain to this, it behooves us to ascertain how we can become perfect. In Rom. 8: 3, we read, "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." What could not the law do? "It could not make the comers thereunto perfect." Hebrews 10: 1. What then was the design of the law? "It was our school-master to bring us unto Christ." Why must we be brought to Christ? "That we might be justified by faith."

Now we have come to the cleansing fountain. To that fountain that was opened in the house of David for sin, and for uncleanness. Here we may come polluted with leprosy of sin. Here we may bring all our deformities No matter what may be the nature of our disease, here we may find a cure, a perfect and entire cure And behold how this great Physician announces himself. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." Isaiah 55: 1.

The rich, and the poor have an equal opportunity to apply to this Physician. None need stay away because they have no means, for he wants no money or price. But his conditions must be complied with. What he demands of us is, an entire and complete abandonement of ourselves into his hands, together with a full knowledge of our diseased and wretched condition. For he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. And they that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. Again, if we say, we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we try to hide under the cloak of morality, and persuade ourselves that we have no sin, and therefore have no need of the blood of Christ, we but deceive ourselves, and the truth (that will operate like the little leaven until our whole being is impregnated wi h its life-giving principles) has not yet entered our hearts. Such an expression would but portray our moral darkness. But if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 1 John 1: 9. Yes if we confess, or acknowledge our sins he will forgive them, and cleanse us from their pollution.

Do we then feel sin to be an intolerable burden? Do we earnestly desire to be delivered from its awful power? Have we tried many remedies to no effect? Have we made many vain efforts to overcome our sinful propensities? Has the world dealt hardly with us? Have our hearts often been made to bleed, and have we at times been driven to the brink of despair, so that we have thought, "Was ever sorrow like mine?" Oh then if we have drank so deeply of the dregs of sin, if we have experienced much of the bitterness of the world, we are now prepared to appreciate the loving invitation of Christ, "Come all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. 11: 28.

Long have we sought rest but found it not; we are toil-worn. We are tired of the emptiness of the world. Oh! how refreshing to our ears is the promise of rest. This is what we want, this is what we have long sought for, and can we find it in Christ? The promise is that we can. Do we lay firm hold of this promise? Do we exercise a perfect faith in him? Do we believe that he can deliver us from the burden under which we are groaning, and that he can eradicate our diseases? If so, we will give ourselves entirely and without reserve into his hands. We will obey his every direction, and comply with all his prescriptions. Thus we are brought to Christ that we may be justified by faith. Our faith brings us within the sphere of his power. Our faith causes us to submit ourselves into his hands, and to render obedience to all his requirements. But this is all we can do, to yield up ourselves to him. He alone can make us holy. He alone can perfect us, and he will, in his own good time, complete the glorious work.

Well, says one, this doctrine pleases me well. I will just place my salvation in Christ's hands and believe that he will ultimately save me. I will comply with all the initiatory rites that conduct me unto his kingdom, and then I have done my part; now I can spend the rest of my time as I please. I can devote it to pleasure, to the acquisition of wealth, or to whatever purpose I see fit.

Pause, Oh pause! my dear friend, hearken one moment to brother Paul; hear him tell his Corinthian brethren what effect a godly sorrow has wrought upon them; and as the same effect will always follow the same cause—if YOUR sorrow has been a godly sorrow; if YOUR conversion has been genuine, then will the same effect be produced in YOU that was produced in the Corinthians. "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Matt. 7: 15. If then the fruit has undergone no change, if it is the same wild olive,—this is sufficient proof that the tree has never been grafted into the root of the tame olive tree. We will now hear what Paul says is the result of a godly sorrow: "What carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what zeal, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desires, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! 2 Cor. 7: 11.

"What carefulness." That individual, who has been laboring under some malignant disease, but who is now convalescent, will exercise the utmost care lest he suffer a relapse. The dreadful sufferings through which he has just passed are vividly before him. Ah! he remembers the throbbing pulse, the burning fever, the torturing pain! He now feels that the disease has been subdued, but that his system is reduced, and open to another attack. How carefully then will he protect his wasted frame. What caution does he use in selecting food that he may develop a healthy body; what pains he takes to screen it from all sudden changes in the atmosphere, yea, what carefulness he uses in every way.

So with that one who has been delivered by Christ, from the more terrible malady of sin; his conviction and contrition of heart were most pungent and severe; his mental agony was most excruciating while struggling with the powers of darkness but now Christ has spoken peace to his soul, all the agitation of mind has subsided, all, ALL within is calmness and repose. But O, the dreadful throes through which he has just passed have produced within him a deep horror of sin, therefore what carefulness is wrought in him, yea, what carefulness lest he be brought under its dominion again.

He feels his weakness, his ignorance, his helplessness, but he has had a little experience that the Lord is gracious, now he desires only to be fed with the sincere milk of the word that he may grow thereby, and that he may be developed only by the word. With Paul he determines not to know anything, save Jesus Christ and him crucified. How carefully then does he search the will of Christ, and how careful he is to be governed only by that will. He will not permit any one but Christ to rule over him. He has been made free in Christ, and he will stand fast in the liberty wherein Christ hath made him free, and will not again be entangled with bondage. No human creeds, no human discipline have any weight with him. The law of God is all he wants, for that is perfect. That law, and that law alone will judge him in the day of final accounts, and by no other will he be governed now. And how careful he is of his words, his conversation is of heaven, and on things pertaining to godliness. This engrosses his thoughts, and this is the theme of his conversation.

"Yea what clearing of yourselves." Paul, in his first letter to the Corinthian church tells them, "If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world let him become a fool, that he may be wise." That is let him disgorge himself of earthly wisdom, that he may be filled with heavenly wisdom. Yea these temples must be purged from all the defilement and corruption that have accumulated there, and as the light of heaven penetrates the dark recesses of the heart, it will reveal unto us much hidden corruption, and as the scales of sin fall from our eyes, we can see defilement and deformity, where formerly we could only see beauty and attraction. Oh yes, the life of God in the soul will work a complete revolution, a complete clearing of ourselves.

"Yea, what indignation." If we have been begotten of the Father, and of the Spirit, then will we gradually reassume the divine image, or likeness. We will again become "partakers of the divine nature," will grow up into Christ our head in all things. As God then hates sin, and looks upon it with a holy indignation, so will we hate it, and will commence a most vigorous crusade against it. We can not tolerate it, either in ourselves or in other, our whole being is filled with indignation against every species of iniquity, and wherever it rears its deformed front, there will we direct the artillery of God's word.

"Yea, what fear." Methinks I hear some one saying, here is a contradiction. John tells us that, "There is no fear in love, but love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love." 1 John 4: 18. And Paul makes fear one of the fruits of true conversion. In the text at the heading of our article we are told that "All Scripture is profitable for doctrine," etc. And it is only by taking the Scriptures as a whole that we can properly understand them. If we will turn to Luke 12: 4, 5, we may there learn who spake as never man spake, that there is something for us to fear, and something that we ought not to fear. The Savior says, "And I say unto you my friends, be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have nothing more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear. Fear him, which after he hath killed the body, hath power to cast into hell, I say unto you, fear him." And the wise man gives it as the consummation of all duties, the conclusion of the whole matter, to "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man." Eccl. 12: 13.

By nature we are in a perverted state, our thoughts, our passions, and desires all run in a wrong channel. It is the object of divine grace to recondnct the current of our hearts into their wanted channel again. To turn us from the path of error, and place us on the highway of truth. God commands saying, "That women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety; not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." 1 Tim. 2: 9. See also 1 Peter 3: 3, 4. The voice of fashion is just the reverse of the above admonition, and Oh, see the thousands and tens of thousands of our infatuated sex who heed this voice, while there is only now and then one, who, Mary-like, brings her box of precious ointment, her heart filled with richest gratitude, richest and purest love, and pour it all upon Jesus.

The goddess of fashion rolls in her gilded car, and behold the vast cloud of worshippers who fall prostrate before this tyrannical deity; beauty, health, virtue, ease, wealth, everything is sacrificed to her. No matter how absurd, or how unbecoming her demands, she must be obeyed; no matter if she bids her poor deluded votaries compress the chest until the whole internal viscers is distorted, and their functions deranged. No matter if she places a weight upon the head sufficient to over heat the brain and cause derangement of that organ. Still her poor victims will, in the most abject manner, prostrate themselves at her feet, and do her homage. Such are the rewards which the world gives for service, yet how many are there who fear her, and how many have the courage to resist her? though Christ says fear her not. And how few bow to the scepter of King Jesus, and who fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell, though his yoke is easy, and his burden is light? Strange infatuation! Wonderful delusion! Oh that the sons and daughters of men would learn to fear God, and not man! We not only see this state of things in dress, but in almost everything, man is feared rather than God. They worship and serve the creature more than the Creator.

Christ gave an imperative command to his servants to sheathe their swords, but the god of war comes along in his iron chariot, and sounds his clarion notes until they reverberate throughout the length and breadth of the land, and now behold the multitudes rush forth in defiance of the mandate of heaven, and bind themselves to that blood-stained chariot, while it rolls on crushing thousands and tens of thousands of human victims beneath its ponderous weight. Oh the blood-stained plains, the mangled corpses, the smouldering cities, the ruined and desolate fields, and the bereaved and aching hearts that are left after the insatiable demon of war has passed over!

Though the masses may be thus deceived, and persuaded to engage in anything, no matter how much at variance with God's will, yet we rejoice to know that there are and always has been a faithful few in whom the love of God has so far wrought its perfect work that it has cast out all fear of men, and implanted in its stead the fear of God. The fear of man, and the fear of God cannot exist together. The real converted person knows whom to fear, and he will have the fear of God constantly before his eyes. He would endure any insult from man, any temporal loss, or any bodily suffering rather than to offend God. Ah! he has learned to know something of the nature of God, the character of that holy being, therefore he will not, he dare not offend him. He knows the terrors of the Lord, and he stands in awe of him.

"Yea what vehement desire." Our Savior says, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." When once we have an earnest, an eager desire for something, we are apt to put forth every effort to obtain it. And this desire we are not apt to have unless we have some knowledge of the value of the object. Peter says, "If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. To whom coming as unto a living stone." This living stone, Pauls calls the "spiritual Rock." Having then tasted, or had some experience of the life-giving stream that gushes forth from this living Rock, we will have an eager desire for more, and we will, as Peter expressed it, be constantly coming to this Rock for new and fresh supplies of grace, that we also may become lively stones.

"Yea, what zeal." The great Alpha and Omega testified against the Laodiceans saying, "I know thy works that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Rev. 3: 15, 16. We do not know for certain what was the cause of the Laodicean Church being in her lukewarm condition; but as the language is addressed to the angel or bishop, we presume that a great portion of the blame rested on him.

Upon one occasion when the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, beheld his Father's house being desecrated, his indignation was aroused, and with whip in hand he drove forth the polluters. Then his disciples remembered what was written of him, that, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." But it was for the preservation of his Father's honor and glory that he exercised his authority. He did not say, I want it understood that I am displeased with this. No doubt it disgusted him to see those noisy merchants in these sacred courts, but while he was in the form of a servant, he sought not his own pleasure, his own will, or his own honor, but his Father's. Had it only grieved him, he would have said nothing, but when his Father's cause was suffering, he could not hold his peace. So with his faithful servants, those who are appointed by him as under shepherds to take the oversight of the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers. Oh what a burning zeal they have for their Master's honor. It is his cause that engrosses their whole attention. Like Paul, that faithful servant, they are zealous over their charge, that precious charge that has been purchased with the blood of Christ, with a godly jealousy that they may present their charge to Christ as a chaste virgin. Like Paul, the noblest of men, they become a servant unto all that they might gain the more. He was made all things to all men. To the weak he became as weak, that he might gain the weak. He did not contend for his own way and try to force all to bend their wills to his. He did not take a firm unyielding stand, and then say it thus must be and no other way. He did not sternly try to force those over whom God had given him the oversight. No, no, he would not lord it over God's heritage, but would be an ensample to the flock. He knew that he could better lead than drive. If he desired obedience in them, he would set them an example of obedience. He could say to them, follow me so far as I follow Christ. He did not want them to follow him any further, he wanted them to watch him, he did not think he knew more than any one else, and did not become restive under correction, he knew that would not be a proper example for his flock to follow. If he would govern, he must also know how to be governed. He suited himself to the capacities or prejudices of his charge, and what would he not have suffered to keep his flock together? He would not drive a weak and feeble one away by harsh treatment. He knew the price his Master had paid for them, and O his great love for that dear Master, his fidelity would not permit him to neglect the noble trust that he had confided to him. Oh that all those who have the oversight of the church of God would imitate the noble minded Paul and like him, be filled with, yea, but a zeal that is according to knowledge.

"What revenge." Paul advised his Roman brethren saying, "Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for," said he, "it is written, vengeance is mine: I will repay, saith the Lord." Rom. 12: 19. But here in his letter to the Corinthians, he gives vengeance as a consequence of a godly sorrow. It must then depend on the object against which we would be revenged, which makes it lawful, or unlawful for us to exercise this passion, and as our Savior has commanded us to love all mankind, even our enemies, to bless them that curse us, do good to them that hate us, and pray for them which despitefully use us, and persecute us, it is certain that it is not lawful for us to be revenged upon our fellow creatures. There is however one object against which it is not only lawful, but right for us to be revenged, and that object is SIN. Of the world's Redeemer John says, "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." John 3: 17. Paul tells us that "God sent his own Son into the world, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, to condemn sin in the flesh." Rom. 8: 3. He came not to condemn the world, but sin. He came right in the stronghold of sin, in the very castle where it had long reigned supreme. Never before had one in the form of sinful flesh been able to condemn this tyrant. Perhaps Moses, that meekest of men, came the nearest to it; but in an unguarded moment an arrow from the enemies' quiver pierced the joints of bis harness and the strong man fell.

But bow did Christ condemn sio in the flesh? By vindicating the law of God. Isaiah prophesied of Christ saying, „The Lord is well pleased for bis righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make it honorable." Isaiah 42: 21. But how will he magnify the law? By rendering unto it a perfect obedience. Then said he, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." And this is the only way that we may magnify the law of God, by yielding unto it a complete submission, and the more the law of God is magnified, the more we will get sin under our feet, yea, the more will we be revenged upon it. The Savior says, "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do, and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5: 19. Oh yes! to DO, and TEACH the commandments of God will make us great in his sight. Let us then be valiant soldiers for our Lord, let us fight bravely under his glorious banner. Let us give sin no quarter, but pursue it with a constant, unrelenting fury.

Having dwelt at some length upon the consequence of a godly sorrow, or rather the workings of grace upon a heart that is undergoing the transforming process, we will now try to notice the bliss that is in reservation for us after the work is completed. Paul quotes Isaiah as saying, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." "But" says he, "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." John tells us that, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Though it is not fully revealed to us what we shall be, yet we know that we shall be like Christ. Surely this is enough for us to know! To be like the Son of God, O what a consummation of bliss! Again the Apostle tells us that we are now, "Heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," then says he, "If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Would we not then gladly share his sufferings, if we can but share his glory." With the Apostle we may well "Reckon that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." But we must ever remember that we are wholly indebted to Christ for all this glory. No flesh shall glory in the presence of God, but Christ is made of God, unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, and it is Christ who will present us faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy; robed in the garments of his righteousness. Yes, we must become holy as Christ is holy, be perfect as God is perfect, but it is only Christ that can make us so. Our perfection must be rooted and grounded in Christ. It never again can rest upon a human basis, but upon that rock which is Christ, that rock, upon which, if we are built, no storms of temptation, no floods of persecution, can undermine us.

GRAVEYARD MUSINGS.

Feeling a desire this beautiful Sabbath eve, to visit the "home of the dead," we have retired to this secluded spot, apart from the gaze of all save He who notices even the little sparrows that fall to the ground, and whose fatherly care is continually exercised toward His erring children. And where can we find a more suitable place to meditate than the graveyard, where lie entombed our departfriends and relatives? Truly solemn thoughts should pervade the mind when beholding the tombs around us. We think of the time when they were with us enjoying the blessings which are common to us all, but now they are lying beneath the turf of the valley—their destiny is forever sealed. Some have been long at rest, as the green verdure has fully covered their narrow bed, while others have lately been consigned to the tomb with the freshly turned sod over them.

Ah! death thou art truly no respecter of persons, but dost visit alike the rich and poor, the great and small. At thy command all must bow, notwithstanding the many attractions here, they must be resigned at thy call. Many homes thou dost sadden, and many hearts thou dost pierce by thy stern decree, and yet thou dost still contine to wound and remove from us our loved ones. And why is it? Why death is the penalty for sin, and sin is a transgression of law. If there had been no sin death would not have existed, but since all have sinned and come short of the glory of God, death has passed upon all men. There is something connected with death that we seem to fear, some gloom seems to hover around the tomb, and yet why should there be since Jesus has died? Why should we look into the tomb with a feeling of terror since Jesus hath lain there? Surely his sacred body shed a sweet influence over it and hallowed its narrow confines.

To the christian, the thought of death should not be one of terror—no dark forebodings should cross the mind. The joyful thought that Jesus has first passed through this solemn ordeal should illuminate and cheer the heart, and that He hallowed the grave, should cause us to love to linger there. But the sinner, those who cannot look up with implicit confidence and say "My Lord, and my God," no wonder that the thought of death should fill the soul with horror. Death to such, is not a welcome message, because they have failed to prepare for its coming. Life is the time to prepare for this great change—the solemn reality of death, and if this preparation is neglected on the part of the creature, when death comes, and it will sooner or later, anguish and remorse will fill the soul, with no ray of hope to cheer the dark gloomy mind when going down the dark valley.

Thoughts of death should often occupy the mind, as they tend to eradicate worldly themes.— The Bible teaches us that "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting," and so are thoughts of death and of our mortality more profitable for the mind to dwell upon than the giddy and fast-decaying pleasures of this life. It is better to go to the house of mourning (or the house of death) because we are there reminded of our frailty—thoughts of our dissolution are presented to the mind in unmistakable language, and we cannot fail to learn a lesson that will benefit us through life. While to the house of feasting (or house of mirth,) prevails the spirit of levity, and everything of a serious nature is dissipated by the sinful pleasures that generally characterize such occasions, and therefore fail to instruct and benefit the mind.

This Sabbath evening the little birds are singing around the graves, the flowers that have been placed here by kind relatives and friends are emitting their fragrance, and the sun is shedding her last lingering rays upon them before setting in the western horizon, exhibiting a scene of loveliness and beauty not often surpassed. How calm and serene the precincts of the graveyard. A holy stillness seems to pervade the sacred enclosure, and cold and indifferent must be the heart that does not feel some emotion while lingering around this solemn place. The shadows of evening are gathering and soon night with her sable shadows will surround us, but he who is everywhere present will watch over these graves during the shades of night. When all animated nature sleeps, He causes the stars to shine upon them.

But we must return to our home, feeling conscious that we have spent a profitable hour in meditation among the tombs, and not knowing how soon we may be summoned here to consign some fellow mortal to the grave, therefore while in the bloom of youth and health let us prepare for death, so that when we are called to leave this world we can meet the Lord in peace.

CRITICS.

The world is full of critics in all department of literature we have them—the most profound researches of scientific men are held up and commented upon by this class of judges. In theology we have them something as numerous as the locusts were in Egypt. Even in our own organization we have them. They sit in judgment as to the fitness or unfitness of this or that measure—this or that brother's or sister's peculiar notions of humility, or manner of deportment in the service of Christ. The ministers gestures, discourses, conduct, business and almost anything connected with him either public or private is made a matter for the critics court of inquiry and judgment expressed either in public or privats. Our periodicals are brought to the bar of the critics court; what is profitable and what is not profitable to publish is commented upon: of course their judgment and decision it is expected will set at naught the judgment of the editors and publishers. Some severely condemn individual correspondence notwithstanding the advise or matter may be of interest to many others who use the critics pen on notes of travel or church news especially if incidents by the way are mentioned, names given &c., &c. What a pity some of those judges were not living in the days of Paul and other apostles so as to instruct them not to have told where they stopped, how long they tarried where and how certain of the brethren met there, how they built up a fire, a snake appeared and was shook into the fire and all such little matters. Oh yes according to the fine judgment of modern critics these matters should have been left out of this letter. But we are satisfied with their epistles of interest and love and so we are of the brethrens. Correspondence and notes of travel are about the first read by more than us. We are willing that the publishers shall judge of the fitness of the matter for their paper. Should I indite anything for their paper not in their judgment advisible to publish, they will confer a favor on me by putting it in the waste basket.

Criticism at times may be all right, but let it be done in meekness and love esteeming others better than ourselves and judge not lest we be judged. The spirit of critisim may grow by cultivation so that we will be led captive at satan's will and in anything not be content to digest the good meat, but go to work and stir it up to see if you can find a bone in it to cavil over and give vent to our wisdom. In the scriptures, in our periodicals, and in the preaching of our brethren, let us be content as long as there is abundance of wholesome food to digest and keep us growing and let the bones go to those that love to whine and snarl and then when they got satisfied they will cease through hunger, while wise men in their fatness and their fullness laugh at their folly.

CLEAN WORSHIP.

There is an incident told in Genesis concerning Jacob and his family when they were a little band sojourning in the land of Canaan. The Lord had commanded Jacob to go up to Bethel and dwell there, and build an altar and worship his God. It was there he had seen the way from earth to heaven, appearing as a ladder, or pathway, on which the angels of God were ascending and decending. It it seemed the gate of heaven.

But some preparation was needed. It appears that Jacob's household had fallen into some of the alluring fashions and idolatries of the uncircumcised people round about them. They had among them other gods beside the eternal Jehovah. But Jacob said: "Put away the strange gods that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments." So they gave up "the strange gods which were in their hands, and all their earrings which were in their ears."

Away back in that dim dawning of the true light, Israel instinctively felt the monstrous incongruity, the strange unfitness of appearing before the Lord, tricked out the trappings and decked in the ornaments, and secretly holding fast to the strange gods of the careless, idolatrous, unclean nations among whom they dwelt.

But are there no strange gods and unseemly ornaments among us now?

Is there no covetousness, which is idolatry? Is there no secret trusting to "societies" and "companies" for help in time of need? Is these no giving way to pleasant habits of needless self-indulgence? Is there no putting on of gold, or going after costly, showy modes of outward adorning so dearly loved by the careless populace, whose unrenewed hearts have not yet fully learned Christ.

Surely it becomes us, who live in the full light of Christ's glorious revelation, to put away all these, and be clean, "worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." Then the Christ of God shall meet with us of a truth, he will set the seal of his love upon our hearts, and his Holy Spirit shall "lead us into all truth."—Selected.

Cheerfulness an excellent wearing quality. It has been called the bright weather of the heart. It gives harmony to the soul, and is a perpetual song without words. It is a tantamount to repose. It enables nature to recruit its strength: whereas worry and discontent debilitate it, involving constant wear and tear.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

☞ Every subscriber for 1874, gets a Pilgrim Almanac Free.

PLEASE NOTICE.

In sending for keys to names of speakers in our Report it would be an advantage to us and those wishing them if a number could be sent together. Let some one in each congregation, where they are wanted, ascertain who wish them, and then order the whole lot together. By ten sending seperately the paper, envelopes, and stamps would cost 50 cents. By one sending for the whole lot would save 45 cents plus 30 cents=75 cents on 10 copies.

Corrections Wanted.

We have now sent out some of our keys to the names of the speakers, and as there are a few names in it which we believe to be incorrect we kindly ask those who know them to be so, ot inform us immediately, and also give us the proper name or names and we will gladly make the corrections.

N. B. As the Report is exactly alike in the Pilgrim and Companion, where both papers are taken in the neighborhood, the key will answer for both papers by supplying the figures in the Companion as they stand in the Pilgrim. The key is so arranged that it can be bound in with the volume.

Information Wanted.

The following was sent to us sometime ago and by some means got into our manuscript box where it was neglected. We now insert it, hoping that it may still be in time:

The friends of Peggy Adolph, who reside in Indiana, are anxious to learn from her. When last heard from, she was in Missouri, but lately the word came, in an indirect way, that she was dead, and as we do not know her address, we take this method of making inquiry. Any person acquainted with the facts of the case will confer a favor by addressing Samuel Hosler, Magenica, Huntington Co., Ind., or by giving a notice in the Pilgrim.
By request. A. H. Snowberger.

A GOOD OFFER.

In the Companion No. 28, we notice the following liberal offer which strikes us as being complimentary to the Church. It shows that our people are known to be quiet, honest and enterprising, and are known to make good citizens and neighbors. The gentleman however may be a shrewd financier and prompted by sinister motives, but as charity thinketh no evil, we will give it the best possible construction and suppose it to be done in good faith, and hope some of our ministers who are Nebraska inclined will take advantage of the offer, and thus plant a Church which will do honor to that confidence that the gentleman places in the Brethren. The offer is as follows:

"To all whom it may concern:

I, John Crothers, hereby say I will make a good warrantee deed for forty acres of land, according to the government survey, out of the north-east quarter of section 22, out of the north-east quarter section 21, out of the north-east quarter section of 32, tier 3, range 7, in Gage Co., Nebraska, which a person may choose, who comes recommended as a good, honest man and a preacher of the German Baptist Church, or what is known as the Dunkard Church, and who will agree to settle on and occupy the land within three months from the time the selection is made; provided such a person comes on this summer and selects such land and agrees to settle and live on the same in three months time.

John P. Crothers."

ANONYMOUS ARTICLES.

Sister Rosie Snowberger after ordering a key to the report of A. M., says: "As you insert so many anonymous articles in your paper, I would suggest that you furnish your readers with a similar key at the close of the volume."

If we thought the desire was as great on the part of our readers, to learn the names of our anonymous contributors as it is to know who done the speaking at our late conference we would certainly take advantages of the suggestion. We take the hint Sister Rosie and heartily agree with you in slightly tapping our anonymous writers. As a rule, we are cautious in admitting papers of this kind and in no case admit any that we have reason to believe that there is anything malicious or personal intended. Modesty is the general plea while a few think their productions will accomplish more good if the name is withheld. The withholding of names is of doubtful propriety and as a rule we do not approve of it, but as long as we must have anonymous speeches we cannot forbid it if we must resort to publishing keys. It is truely surprising how exceedingly modest some of our brethren are getting to be. We are necessitated to be responsible for all we say, and think it not more than fair that all others should be the same. Those who say and write that which is good let it be to their credit, but if there are any so full of the gall of bitterness that they cannot say or think that which is good let it be to their shame, or still better, let them say nothing at all.

DOCTRINAL.

Some of our readers are calling for more doctrine. This week we lead with a lengthy paper on "Christian Perfection" by sister Mattie A. Lear. The paper is rather long for our columns, but as we do not approve of disjointing things which should be left together, we will give it entire if we can afford the space. In it will be found some nice points of doctrine. Some sharp points and ideas to which it would be well for us to give heed. We ask for it a careful and prayerful reading believing that it is the production of one who has endeared herself to the sacred and holy cause of our blessed Redeemer. For next week we have in readiness another lengthy paper on the "Commission" or rather the "Opening of the Gospel Dispensation" by Eld. D. P. Sayler. This paper is of an unusual length but we expect to make room for the whole of it, beleiving that it will render better satisfaction to our readers than if given in parts. We have also on hands a number of other interesting papers from our other esteemed contributors but as they are not so lengthy as these we will be necessitated to use such of them as will fill our remaing space therefore cannot tell which will be used. We have no partial feelings toward any of our contributors, all are alike welcome to our columns and hope there shall be no lagging of interest in the cause of any. We heartily invite all who have the ability and will to write for us. The heavens are studded with its millions of stars greatly differing in glory and brilliancy yet they are all needed to complete the great planitary syatem. So we have in the church a great variety of talents, but the talent of every brother and sister is needed to complete that spiritual building of which Christ is the chief corner stone. He has a place for every one of you and one too that none other can fill—a work for you to accomplish that none other can. Hide not the talents the Lord hath given. You put your shoulder to the wheel and help us fight the Lords battle.

SEND YOUR MESSAGE.

During the Rebellion the great army was divided into divisions and regiments, and these were stationed, at such points throughout the states, as the safety and welfare of the country demanded. From all the points there were daily reports made and sent to the press and thus heralded throughout the loyal states. These reports were sought after and read with an interest never before known by the American people. Successes were sent fourth with joy and were as gladly received by an expectant and loyal people, but when reverses came there was a gloom hanging over the land and the people mourned. This was because their interests were at stake. For us, a free people, to be deprived of our national liberties, would seem a great calamity indeed, and we certainly cannot wonder at the great anxiety manifested in getting the reports from the different armies. If then we are so concerned in regard to our earthly liberties which at longest can afford us enjoyment for a short time only, how much more should we feel concerned about our spiritual liberties which are to be eternal. For these liberties we are now contending, or at least should be. The hosts of satan are waging war against the Church of Christ. There is a terrible rebellion raging, one in which our most sacred interests are at stake. The soldiers of Jesus have enlisted and are now in battle array at their different stations throughout the land. Our enemy is a mighty one, fully versed in the equipments of war and every inch of ground is hotly contested. Upon the issues depend our eternal weal or woe. Are we not concerned, are we not anxious to hear from the different stations of the Lord's army? Can we be and remain indifferent to a contest in which our most sacred interests are at stake? We know that some are not—that many are not, then let us hear from the Lord's army, let us have your reports. When you are successful in persuading sinners to come to Christ you have gained a victory. Every convert is a prisoner gained from the camp of satan. The victory is so great that even the angels of heaven are made to rejoice, and should not we? Can we not manifest a little more of the spirit of Christ when he sent the message to John the Baptist while in prison? "Go and tell him that the lame walk, the blind see, and to the poor the gospel is preached." Brethren and sisters are there no lame being made to walk, no blind being made to see, and is there no Gospel being preached to the poor? If there is, send the message. There are thousands of imprisoned Johns who are anxiously waiting for just such information. Satan may imprison the body of the soldier of Jesus as was the Baptist but the soul is free. That ever yearning interest in the great cause of salvation cannot be destroyed. Though we may be isolated from the body of the army and cannot give our bodily aid in the conflict, our zeal and interest is the same. The universal yearnings of such especially is, let us have a message from the Lord's army. If a victory, let us rejoice, if a reverse, let us mourn and pray.

But it is not only the isolated and decrepit that desire and need reports from the different points when the conflict is raging, but the active soldier needs it. In worldly battles, a victory at one point infuses new life and courage into the remainder of the army and the more victories there are reported, the more bravely will they fight. Just so it is with the church. Some congregations may seem unfortunately located. They have labored, preached, and prayed, for years without gaining a single convert, they have done even worse, they have lost some and are almost ready to despair. Just then a message is sent that at other points sinners are converted to God. The news infuses new life in the despouding church and they go forth to meet the enemy with renewed courage and often gain great victories. Then brethren and sisters, let us have reports from every part of the brotherhood and we will gladly carry the message forth to all who are anxious to learn of the welfare of Zion.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

A Little Sharp Fellow.

There's a bright little fellow, dressed in a suit of brown, that lives in your desk, and since you're getting so very learned, of course you want to know about him.

When I was young I used to make them for myself, but it takes—oh, dozens of men and women and boys and girls to make one for you.

Mine were made of quills from the stately goose, but the material for yours is dug from the dark holes of earth. I must admit, though, that yours are much better than mine were—as cheap, and a thousand times less troublesome.

You've guessed before now, havn't you, that I mean your steel pen? I wish you could go to Gillott's manufactory and see how bars of steel are cut and rolled and stamped and polished into dainty pens. But you have to go to England to do that, and I don't believe you can, just yet. So I'll tell you about it.

The steel comes from the Sheffield iron-works, and the first operation in the pen factory is to cut it into strips a yard long and four inches wide.

You don't see how they can cut the steel. Well, they couldn't cut it if they had only the strength of men; but they use the same useful servant that carries our messages, draws our railroad-cars, warms our houses, and makes nearly everything we use—steam. With the help of steam power it is as easy to cut steel as for you to cut an apple; and not only to cut it into strips but to roll it out thin enough for pens.

And this isn't all steam does. It makes all the rollers and stamps and presses and grind stones and chisels that I am going to tell you about.

To go back to our pens. When the steel is rolled thin enough, the pens are cut out just as you've seen cooks cut biscuit, only the girl who uses the cutter holds the sheet of steel, and the cutter goes by steam. The cutter is made of hard steel, and works all the time up and down like a stamp. The girl moves the steel around, and every time the stamp comes down it bites out a pen, or the outside shape of a pen.

As it is cut it falls into a box, and from that goes to another girl at another stamping machine. One by one the girl puts the flat bits of steel under the stamp which comes down and cuts the hole at the top of the split—or where the split will be. Then thousands of them together go into a muffle.

That has a mysterious sound, and somehow suggests smothering, but it really is merely an innocent earthen box, which goes into a furnace for the purpose of annealing the pens. I needn't tell you again that annealing is only softening.

When they are cool they go to another girl, with another stamp, and this, coming down in its irresistible way, prints in the maker's name.

Have you a pen you can look at? Let me see—I have one. The stamp says "Joseph Gillott,s Pen," and there's a swan and the number 332 on it. Perhaps your pen, if you find one, is number 303, as that is a favorite school pen.

When the name is on they are ready to be rounded up; for till now, you know, they have been only flat pieces of steel. Another girl, with another stamp, presses them into their half-round shape in an instant, and then they are hardened again.

Do you know how they harden steel? I told you how they soften it. Well, it seemes rather odd, but they go to work in exactly the same way that they do to soften it: they heat the pens again, in another muffle, red hot. But instead of letting them cool slowly, as they do to soften them, the workman plunge the hot pens into oil. A greasy bath, it's true; but it cools them suddenly, and makes them hard yet elastic, so they will bend as you write. They're dreadfully sticky and unpleasant to handle, however; so thousands of them are put into a tin barrel (did you ever hear of a tin barrel?) and shaken violently for a long time by the same steam-power that drives the stamps.

All this snapping of stamps and rattling of tin barrels full of pens make a horrid noise, I can tell you. You need to leave your nerves at home when you go to a steel-pen factory—that is if you have any nerves.

The mad dance of the pens is not yet over. They come out of a barrel into a box with sand and other scouring things, and there they have another horriole shaking.

This leaves them clean and bright and ready for another lot of girls. The first one takes a pen in a pair of plies, holds it an instant to the emery-wheel—which does nothing but fly around all day—that grinds off the point.

The next girl takes it, lays it in a groove made exactly to fit it, and down comes a sharp chisel that cuts the split in a second. That's the last stamp and the last cut for the little pen.

Now it must be colored. Perhaps you don't know your pens are colored, but if you look at one you'll see it isn't the color of your knife-blade. It is blue or brown, and it got its color not in a dye tub, but by being heated in a metal box over a charcoal fire.

The workmen—not a girl this time—watches them very carfully, and when they are exactly right snatches them off. They now have their color, but they must have a luster. a "shine," before they're nice enough to live in your desk. For this they go into a bath of some liquids, and are dried again before being shut up in little boxes, I don't know how many dozens together. You've seen them many a time.

There are some funny pens in Gillott's show room, some so large as to need both hands to hold one, and others so small you need a miscroscope to see the split—regular fairie's pens. Why a gross of them will go into a nut shell—not a cocoa-nut either, but a Barcelona nut shell.

The first steel pens sold for one dollar apiece; now you can buy them at the factory for one cent a gross!

Don't tell me you don't know that a gross is twelve dozen!

I want to tell you something very wonderful that the iron and steel workers have done of late. It is almost too wonderful to be true.

They have with their immence rollers, made iron into sheets thinner than the thinest tissue paper you ever saw—of which sheets it would take forty-eight hundred in a pile to be an inch thick. Why, two hundred and forty sheets of ordinary note paper make an inch. Think of taking twenty of the marvelous iron sheets to be as thick as one of paper!

And this wonderful paper, as it is called, can be written on and sent as a letter.

I must tell you the story of the iron cob-web.

To the World's Fair in 1851, an American in Pittsburg sent a sheet of iron paper a good deal thinner than letter paper, but not so thin as tissue. The English iron-roller did not like to be outdone by an American of course, so they set their wits and their rollers to work to beat this. Gillott, the steel pen man rolled one very thin. It took eighteen hundred to make an inch,—but another English factory—a tin factory—made the very thin one I told you of.

So far as the contest English is a head. Whether that Pittsburg man will allow himself to be beaten by an English workman we shall see. I shouldn't wonder if he was rolling away now night and day to beat that Englishman. Should you?—Morning Star.

COCOLUMAS, PA., July 10th, 1871.

Dear Editors:—

The Scriptures teach us that wherever our treasures are there will our hearts be. The Lord's warning to all is "be ye ready," or "I say unto you (His disciples), I say unto all, be be ye ready."

We understand our Lord to say what I now say to you, my present disciples, I say to all generations, in all after ages, be yo always ready for death and the judgement. For where our treasure is there will our heart be. If we are engaged in celebrating the fourth of July, if our mind is drawn off by the merry amusements of the day their our heart will be. All vain amusements and gains will be our treasure, and we will be unprepared for sudden death. The fourth of July is just past, and as a result we hear of many sudden deaths. We have just heard of a number of young men who were engaged in a game of ball, and seeing a storm coming, took shelter in a bridge, the bridge was blown down off the piers into the river and the boys went with it, where some of them met death without a moment's warning, no doubt, unprepared for the sudden change, having their minds on the merry amusements of the day. The Bible tells us to "lay up our treasure in Heaven, where moth doth not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal." Oh, what a contrast we often behold, and must exclaim, where are such? The Bible tells us, "their works do follow them."

We have with many brethren, sisters and weeping friends, followed an aged brother, minister of the Gospel and bishop to his last resting place for the body in this world. Our old brother was engaged in making and putting away hay all day until supper time when he ate a hearty supper, and lying down to rest he quoted some words in a german hymn book asking his companion if she she could find the hymn. She said she could. He then read the hymn. The words had reference to Christians being known by their fruits or walk in this world, or the influence the Christian would have on the world, and making some few remarks on a Christian's life, he laid down again and fell asleep in Jesus, without any change of countenance, being void of all feare. No doubt his Great Master said, "It is enough, come to rest, thy arduous work is done, thy treasure is laid up in heaven. And now my dear brethren and sisters, will our brother's labors amongst us be stars in his crown of rejoicing? We will hear him preach no more. We will see him take his seat at the head of the table no more. We will hear him entreat us with tears no more. We will hear him tell us that we must be born again, no more. But if we have our treasure laid up in heaven, we soon will meet our old ministers and brethren and sisters on those shining shores where parting will be no more, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death will be feared and felt no more. We will be with Jesus and wear that spotless or bright white robe. There we shall walk the golden streets which is glory that "eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither can man conceive the glory which God has prepared for those that love him." But my unconverted friends, the grave that could not keep our Lord cannot keep us. Our faithful ministers who wept with us and who warned us of a judgment, will again come in judgment with our Lord, not weeping, but in great glory with Christ, and will assent with Christ in condemning us if we are not found faithful. O, could we but persuade the careless world to study their best interests and that they soon shall lose all this carnal mirth which will leave but a sting behind. You now strive to laugh away sortow, sing away cares and drive away melancholy thoughts. I ask you to think of that doleful life where you shall have nothing but sorrow, intense, piercing, multiplied sorrow. Do any think that there is one merry heart, one joyful countenance, or one jesting tongue in hell. Oh no! No jesting in those pains where the continued craving is for but one drop of water, and that for one of the least members of the body, the tongue. But the greatest aggravation of these torments will be their eternity. When a thousand ages have rolled around they are as first to begin, as the first day. If there were any hopes of an end it would ease the torments of the damned to foresee it, but forever is an intolerable thought. Let us be zealous in our endeavors for heaven, for consider, God is in earnest with us, and why should not we be so with him. Christ was serious in purchasing our redemption. In teaching he neglected his meat and drink, in prayer he continued all night. He was tempted, betrayed, spit upon, baffetted, crowned with thorns, sweat drops of blood, was crucifi ed, pierced and died; and should not we be serious in seeking o r own salvation? Let us for a moment view this world. It is a land of darkness, of disappointment, of trouble and of sorrow. Yonder is the region of light. Yonder twinkling stars, that shining moon and radient sun are all but light-houses set up to light us through this dark worl l to our Father's house.

May we at last meet in our Fathers house is my prayer. J. L. BEERS.

CHANDLERSVILLE, ILL.

Dear Brethren:—

I wish you to send me the PILGRIM. I have been reading it for the last year and feel as if I could not do without it. I was born in Virginia, in Shenandoah county, near New Market. My father moved to Botetourt county, near Salem. I was raised a Lutheran and was sprinkled when a child, so I was told—no faith there. My father was zealous in his faith and read the Scriptures to us, often telling us how we should live and conduct ourselves through life. Though I done many wicked things yet I never swore an oath in my life I was raised amongst the Brethren and always loved them. I done considerable business with them and always found them honest. I am now trying to walk in their footsteps, as they did fifty years ago, but I am afraid that many of the brethren have gone too far after the riches of the world, they do not seem to have that charity amongst them that they had when I was a boy.

I came to Illinois in 1848 to see the country, and my dear father died while I was here. I am told that brother B. F. Moomaw preached his funeral. I love to see his name in the PILGRIM. May he long live to enjoy the blessings of this life and accomplish much good in saving souls. I knew him when I was a boy as we lived only seven miles apart.

In 1851 I married, after which I thought it was high time to begin to serve the Lord. There were none of the Brethren living near us, so that we then joined the Methodist Church and tried to live faithful, but my wife who was raised an Old Baptist, said we must keep the commandments. I told her I would ask our minister about it. I asked him and he told me those things were for the apostles to do and not for us. So I went on for some time but my wife was not satisfied with such an explanation. She said "if they were not for us, why have them in the Scriptures, or the plan of Salvation."

Things went on in this way until the commencement of the war when our ministers, the ministers of peace and good will towards men, began to call for volunteers to go and fight, the very thing our blessed Savior says we shall not do, then it was that I saw where I stood. I well knew that a christian would not fight, could not go go and destroy their brethren in the flesh, as well as in church communion, for whom Jesus suffered and died to save. After I discovered the spirit of the church I left it Not long afterward this brother, Rufus Gish from Woodford county, came among us. In my boyhood we were well acquainted and were raised together. He preached for us a few times when my dear companion asked me if she might join the Brethren. I assented, when she asked me if I would not go with her. I told her that I had been sprinkled and that would do me, but condemnation seized upon me as I never had faith in a baptism of which I knew nothing about, and while she was getting her clothes ready for baptism I told her to take mine along too. We went two miles to Little Panther Creek, and there was buried with Christ in holy baptism by brother Gish. May the good Lord bless him in his good work.

While my father was on his bed of affliction, brother Gish often visited him, and he told him that if he had his time to live over again he would be with the Brethren. Although he was not a visible member of the Church he had the faith and died, I am told with a smile on his face. His last words were, "Come Jesus, come quickly." I hope to meet him with all the sainted dead, in our Father's Kingdom.

Yours truly,

ALLEN S. ROBISON.

Dear Pilgrim: —

The truth is mighty and it will prevail in the end. Justice, mercy and humility are elements of truth and so are honesty, firmness and consistency. Truth is composed of many elements as there are distinct ideas in the Bible. For instance, "They be blind leaders of the blind," is, one element of truth to all that have a distinct understanding of it. But this elementary knowledge is only a help or means to the end which is to understand who are and who are not "blind leaders of the blind." Any one who looks thoughtfully and carefully on the ground lying ahead of those who make assertions which they are both unwilling and unable to prove, can distinctly see the ditch into which they and those whom they lead will fall. This truth is properly applicable to the things that are said at and about our Annual Meetings as well as to those who say them. When a blind brother stretches out his hands desiring every body to be led by him, then those who are blind will follow him because they do not see that he is blind. J. B. GARVER.

INTEMPERANCE.

Mr. Editor.—

As it is not often that you hear from me, I will write a few lines on the curse of drink. The appetite for strong drink in man has spoiled the life of more women, ruined more hopes for them scattered more fortunes for them, brought them to more sorrow, shame and hardship than any other evil that exists. The country numbers ten, nay, hundreds of thousands of women who are widows to-day and sit in hopeless need because their husbands have been slain by strong drink. There are hundreds of thousands of homes scattered over the land in which woman live lives of torture, going through all changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair because they whom they love loves wine better than the women they have sworn to love. There are women by thousands who dread to hear, at the door, the step that once filled them with pleasure because that step has learned to reel under the influence of the seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain while we write these words, from bruises and brutalities inflicted by husbands mad by drink. There can be no exaggeration in any statement in regard to this matter because no human imagination can create anything worse than the truth. The sorrows and horrors of a wife with a drunken husband are as near the realization of hell as can be reached in this world at least. The shame, the indignation, the sorrow and the sense of disgrace for herself and her children, the poverty and not unfrequently the beggary, the fear and the fact of violence, the lingering life-long struggle of countless women with drunken husbands are enough to make all women curse, wine and engage unitedly to oppose it everywhere as the worst enemy of their sex.

A Strange Query.

A Brother in PILGRIM No. 27, page 214, requests that some brother give light on the 19th and 20th verses of the 3rd chapter of 1st Peter, and asks the question, whether Christ preached to the spirit in prison himself or whether it was done by Noah before the flood. The brother might, with equal propriety, ask whether it was Christ himself, if that suffered for sins, and was put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the spirit, or whether it was Noah. If the light which the inspired Apostles gives us is not satisfactory, I cannot see who else could give us light on the subject There is no evidence, nor even a hint, in the Bible, that Noah ever preached to the spirits in prison; but Peter says that Christ did. Then why apply to fallible men for light on a subject which is so plainly written by the inspired penman.

Dear Pilgrim :—

I have been requested to announce through your columns, that the Pipe Creek Church Md., have secured a place in the city of Baltimore wherein to worship, on the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Cook street, at LaFayette market, where they meet every Sunday morning and night. Preaching every two weeks. Those living there wish the ministering brethren to give them meeting as often as convenient, and to inform them of their coming a week before hand, by addressing Jacob Myers, No. 720 Pennsylvania Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

J. D. TROSTLE.

QUERIES.

Will some of the brethren give us an explanation on the sixth chapter of Matthew from 24th verse to the end of the chapter, and also Acts second chapter 41st and 47th verses inclusive?

Brethren there are several friends who with myself would like to have explanations on the above Scripture. Submitted in love.

C. M. ARMBRUST.

Letters from the Orient.

Madras: The Public Grounds: The People's Park: Botanical and Zoological Garden: The Natives and Their Part of the Town: The Cemetery: Cremation and Burial.

The public grounds of the city are very large. There are several hundred acres over which a vast herd of cattle roam at large, and they are the poorest specimens of living animals that were ever seen. There has been no rain for several months, and every green thing has become withered and dry like hay, and the great number of cattle roaming at large have consumed all the grass, and they seem ready to perish. We see all kinds of cattle—the large ugly looking buffalo, but they are strong and useful; and the little nimble thing, with a hump on its back, so often called the sacred cattle of India. These vast grounds are a common, and afford pasturage to several hundred cattle, and during the rainy season there is feed enough for all.

In addition to the public grounds there is a park called "the People's park," which contains several hundred acres of land, with very extensive and fine drives, where the English as well as the natives drive in the cool of the day. This park is enclosed with an iron fence, with gates continually guarded by natives to keep the cattle away.

A portion of the park is used for a Botanical Garden, with a very great variety of trees and shrubs. Samples of all the gum trees of Australia are here, and the varieties seem almost endless. A part of this park is also used as a Zoological Garden, and it is said contains the finest collection of animals and birds, of snakes and serpents, of any in the whole world. The collection of tigers, lions and monkeys surpassed any that we have ever seen before. Some of the varieties of the monkeys are said to be as fierce and ferocious as the tiger or lion. The snakes were not active. The thermometer reached about 80°, and that is too cool for them, and they are almost torpid. When mercury runs up to 100° or 120° the snakes seem to enjoy it. In the heat of Summer they are active and can be seen almost everywhere. They sometimes hide under the door mat, and when you step on it they squirm, and you are inclined to get off in haste. They sleep in the garden paths, and sometime glide into your bed room. Most of these hold intruders have poisonous fangs, and you do not wish to get near them.

I asked one of the natives how many acres the people's park contained. His answer was: "It is very large it has plenty of acres." I asked the English Superintendent how large it was. He replied that he did not know. I asked him whether he could not tell me whether there were a thousand acres. He made the same answer. It is manifest, even to a casual observer, that there is a languor like the pall of death resting upon the white man who has been long in this heated climate, and it requires an effort to shake it off.

The natives do not suffer from the long continued heat. They are the children of the sun, and love the heat, and would perish in the cold. They go bareheaded, often with shaved head, in the burning sun, and they never have sunstroke. They lie down in the sun and sleep, while every one else seeks the shade. They eat only light food, work but little, but sleep often and long. They are thin and lean and of small stature. After looking over the native part of the city, we no longer wonder that the cholera swept off so many of these poor people. We have looked into hundreds of the houses and shops. They are small and dirty, and excessively crowded. The streets are narrow and now are all filth and dust. There is not a square foot of vacant land. No front or rear yard to the house. They throw all the garbage out in front of their houses—not on the sidewalks, for there are none, but into the narrow dirty passage between the dwellings. These narrow streets are filled with bullocks, cows, horses, goats and dogs, all are so lean and lank that they can hardly walk, but all seeking for a mouthful to eat. The drains from the houses shoot out in front, and you have to look out for dirty water. The children are all naked, the men are only a very little better; and the women are only half covered. There are no glass windows to any dwelling. There is an opening for a door, but generally so low that one has to stoop to enter. Their dwellings are only one story, made of mud, and are the meanest I have seen in any country. A very few of the natives have better houses, but only a few. This is the city of the living, where vast multitudes congregate and throng all the streets; where they buy and sell as well as live. We did not wish to remain long in this part of the city. We inquired for the cemetery that we might see the city of the dead, which is far more populous than the living city.

If you turn from the city of the the living with disgust, you will from that of the dead with a shudder. The cemetery is even more desolate than the city. There is not a green thing in it. The cattle, goats, dogs and hogs and jackalls are here, and in such numbers that no man can count them. It is said that this ground has been dug over more than a hundred times. I do not wonder that cremation is practiced here. The remains of several were being consumed at the time. There are a few bundles of wood, composed of small twigs, laid on the ground and the corpse laid thereon, and a few more bundles of wood laid on and beside the remains and the whole covered with dirt. The wood is fired and burns like a coal pit for several days, and the bones are then thrown into a common pit. This is the end of one that has means and friends. Many are so poor and friendless that cremation is too expensive, and the bodies are buried. While we lingered in this desolate place, two dark skinned men, men nearly naked, brought on some bamboo poles the corpse of a young woman who had died poor and without friends. A piece of coarse dirty matting was laid over the corpse; the grave was dug in the sand, not much over two feet deep. In digging the grave, many bones were thrown up. In this shallow grave, without any coffin, the remains of the poor young woman were laid, and the sand put back in its place and pressed down by the naked feet of the undertakers and the sad service was performed. There was no father, mother, brother or sister, or any living being attending these rites; no one to drop a tear or offer a prayer. We were told that was the way the poor were buried. We looked on the sad scene and our hearts were burdened. We rode away from the city of the dead, and could no longer doubt that we were in a heathen land. We found the signal flag of our steamer was hoisted, and we hastened on board, and were soon on our way to Calcutta.—N. Y. Observer.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In Charleston, South Carolina, there is but one church bell. The cause of this is during the war the bells were all given to the Confederate Ordinance Department to be made into cannons.

—Beecher, the Plymouth divine is getting into deep water, a little too deep for money and fame to keep him on his feet. Mr. Tilton was driven to self-defence which, will unveil some things that will not be of much honor to the very popular preacher.

—The last 4th of July seems to have been rather an unlucky day, Many places were visited with storms of wind, rain and hail, while others were still more unfortunate by being visited by storms from the devil in the shape of dancing balls, drunken parties, &c., ending in quarrelling, fighting and, in a number of cases, outright murder. Such celebrations are a curse to the nation and a dishonor to the design.

—Spurgeon the great London preacher, on the last Sunday of June, preached his fortieth year sermon. Physically he is said to be on the decline. His incessant labor is telling upon him and unless he relaxes, the continued strain will wear him out before the allotted time. It is said that for the first seven years he averaged over two sermons for every day in the year.

—On the 4th inst. there passed over Lewistown, Mifflin Co., Pa., one of the most destructive storms ever known in that part of the State. The large bridge crossing the river was blown down and a number of houses and barns were unroofed. The steeples were also blown off of several churches, and a new furnace stack was blown down. There were some six lives lost and a number of others badly injured. After the storm was over th town and surrounding country presented a distressing scene which will not soon be forgotten by those who were eye witnesses.

Another Fire in Chicago.—We are informed by this morning's paper that another fire has been raging through the heart of the city, making homeless thousands of its inhabitants. The latest news is of Tuesday, 11 o'clock P. M., July 14th. The fire at this time had burned one and a half miles long and four blocks wide. The The Post Office and many of the other great buildings were destroyed. Among them was the Frst Baptist Church, one of the most costly edifices in the city.

Chicago has passed through several fiery ordeals but from all appearances it does not come out as refined as gold or as pure as it should.

Mr. Barnum is experimenting with a balloon, with a view to determine if possible, whether or not there is an easterly atmospheric current sufficiently strong to waft a balloon across the Atlantic. He has a small balloon containing 30,000 cubic feet of gas, and Professor Donaldson is to make twelve ascents. If in each of these Mr. Donaldson falls upon an easterly current, the point will be considered settled, and the building of the large balloon will be proceeded with immediately.

A new Atlantic cable is now being laid and is said to be the most perfect sub-marine cable ever made. The improvements consist in the greater purity of the conducting wire and its concentration, and in more perfect insulation. The cable is continually tested during its manufacture, and every half hour as it goes off the ship the whole line is tested to discover any imperfections that may have escaped previous examination. Mr. Cyrus Field is also pushing forward the project of a cable across the Pacific.

The Nile this year has begun to rise a week before its usual time hundreds and hundreds of miles away, and the rise is greater than usual. The mysterious 'drop' supposed to fall into the river on the 17th of June at Cairo and to cause its increase was precipitated into it at Kartoum on the 1st of May, and there the stream is twenty-two inches higher than it ought to be. "That," says a correspondent, "is all very perp'exing. The people are inhituated to all kinds of extraordinary agencies of man's invention, but they do not like anything unusual in the conduct of the Nile. Sensible men, indeed, rejoice at the news. The prospect of a full and early Nile means good cotton crops, and with proper care, provided there is not an overflowing river, it means rich harvests of all sorts all over the land."

Social Equality.—A distinguished colored clergyman of Charleston, whose education and accomplishments made him a real representative person with his race, recently remarked when interrogated on the "Social rights" question, that his opinion was that the negroes would have to cut loose all connection with the unprincipled whites, and demonstrate their capacity for self-government. He denies that any respectable number of thinking negroes desired any legislation upon the subject of "Social rights." Said he, "It is preposterous to attempt to legislate me or the respectable negroes of any community into social relation with any class whose society is not desired or desirable. Our desire is to make honesty, integrity, intelligence and virtue the only standard of excellence. And if the negro achieves, as he can, this standard, the social equality business will take care of itself." Just so, this is the truth of the matter. There are a great many highly educated negroes in Charleston and other sections of the State of South Carolina, and also in other States of the South. They acquired wealth before the war and sent their sons abroad to be educated. These sons have now returned, and as lawyers, doctors, ministers, teachers, merchants and mechanics, are filling many stations of profit and are respected and honored as white men. We cannot see the propriety of any legislation on this subject. Honesty, intelligence, integrity and virtue must after all be the basis of social equality, and if this will not do it nothing else will.

Our Enterprise.—While other towns around us are wilting and almost dying from the effects of the late panic, Huntingdon stands manfully up as if nothing had happened. In looking over the place we are truly surprised to see the vast amount of building that has been done during the Spring and Summer. We are told by different persons who know that there is more enterprise manifest, and more building being done in Huntingdon than any other place along the railroad between Philadelphia and Pittsburg and we will add, between Pittsburg and Fort Kearny, Neb., and what is more encouraging, out growth is gradual and healthy. The houses are all substantially built and generally of brick. We thought that perhaps by harvest building would be stopped, but we notice that the work is still going on. A number of fine houses are now on the way of construction while others are being staked off. We notice that Mr. Woods has just broken ground on the corner of 11th and Washington. We are told that he intends to build quite a large three story brick that will be a credit to himself and West Huntingdon. We should have noticed that the majority of the building is being done in this end of town. Our new post office situated on 5th steeet between Penn and Washington, is now under roof and it will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible. When completed we will not have cause to feel ashamed when strangers inquire for our post office.

On the whole, Huntingdon is a thriving town and possesses many advantages to be found nowhere else in the state. The place offers special inducements to the capitalists and those those who wish to enter the manufacturing business and the time is not far distant when these inducements will be seen and utilized. Our brethren who wish to do business of any kind cannot find a better location and money invested will always be safe.

Broadway, Va., July 13th, 1874.

Brother Brumbaugh:—

Enclosed I send 10 cents for which please send me the Key to the Report of the Annual Meeting. I am glad that you have adopted a plan by which your readers can know the names of the speakers at the Annual Meeting. When we have a stranger preach a sermon we wish to know his name, and just so it is in reading the proceedings of the Annual Meeting. We want to know who spoke thus and so, and knowing the names of the different speakers, the reading of the report is much more interesting and satisfactory.

Thankful for your efforts to gratify a a large number of the readers of the Pilgrim by furnishing this Key and with best wishes for success in your publication, I remain yours in bonds of Christian love.

J. J. Bowman.

The above is the general expressed sentiments of those who are sending for our "Key to Report," and shows that our efforts to satisfy a just and reasonable request is being appreciated. We want it distinctly understood that we consider this Key, in no way, a violation of A. M. The restriction was that the names were not to be published in connection with the report. With this we have complied, but we, nor no one who was there, were made to promise not to tell anybody who done the speaking. Some spoke in such a way that their names could not well be withheld, others are known by the manner in which they are spoken of, and still others are known from those who were there. If those who were there have a right to tell a dozen of the names, we have a right to tell all of them to all such as wish to know. Those who do not, let them save their 10 cents and not send for the key. We urge none to take it that have any scruples about it but do not interfere with those who only desire equal liberties with those who were able to be at the A. M. and there know and see who done the speaking.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Reformed Episcopal church established by Bishop Cummins last Winter now numbers about twenty ministers and thirteen hundred members.

—The Episcopal Convention of the diocese of Virginia, at its last session, had a warm discussion on the subject of temperance. The report offered by the minority of the committee was adopted by a vote of 385 to 38. It provides an amendment to the general rules, that any person making, buying, selling, or using as a beverage, intoxicating liquors, shall be upon conviction thereof, debarred from membership in the church.

—The work of Christianizing India has not been in vain. A late writer of its prospects says: "Statistical facts can in no way convey any adequate idea of the work done in any part of India. The effect is often enormous where there has not been a single conversion, and is manifested in very different ways, according to the nationality, the creed, and even the professions in life, and place of residence, urban or rural, of the native community." And another says, "A revolutionary change is in progress, and it seems not improbable that this generation will not pass away before the Christian churches or India will have gathered in many millions of the population to the one fold and the one Shepherd.

—Mrs. Ingalls, a Baptist missionary, in a recent letter giving an account of her visit to Burmah, says that they have there one or two laws which Christians might do well to follow. The "first crime of drunkenness is punished by the offender being paraded through the streets by a procession of State ministers, under golden umbrellas, who strike a golden gong, and rend the crime at the corner of all the streets, and lash him with thongs. He is then taken to the high court, where he has more severe blows, and then sent home. If he is found guilty the second time, he is taken out in the same manner and then banished from the country. We saw such a procession with a man guilty for the first time. We were in the golden city six weeks, and this was the only drunken man we saw. They are forbidden to use opium or to gamble." And we presume they have no laws licensing a class of men to make drunkards for a consideration. This is left for civilized communities.

—The Old Catholics of Germany have but lately met in Synod at Bonn. Bishop Reinkens presided, and there was in attendance 28 clerical and 57 lay delegates. One theological student received deacon's orders. The indications are that the body is going steadily forward in the tracks of reform. The questions discussed related to confessions, fast days, the catechisms and liturgy, and the laws of marriage. As regards the first point, the Sacrament of Penance was declared by the Synod to be a great means of grace, always existing in the church, but not necessary to salvation; and, therefore, its use was ruled to be optional. It is added that confession ought not to be made the occasion of seeking advice and direction from the confessor, though the penitent is at liberty to do so if he wishes. This synodal decree involves, it will be seen, a fundamental innovation on the received teaching and practice of the Roman Catholic Church. The rule requiring annual confession dates from the fourth Lateran Council of 1215, but is based, of course, on a much older belief. Resolutions were passed touching fast days and the catechism and liturgy; but these are not yet reported.—Independent.

At the last regular meeting of the Baptist ministers of New York and vicinity, the subject of the discussion was, "How and for what reason should any church be disfellowshiped by its association? The Rev. A. Stewart Walsh, of Brooklin, led the debate with an essay in which he contended that the churches cannot consistently exclude from their association an open communion church while retaining in their respective organization avowed open communion members. He said: "The large number of respectable spiritual members who do not accord with the strict communion views that are in our churches, must induce thoughtful men to feel that 'cutting off,' 'contempt,' and a general ignoring of that element, in no wise meets the needs of the hour. It is manifestly wrong to apply a strictness that we do not to our churches. For example, out of about one dozen members received into our church from one of the most strictly drilled churches in Brooklin, some nine were open communists. Some declared that they joined the former church avowing their views. These all came to us with letters of good and regular standing." He added: "I suggest that the communion question would at once lose its importance as a source of controversy and discord if it were put where it belongs—among the questions of secondary importance. I do not believe the rank and file desire the continuance of this bitter warfare. I believe that our pastors who are continually agitating this question will be marked as disturbers of the peace.

POEMS.

THE CROWNING GIFT OF HEAVEN is a poem of more than ordinary sweetness written by our bard, "Wesley," under the following heads: "The Birth of Christ," in two parts, "Disputing with the Doctors," "At the Tomb of Lazarus," "On Mount Tabor," "His Entry into Jerusalem," "Gethsemane," "His Arrest," "His Trial," "His Crucifixion," "His Resurrection" and "His Ascension." Neatly bound in colored cover, 48 pages. Price 30 cents.

CHRISTMAS POEM by the same author is so complete with richness and beauty that we do not see how anybody can afford to be without it. It embraces the following subjects: "The Night before Christmas," "Address to Christmas," "The Poet's Dream," "The Outcast," in two parts, and "Farewell to Christmas," 32 pages, price 20 cents. POETRY.

ON THE DEEP.

BY WESLEY.

Tossed on the billows of life's restless ocean,
See the frail bark of the lone Christian' ride;
Dauntless he views the the wild waves commotion,
Jesus has broken the fangs of the tide.

Far in the depths gather groans of perdition,
Eagerly watching each death-laden swell;
Walking the deep on its unholy mission,
Born of the germ that implanted a hell.

Loud is the roar of the turbulent water,
Mocking the cry of the life-seeking soul,
See, for a moment in peril it falters,
As the wild surges of unbelief roll.

Ah! the firm anchor of hope seeks its haven,
Sweetly the bark nestles down on the wave;
Softly the water its smooth sides is laving,
Jesus has given the faith that will save.

Calm as the breath of a midsummer morning,
Rests the lulled soul on the face of the deep;
Rocked by the waves from their revels returning,
Ocean's voice giveth God's chosen ones sleep.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE COMMISSION.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19.

Baptism stands as the door to Christianity in every stage of its developement. John, the forerunner, came baptizing; and Mark says his ministry was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." The Son of God himself was baptized on his entrance on the work of his public ministration, and immediately his disciples began to make converts under his authority, we find them baptizing. And finally, when Christ gave his last great commaud to teach all nations, the injunction to baptize was incorporated with it. Are not these proofs sufficient to sustain my position that, Baptism stands as the door to christianity in every stage of its developement? And are these facts compatible with the idea so frequently thrown out, that the subject of baptism is one of small importance, and not essentially necessary to salvation, &c.

If the preaching of John was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the law and the prophets ended in him, then was the baptism of John the beginning of Christian baptism? The baptism of Christ himself, and his disciples immediately afterwards baptizing by his authority, connects the baptism of John inseparably with His final commission to teach and to baptize the taught. There surely was no dispensation between the Mosaic and Christian, and hence the ministry of John must belong to one or the other. If to the former, then John was not more than a prophet, and Jesus says John was more than a prophet. But if his ministry was the beginning of the gospel, it is no objection that he was less than the least of those who enjoyed the pentecostal day. So I hold the baptism of John as the beginning of christian baptism as fully as his ministry was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is true that John's baptism began without Christ's direct authority, but the Father having sent John to baptize must be regarded as his own, for saith Christ, "I and my Father are one," and it is certain that John's mission to baptize did not cease before it had Christ's official sanction by the baptism of himself, and candor demands the acknowledgment that the baptism of our Savior threw more lustre on the administrator and ordinance, than it did on the participator. As one I rejoice in the idea that I have been baptized with the same baptism my Master and Teacher was baptized with, and enjoined it to be administered to all believers. Pedo-baptists however generally deny that John was the beginning of Jesus Christ, so do some of the backward immersionists. Dr. Clark, however, admits that the ordinance as administered by John was the initiatory ordinance of the christian dispensation. (See Matt. 3: 13.)

As it has already been observed, baptism is associated with every stage of the development of christianity. In its earliest dawn we have found John baptizing. Then Jesus himself, before entering on his public ministry, will sanction that ordinance by submitting to it in his own baptism. And the disciples in their very first act are co-operating with their divine Master and are baptizing their disciples. And finally when the commission is given the apostles to go and teach all nations, and to preach the gospel to every creature, they are enjoined to baptize as well as to teach. And hence the ordinance of baptism is a christian institution, but the question arises, what is baptism?

That to be baptized is an act to be performed, and not the name of an act only, I think is admitted by all, and to know what the act done by John and commanded by Jesus to be done to all penitent gospel believers, we will now try to ascertain. What did the Savior mean, and the apostles understand by the word rendered in our common version of the English Scriptures baptize? Robison in his history of baptism, p. 5 ch. 2, says, "Whether John baptized by pouring on water, or by bathing in water, is to be determined chiefly, though not wholly, by ascertaining the precise meaning of the word baptize. A linguist determines himself by his own knowledge of the Greek language, and an illiterate man by the best evidence he can obtain from the testimony of others, whom by his condition he is obliged to trust. To the latter it is sufficient to observe, that the word is confessedly Greek, that native Greeks must understand their own language better than foreigners, and that they have always understood the word baptism to signify dipping; and therefore from their first embracing christianity to this day they have always baptized, and do yet baptize by immersion. This is an authority for the meaning of the word baptize infinitely preferable to that of European lexicographers. So that a man, who is obliged to trust human testimony and who baptizes by immersion because the Greeks do, understands a Greek word as well as the Greeks themselves understand it; and in this case the Greeks are unexceptionable guides, and their practice, in this instance, is safe ground for action."

Tertullian, the first Latin father, observes, that baptism was administered with great simplicity. "The administrator stands in the water, and putting his hand on the back part of the head of the candidate, standing also in the water, lowered him forward till he was immersed in the water, pronouncing in the mean time the baptismal words, by which he characterized him a Christian."

Robison says, "The English translators did not translate the word baptize, and they acted wisely, for there is no one word in the English language, which is an exact counterpart of the Greek word, as the New Testament uses it. The difficulty, or rather the excellency of the word is, that it contains two ideas inclusive of the whole doctrine of baptism. The word then conveys two ideas, the one literal, dipping, other figurative, coloring, a figure however expressive of a real fact; meaning that John bathing persons in the river Jordan conferred a character, a moral hue, as dyers by dipping in a dyeing vat set a tinct or color; John by discriminating the disciples of Christ from other men."

We will now search the Scriptures and see what they indicate the thing, act or mode baptize is. King James' translators have it, "John answered them saying, I baptize with water." (St. John 1: 26.) Luther translating from the vulgate, or Latin has it, "Johannes antworte inhuen, und sprach: Ich taufe mit wasser." The German taufe is the English dipping, and it will bear no other rendering, hence this is a ridiculous rendering of Luther's. A literal English rendering will read, I dip you with water. This is so absurd that it bears no testing at all. Froshom in his translation of the Scriptures from the original Greek in Swiss book of German language renders the passage thus, "Ich taufe im wasser." I dip in water. Hear is sense. To dip in water can be understood by all; but how to dip with water is an anomaly. (Froshom Bible was printed in 1571.) The American Bible Union renders the passage from the Greek, "John answered them saying: "I immerse in water," which is synonymous with Froshom's dip in water, and corresponds exactly with what Robison says the Greeks understood their language to mean, and in their baptism's do the same thing. From this we learn that to baptize is an act that must be performed in water, and that the act is to dip, or immerse. Let us now examine the different records of Scripture when John and the apostles baptized and see how they correspond with this idea. "Then went out to him (John) Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the regions round about. And were baptized of him in Jordan." Matt. 3: 5, 6. Mark 1: 5. (King James translation.) "And were immersed by him in Jordan." (American Bible Union version.) "Und liesen sich taufen von ihm im Jordan." (Luther's) And let themselves be dipped by him in Jordan is the literal English, "Un liessend sich taufen von ihm im Jordan." (Froshom's,) the English the same as Luther's. "And Jesus when he was baptized went straightway up out of the water." (Matt. 3: 16. Mark 1: 10.) King James translation, "And Jesus, when he was immersed, went up straightway from the water." (American Bible Union,) "Und da Jesus getauft war, sthieg er bald her auf aus dem wasser." (Luther.) And after Jesus was dipped he at once went up out of the water, literal English. "Und do Jesus getauft ware sthieg er bald aus dem wasser." (Froshom, English same as Luther's. This is conclusive testimony that to baptize John dipped, or immersed those that came to his baptism in water. And having already seen that John was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that with his coming the law and the prophets ended, so dipping or immersing in water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is Christian baptism. And this idea associates itself with every record of baptism in the Scriptures. "And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salem, because there was much water there, and they came, and were baptized." John 3: 23. (James translation.) "And John also was immersing in Enon near to Salem, because there was much water there, and they came and were immersed." (American Bible Union.) Luther and Froshom employ their usual term taufte, for which there is no English word but dip, or dipping. "Salem was at least fifty miles North up the river Jordan from the place where John had begun to baptize. Enon, near it, was either a natural spring, an artificial reservoir, or a cavernous temple of the sun, prepared by the Canaanites, * * * and it is difficult to say which is the precise meaning of the Evangelist's word Enon, and it is not certain whether the plain meaning is, John was baptizing at the Dove-spring near Salem, or John was baptizing at the Sun-fountain near Salem." (Robison's history of baptism, page 15.) But one thing is certain, it was a place of much water, and John was baptizing, dipping, and immersing those who came to his baptism in its waters.

How did the apostles understand baptism to be done. "And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water." (Acts 8: 38, 39.) (James' translation,) "And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he immersed him." (American Bible Union translation.) Luther translated, "und er taufte ihn," and he dippid him. Freshom, "und er taufte ihn," and he dipped him. This testimony is conclusive that the apostles and John baptized in the water by dipping, or immersing the candidate. And this mode, or act is implied in the following Scriptures: When Saul of Tarsus was bid to be baptized he was told to wash away his sins. Acts 22: 16. "And our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. 10: 22. "But ye are washed." 1 Cor. 7: 2. These Scriptures certainly can only apply to washing in baptism by dipping or immersing, for in sprinkling infants I have not seen enough of water used to wash the babe's little finger, much less its whole body. And again, "We are buried with him (Christ) in baptism into death." And "we have been planted together in the likeness of his death." Rom. 6: 4, 5. Col. 11: 12 And yet again, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus 3: 5. "Through the bathing of regeneration." (American Bible Union.) From all these testimonies unbiased minds will concede the fact that the Scriptures indicate no other mode, or act for baptizing but to dip or immerse into water the person to be baptized.

We will now see who the Scriptures teach are proper subjects to be baptized. And the Scripture which heads this article declares them to be such as have been taught, which implies such as are capable of being taught, which excludes all idiots and infants under the age of understanding, or comprehension. Mark 15: 16. It is declared that he that believeth is a proper subject for baptism. And this excludes, and admits the same classes as above stated. Acts 11: 38. Repentance is enjoined before baptism. This again excludes and admits only such as above named, and in verse 41 it is said they "that gladly received him were baptized." This applies only to persons capable of thinking, acting, and choosing for themselves. The men and women of Samaria who believed the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ were baptized. Acts 8: 12. The eunuch believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God before Philip baptized him. (v. 38, 39.) Lydia had her heart opened and attended to the things spoken by Paul before she was baptized. Acts 16: 13, 14. The jailor must believe on the Lord Jesus Christ before he is admitted to baptism. (verses 31–34.) Saul prays and fasts before baptism. Acts 9. The Gentiles in Cornelius' house must have the word of the Lord preached to them before baptism. Acts 10. And many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized. Acts 18: 8. But why multiply testimony to prove that none but penitent believers are Scriptural subjects for baptism. The Scriptures have no other. Repentance, faith, and baptism, are inseperately connected in the Scriptures, and what God hath joined together, let no man put asounder.

We will now ascertain what the Scriptures teach baptism is for; not what it represents, but what it is for. We have already seen that the act of baptism is immersion, and that faith and repentance are prerequisites to Evangelical baptism, and when thus combined it is for salvation, for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost, and for the answer of a good conscience toward God. The testimony is as follows: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark 16: 15, 16. Here salvation is positively promised upon faith in the gospel and the act of baptism, and baptism stands between faith and salvation. Who will dare to wrench it out of its place as not essential to salvation, and thus wrest, pervert, and handle the word of the Lord deceitfully.

"Repent, and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. Here the remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost are positively promised upon the condition of repentance and baptism. But again, baptism stands between repentance and the remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Ghost, and woe, woe, be to the one who wrenches it out of the place the Holy Ghost has assigned it.

"Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth now also save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter 3: 20, 21. This language cannot be misunderstood. Noah and his family believed God and entered into the ark and were saved, while all outside were drowned whether they believed or not. In the like figure, saith the apostle, doth baptism save us who believe, repent and thereby enter into (the ark of) baptism, as Noah and his family believed God and entered into the ark. And as none but those in the ark were saved, according to the figure none but those who enter into the ark of baptism will be saved. Note, here baptism is for salvation, and for the answer of a good conscience toward God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and comes first, and must be entered into before salvation and a good conscience can be had. How will men escape who cut it off as nonessential to salvation. It will be ill with that man who takes from, or adds to the words of the law and testimony of God. But, "To this man will I look, to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word," and "Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word." Isaiah 66: 2, 5.

As seen above the gospel admits none to baptism but those who believe and repent, which excludes all infants and idiots, &c. from the grace of baptism. The question is often asked, "What will become of these?. Answer, Just what the Scriptures make of them "God was in Christ, reveiling the word unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." &c. 2 Cor. 5: 19, 20. Sin is the transgression of the law, but where there is no law there is no transgression. To the idiot there is no law, and hence his transgressions are not imputed unto him. Does our civil law condemn an idiot for a violation of the law? Is man more wise, human and merciful than God? Will not God the judge of all the earth do right?

And as for infants I need only say, Jesus took them in his arm, laid his hand on them, and blessed them, and said of such is the kingdom of heaven. Is not this enough? This blessing applies to all the infants in the whole world; heathen and christian infants alike, compose the kingdom of God, and dying in their infantile state will be taken there. But, says one, I don't understand how this one act of the Savior's to the infant in his arms, shall apply to all generations of unborn infants. To this I answer: If you cannot understand this, neither can you understand how Christ dying once for all, shall apply to all the then unborn generations; and so I refer you to the Scriptures, which if you will carefully, and prayerfully study, in the school of Jesus, you will know and understand all.

D. P. SAYLER.

THE POWER OF GOD'S WORD.

"For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Heb. 4: 12.

In investigating the above subject I will try to throw out a few thoughts by way of explanation. Let us first view man in his primitive state, and learn what kind of a character he was when first created.

"And God said, Let us make man in our image." "In the image of God created he him." Gen. 1: 26, 27. Here we get the first knowledge of man's creation, showing us at a glance that man was made a perfect image of God, no blemish about the body, no stain of sin, and charged with no crime. "God saw all his work, and it was very good." How perfect was man in his primitive state? "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7. Here we get our first knowledge of the soul we posess, that part of man which cannot die, and that which emanated from God. God formed the body perfect and good in his own image, and may we not safely conclude that as soon as the breath of God entered into the chambers of the body and he became a living soul, that both soul and body were holy? If not holy it was very good. But God gave him a law to obey, and to violate that law was death. Hear the commandment given to the man, "And the Lord God commanded him saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." But man disobeyed God's law, and why did he disobey? The adversary was there to tempt them and test their faith in God. And see, too, how ingenious he is. "Ye shall not surely die." The spirit of lust and the desire to be wise entered into the chamber of the heart. The woman plucks off the fruit and gives to the man. He eats and dies. See man disrobed of his righteousness. The soul and body tha was so pure and so good, is now polluted with sin. So we need not doubt the purity of the soul previous to the fall.

But did the devil cease to propagate his malicious work of destruction? O no, see Adam's two sons. Cain slew his brother Abel. This is the result of the evil spirit dwelling in the heart of man. I cannot point out the evil the devil has caused man to commit by allowing the evil spirit to take root in the heart. Let us consider how we can get rid of this arch fiend. Here is the remedy: "The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit." To separate or dissunite soul and spirit, was the sole cause of God sending his dear Son into the world, that man might be reinstated into the favor and friendship of God. The word is not the spirit, but the spirit does accompany the word. Christ came and established his Father's fixed law, through wonderful suffering even to the death on the cross.

Dear Brethren and sisters, do we rightly appreciate the worth of obeying the whole of his commandments? If we do, we have the proof within ourselves that our hearts are purged from dead works, and the spirit that once inhabited our hearts has been divided asunder from the soul, and is now in unison with the word, and the Holy Spirit which is come to lead us into all truth, and dwell in our hearts instead of the evil spirit. But the adversary will still tempt us to sin. He has no power, however, only that which is given him. If we yield to the temptations that he presents to the mind, and give them room in the heart, we soon get into his net again, and into his power. The reason is, we give him power over our will, and he will lead us captive at his will, even after we have been washed in the bath of regeneration. O, let us watch and pray, ever remembering that the crown is not in the beginning nor middle, but in the end of our race, and if we are found so doing, that is, walking in all the commands, then will be brought into fulfillment the words of our text, "Dividing asunder the soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow." Thus you see we shall be a new man in Christ. The very joints and marrow shall be purged. Our members that were formerly employed in unrighteousness will now be employed in righteousness and in doing the will of our heavenly Father, and fulfilling the design of our creation.

The last clause of our text shows us the full power of God's word. It not only detects the evil spirit, but it dethrones him, and causes him to flee from us. "And is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." O what a detecter the word of God is. It lays open the secrets of the heart. Our faith must be hearty, active, and persevering. We have no time to spend in idleness. Life is short at best. Let us make good use of the sword of the spirit, "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds; casting down imaginations, and everything that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." 2 Cor. 10: 4, 5. So all the proud and lofty thoughts of man, which leads him to exalt himself against the Gospel, must be cast down. Read God's word carefully and prayerfully, with a full desire to learn how to become a true child of God. As soon as you are in such a frame of mind the word of God will make manifest or known to you all that which is not meeting his approbation.

Now dear reader, in conclusion I would say again, read and search the Scriptures, prove all things, hold fast to that which is good. O, do not be forgetful that it is the Spirit that quickeneth, and makes alive and reinstates us again into favor with our Creator by obeying all things whatsoever he has commanded. By so doing we learn that the flesh profiteth nothing. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." John 6: 63.

Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

OLD VS. NEW.

In a recent number of the PILGRIM, a writer under the heading, "Epistolary," discourses thus: "To the churches greeting, and to all whom it may concern. I vouchsafe to write an epistle. I know your works, your patience, and your faith, and how you cannot bear them that are evil, and them which love not the order of the old brethren, and them that love high things, (high schools) and frequent assembling together, (protracted meetings). And I know that you despise every new thing under the sun, and love not those that love new things. But I have a few things against you, &c."

As the writer of the above, does not sign his (or her) name, I trust no one will construe my remarks into a personal attact upon the author—a thing too often done by a those who have a chronic inclination to see something unkind in every thing that does not fully accord with their own opinions or assertions.

In the first place, let us examine the style of the above extract. The writer "speaks as one having authority." Now I fail to see anything in the "Epistle" to justify such a course—nothing to warrant the assumption which seems to be made. If we are to clothe our bodies in modest apparel (and this duty is the burden of the article) should we not observe the same wholesome rule in regard to our thoughts? Language is their drapery, and undue ostentation in style may be regarded by some as others regard silk and broadcloth—a strong indication of pride.

And now as to a few of these overdressed ideas.—One is, that every new and progressive measure is necessarily evil, and that the church "cannot bear" with those who advocate such measures. In this connection high schools and protracted meetings are mentioned, or rather hinted at just to give us an idea from whence the wind is blowing. I shall not dwell upon this point further than to assure "Pilgrim" that many good brethren are heartily in favor of both these new things, when kept within certain bounds.

But "Pilgrim" says to the church, I know that you despise every new thing under the sun, and love not those that love new things." Now, we all know that it is not an easy matter to give up old things (for example, old sins, old habits, old notions, &c,) but yet it sometimes pays in the long run, to make the sacrifice. To accept and indorse a new thing or a new idea once in a while is not only a privilege but a duty—especially on the part of those who would enlighten the world through the medium of the press. Besides, I think there are a great many new things very highly spoken of in the Bible, and none of which the church despises. For instance, there is the new birth—a very new and strange thing to Cornelius, and no less new and strange to many at the present day. Thousands, yea millions have never heard of this new thing, and when they are told of it, how often do they reject it and persecute those sent to them. I allude to Christian missionaries in heathen lands and to Christian ministers in all ages of the church. How many have bitterly opposed the preaching of the Cross because it was a new thing! But "ignorantly they did it"—just as a great many oppose new things at the present day. No matter how many benefits may be derived from the measure, or how weak the objections they can marshal against it,—still they cry, "It is a new thing and I am opposed; I want it understood that I am opposed." But let us remember that the hoary head is a crown of glory only when found in the right way. And on the same principle we should reverence old things, not so much for their true worth, and reject the old for the new whenever the change would be for the better. "Prove all things (and this includes new things) and hold fast to that which is good," says the scriptures. Again, "Old things have passed away, behold all things have become new!" But "Pilgrim" says the church "despises every new thing under the sun." I am aware that the passage quoted has reference to another new thing—the new birth—but as many of the old brethren give it an external application, "Pilgrim" can hardly object to its use in this connection. New privileges and new surroundings involve us in new responsibilities and new duties, and this holds true in the church as well as in private life. Why not act with the same good judgment in the one case as in the other? Perhaps this is one of those instances wherein the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of the light. J. ZUCK.

MAKING VOWS.

"Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay." —Eccl. 5: 4.

The pleasure of God is not in ceremonies, but in sincerity of obedience. We learn in the holy scriptures that it is not acceptable with God that we make vows and fail to pay them. This passage of scripture has been resting on my mind for some time, and the cause is, there are some that are near unto us by nature's ties that have failed to pay their vows, and have went back on the enemy's ground. We made a vow when we came into the church that if a brother or a sister would trespass against us, we would go to them alone, and try to make it right, but we see in place of doing this that members become offended when probably a minister has charged them with something for which they are not to blame. Then they will say if that is the way they are going to do they may have their preaching to themselves, and by so doing, turn their backs to the church and take from the outside world their company. This is wrong, and very wrong. If we feel hurt, why not muster courage enough and go to the offending member and tell him how we feel, and if we cannot do this, why then let charity cover the fault. How often we have seen the tears flow down the cheeks of those who applied to become members of the church when the brethren would speak to them concerning their faith, and our prayer to-day is that the tears might again flow down their cheeks until their hearts would become soft, that they might return to their God. When we were down in the water we promised before the surrounding witnesses to live faithful until death. Oh! think of the solemn promise that you have made. My brother and sister I would say to you, take the advise of the Psalmist and offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows unto the most high God, and call upon him in the day of trouble. "I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me." Give your ears to instruction and choose your companions from the church. Deny yourselves as much as possible from the world's company, and more particular from the company that gathers at the country or village store or railroad station, as the conversation, and idle gossip that is continually going on in the long winter evenings is not fit for the follower of Jesus to hear. If you have business there, go and do your business, and then return home to your family where you should be. This is where a great mistake is made by many. As soon as the evening work is done and supper had, they are off to the post-office or some other place of gathering, and their families see nothing more of them that evening and if they do it is at a late hour. This is wrong. I have lived about villages a great part of my time, and have seen the effects of it. So many of the church members concern themselves but little about church councils, stay away, some never go at all and don't know what a council meeting is. There is where we try to keep ourselves together, and I would like to see the time when all of the members that are in health would come to the member's meetings. Now my brother and sister should this fall into your hands take courage and return to the church again. This is my prayer for you. What I have written, I have written out of love.

Modern Comparisons.

I shall try to compare the world to a weather-boarded, frame house, the foundation standing on a sand-bank. Any one acquainted with building houses would not attempt to build on such a foundation, lest the winds come and beat on that house and it fall. It might easily be seen how indiscreet that builder was. I mean to show you how indiscreet men are in reference to their eternal interests, in rearing their tabernacles whilst here on earth. We have all a building to rear, hence it is necessary to make sure the foundation.

We will first notice the foundation whereon the building is to be placed. The most of worldly men are animated with a public honor-aspiring spirit, a something that promises little reward in this life and much less in a world to come. What kind of a foundation is public honor based upon? A sand-bank. Yet how strange that men will try to build up by laying stone upon stone until they have a huge mass of these irregular shaped stones piled up together. Lawyers, doctors, statesmen, and Christian professing men, and all the classes of men that compose a world, are some of the stones that are cemented together with self-esteem and self-honor. This is a pretty mass of things. Should the Christian take part in this worldly building? Nay, far from it. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness."—2. Cor. 6: 14.

We next come to the frame work of this building, which is to make money without labor or much physical exertion, on a chair of ease at the expense of other people's ignorance.

This frame-work is now being weatherbourded with a society called "Patrons of Husbandry," now raging at a very great extent all over the country, forming monopolies in order to break down monopolizing impositions that exist at present.

Seemingly it wears a very smooth face, but after a little while it will become weather-beaten, the boards will become rotten and cannot be kept together any longer; so they among themselves will become corrupt and disagree. "A house divided against itself cannot stand. Put new wine in old bottles and the bottles break and the wine is lost.

See to it brethren, that ye are not partakers of the iniquities of the world.

This building is floored with the Women's Crusade Parties, composed of Christian professors and unbelievers, and roofed with Christianity—to be sure they must be disguised in the cloak of religion or the thing would not go.

We must admit that these evils should not exist, but they do. "Give unto Cesar the things that belong to Ceasar, and unto Christ the things belonging to Christ." So it has been from all ages of the world up to the present time, and there is more spiritual wickedness in high places now than at any period since Christ was here on earth.

While the world attempts to tear one board off of the building in order to replace it with a new one, there is still a worse place left to be filled up than the first board indicated. So they continue to tear off one by one one as they become defective until they go around the entire building to where they made the first repair, and behold that board is defective and ready to be torn off. So the world continues to go. When one evil is arrested there is a greater one following in close pursuit.

Knowing these things to be true, why do so many brethren hanker after the things of the world? "Be ye a separate and a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

The laws of God are fixed laws unchangeble and never need be repealed on account of their deficiencies, for they have none. He that buildeth his house on this rock hath a sure foundation, whose upper frame work is well braced, and of material that will not decay by age. A. M. GOOD.

CALIFORNIA EPISTLE.

In another column our readers will find an epistle from Eld. George Wolf of California. He seems much pleased to learn that some of the members contemplate a visit to them but does not understand the committee arrangement. This goes to show that there are two elements at work among our brethren there which is very unfortunate indeed. However we hope, if the committee goes there in the fear of the Lord, having only in view the good and prosperity of Zion that dissimilar elements may be brought together and our brethren may yet see the wisdom of the Church in sending a committee. If there is no need for it to settle difficulties, so much the better. Let Bro. Wolf put them to preaching, they are all tried veterans and know how to do the Lord's work.

The School.

In another page will be found a communication from Bro. Holsinger relative to the school enterprise at Berlin. On account of the difference of opinion in regard to it we have not given it the encouragement that the cause justly demands. In our minds there is no question as to the expediency of the move but as others differ from us we honor their judgment so far as to show respect to their opinions, as we have not the least doubt but what they are as honest in their conviction of a wrong in it as we are of the right. But while we yield our opinions in part we hope that those who cannot see as we do will have a disposition to exercise the same amount of charity. Our every purpose should be to labor for the welfare of the church and while some believe that a thorough education may result to their spiritual disadvantage, we believe just as strongly that it would be to their advantage. This difference of opinion is no sign that we differ in the fundamental principles of religion, nor that either of us are dangerously out of the way, but it is that we are surrounded by different circumstances, different influences and look at the subject from a different stand point. Just so soon as we can agree to look at things in this light we will be willing to look at these things with a greater degree of allowance and cover the whole with the mantle of charity. Oh, how good is that charity which thinketh no evil.

On Sunday before the School Meeting at Martinsburg, there was present an old brother whom we love and who has done much for the Church and the cause of Christ, but the School project, in his estimation, was a move in the wrong direction. In taking his leave he remarked: "Well, brethren, I love you but I don't love your cause." This was an open honest confession of his feelings and was the most powerful argument that he could have used—it was Christ-like, and nothing short of more powerful convictions of right could have overbalanced it. From this confession we have learned a lesson which we shall not soon forget. While some of our brethren do not love our cause of laboring for the better and safer facilities to have our children educated, may we not hope that they, like our old brother, still love us? We are sure, dear brethren, that we shall try and love you just the same as if this difference of opinions did not exist. God sees many things in us that he does not like yet he still loves us. Such should be our feelings towards each other.

SHEEP WASHING.

This may seem a strange subject but then, we see some strange things in the world and as they generally run outside of the channel, they set us to thinking. We sometimes read, the fact is we read a great deal and among other things, we read The Christian at Work which, by the way is a large, and interesting Weekly under the editorship of Mr. Talmage who sometimes preaches very good sermons which are reported and published in his paper.

For this week, the subject is, "The Outside Sheep." If his outside sheep will be accepted, the inside ones can lie down in pastures green at their ease. He says: The Heavenly Shepherd is going to find a great many of his sheep among those who are positive rejectors of Christianity.—He has reference to such as are good moral men but who have been badly taught and therefore cannot believe in Christ. If this is all that is required to make an outside sheep, how much will be demanded of an inside sheep?—But it is the "sheep washing" that we intended to talk about. He (Mr. Talmage,) says; Here is the Episcopal fold, the Methodist fold, the Luthern fold, the Congregational fold, the Presbyterian fold, the Baptist and Pedobaptist fold, the only difference between these last two being the mode of "sheep washing." If Mr. Talmage had in his mind the Eastern mode of sheep or wool whashing and was driving at baptism, the Baptists will certainly loose nothing by the comparison. The ancient custom was to take the sheep into a pool or stream of water for the express purpose of washing or cleansing the wool. To effect this cleansing it was necessary that they were wholy immersed in the water. Of this kind of Sheep Washing we have read much but of washing them by sprinkling a little water on them we have never read nor heard. If there is such a mode of sheep washing it is of modern date and might well be considered bogus as it would not have the desired effect, the wool would not be cleansed. Just so it is in regard to Christ's "sheep washing." In the history we have of His "sheep washing" we read of his sheep being washed in Jordan, of having their sins washed away, of being purified and cleansed in the water of regeneration but of any other mode of His sheep being washed we do not read, hence we conclude that Mr. Talmage's only difference is greater than at first might be supposed. The object in "sheep washing" is to cleanse the wool, and in man washing in baptism, to cleanse the soul, and as Mr. Talmage has introduced the comparison he must accept the position and admit that the Baptists have the better show for clean wool.

List of Questions Desirable to be Answered.

1st. Is it lawful to eat swine's flesh after the teachings of the New Testament?

2nd. Is it lawful to marry a sister-in-law or a brother-in law?

3rd. Was Herod's brother Philip living when he took Herodias, his brother Philip's wife?

4th. By the light of the Gospel is it generally believed that Judas Iscariot was finally lost after he so keenly repented him of his evil, and then, too, paid the penalty with his own hands?

5th. Was Timothy a real son of Paul?

6th. What are we to understand by the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place?

7th. Is it your opinion through a Gospel light, that our Christian friends communicate with, or act as our guardian angels? Do you understand that they go immediately to Heaven?

I have given you a list of such passages of scripture and questions as I would like very much to have answered, provided it is agreeable to your arrangements and time. If you can well comply with the above you can either reply through the Pilgrim, at your convenience, or through any other medium most suitable to you. I ask your views because I verily believe the "Brethren" are a Godly people, and for this thing I candidly think the Spirit leads them into the plain and unalloyed truth. In other words, I do not believe they lean unto their understanding. Julia A. Wood.

Query 1st. Is it lawful to eat swine's flesh, according to the teachings of the New Testament?

Directly, we know of nothing in the New Testament forbidding the eating of swine's flesh. Under the Old law, it was considered unclean and therefore not to be eaten, but in the new law that uncleanness seems to have been revoked by the declaration of Christ that it was not what went into a man that defiled him but that which came out, and "what God has cleansed let no man call common or unclean." If God had not cleansed the things let down before Peter in the sheet, then would the figure be incomplete and the Gentiles still uncleansed. But there is another sense in which it may be unlawful to eat swine's flesh. According to the united testimony of our most eminent physicians, swines flesh, as a rule, is injurious to the body and retards its development—in many cases not only retards but actually destroys the very germ of development which results in a destruction of the body. Paul in speaking to the believer says: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." Defile is a mild term for destruction. When a thing is only defiled, there is a possibility of it being cleansed but if destroyed is forever useless or lost. Then if it is so strictly wrong to defile the body is it not presumable that it would still be worse to destroy it? Why is it that no drunkard shall enter heaven? Because he defiles and destroys God's temple. Just as far as the eating of swine's flesh has this tendency, to so great a degree is it wrong to eat it, or anything else that affects the body in a similar manner.

Query 2nd. Is it lawful to marry a sister-in-law or a brother in-law?

On this question the New Testament Scriptures seem to be silent and we cannot now think of any reason why it should be unlawful thus to marry. As long as matrimonial affinity is kept outside of blood relation we know of no law in nature or revelation forbidding it.

Query 3d. Was Herod's brother Philip living when he took Herodias, his brother Philip's wife?

Herod Philip and Herod Antipas, history informs us, were step brothers. The former married Herodias, sister of Agrippi, and the latter the daughter of Aretas King of Arabia Herodias, after bearing a daughter, Salome, to him, eloped and, proposed marriage to her step brother-in-law which Herod Antipas accepted and were married while Herod Philip was still living. The sin of the marriage did not consist in marrying a step sister-in-law, but in marrying Herodias while her husband was yet living. It was marrying another man's wife.

Query 4th. Is it believed that Judas Iscariot was finally lost after he so keenly repented him of his evil and then too, paid the penalty with his own hands?

Judas was a subject of prophecy and the scriptures could not have been fulfilled without him having done the very things he did, therefore we cannot help but believe that he was an instrument in God's hand to accomplish His purposes and God is too just to punish a man for a thing which he could not avoid. We give this as our private opinion and not as reflecting the opinion of others.

Query 5th. Was Timothy a real son of Paul?

No, he was only an adopted son in the faith. His father's name is not known and is supposed to have died while Timothy was yet in his infancy. He was a Greek or a Gentile, while his wife, Timothy's mother, was a Jew.

Query 6th. What are we to understand by "the abomination of desolation" spoken of by the prophet Daniel "standing in the holy place"?

This abomination is supposed to be Antichrist or the unbelieving Jews who confess not that Jesus is the Christ.

Query 7th. Is it your opinion that our Christian friends after death communicate with, or act as our guardian angels? Do you understand that they go immediately to heaven?

We have given the subject of ministering some thought and have searched the scriptures relation to them but find nothing to justify us in believing that the departed dead have any influence whatever over the living. The only place we read of ministering spirits is in Heb. 1; 14, and there they are angels.

Our opinion in regard to the latter Query is given in No. 18, of current volume, a copy of which we send you. Though our opinion of the condition of the departed dead should deprive you of the hope that the spirit of your dear departed brother will in some way influence your future life and aid you through life's weary pilgrimage, rest assured that we give you another that is more than a brother, even Christ who is now interceding with the Father for us all.

SELF-CONTROL.

Not long ago we read an account somewhere of a lady who went to the "far west" to labor as a teacher among the Indians. Her labor was not at all pleasant, the school-house was a mere hut and her place of boarding was some distance from it, and as she made her own fires, she was often obliged to make her own way through the snow and storms to the school-room early in the morning. Having left a pleasant home in the east, surrounded with the comforts and conveniences of life, she often almost wished that she had remained there, but looking hopefully at the importance of her work and stimulated by the spirit of true philanthropy she was enabled to pursue her labors with zeal and energy. She continued to teach for a number of years and during this time the oldest of her pupils never knew her to lose her temper. They seemed to be very much surprised at this, and one day at noon a number of the larger pupils concluded to try if it were possible to insult her at all. Consequently a consultation was held and plans were spoken of by which they might insult her, but no plan could be determined upon that would bring about the desired result. But just as the consultation was over a little fellow who had been listening hollowed out, "I can do it; to-morrow morning she get very mad." The larger boys seemed to doubt whether it could be done, but they finally accepted his plan as being one sufficiently aggravating to accomplish the purpose. The next morning was a very rough and snowy morning and the lady came early to her school room in order to have the fire made and the room warm until school time. But what was her surprise on opening the stove door to find it chucked full of snow. She looked at it a little and then with a smile went for the shovel and calmly went to shoveling out the snow. The boys who were concealed, watching, seeing that they were refuted in their plan, came forward, shoveled out the snow, confessed, and made a very humble acknowledgment and never afterwards attempted anything of the kind.

This certainly must have been a very severe conflict with self, and exhibits more than ordinary power. There are perhaps few who could have subdued their temper under similar circumstances, but it shows what ability may be acquired by long perseverance in conflicting with self.

The Christian's life is compared to a conflict, and he who has ever endeavored to restrain or subdue the passions, will have experienced the power of the opposing foe. The wise man, Solomon, knew something of the power and nature of the conflict when he says, "He that governs himself is greater than he that taketh a city." From this we have the idea that it is a greater achievement to govern or control ourselves than to go out against a city and capture it. It is great because of the subtilty of the enemy in view of our weakness, but if we ask we have the promise of divine aid and in view of the glorious victory and the joys that shall follow, should we not seek it and obtain the prize? At the end of the conflict, if we succeed in refuting the foe, we will receive a crown that will supercede in glory and excellence any earthly crown. How important then that we control ourselves. It is the great work of life. It is the most noble and lofty achievement. It is that upon which depends our eternal happiness in the world to come.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

THE TWO GARDENS.

"Father, I don't like to go to school," said Harry Williams, one morning; I wish you would always let me stay at home. Charles Parker's father don't make him go to school."

Mr. Williams took the little boy by the hand, and said kindly to him, "Come, my son, I want to show you something in the garden."

Harry walked into the garden with his father, who led him along until they came to a bed in which peas were growing, the vines supported by thin branches which had been placed in the ground. Not a weed was to be seen about their roots, nor even disfiguring the walk around the bed in which they had been planted.

"See how beautifully these peas are growing, my son. How clean and healthy the vines look. We shall have an abundant crop.

"Now let me show you the vines in Mr. Parker's garden. We can look at them through a great hole in the fence."

Mr williams then led Harry through the garden gate and across the road, to look at Mr. Parker's pea vines through a hole in the fence. The bed in which they were growing was near to the road; so they had no difficulty in seeing it. After looking into the garden for a few minutes Mr. Williams said:

"Well, my son, what do you think of Mr. Parker's pea vines?"

"Oh, father, I never saw such poor looking peas in my life! There are no sticks for them to run upon, and the weeds are nearly as high as the peas themselves. There won't be half a crop!"

"Why are they so much worse than ours, Harry?"

"Because they have been left to grow as they pleased. I suppose Mr. Parker just planted them, and never took any care of them afterwards. He has neither taken out the weeds nor helped the vines to grow right."

"Yes that's just the truth my son. A garden will soon be overrun with weeds and briers if it is not cultivated with the greatest care: and just so it is with the human garden. This precious garden must be trained, and watered, and kept free from weeds, or it will run to waste. Children's minds are like garden-beds, and they must be tended even more carfully than the choicest plants. If you, my son, were never to go to school, nor have good seeds of knowledge planted in your mind, it would, when you become a man, resemble the weed-covered, neglected bed we have just been looking at, instead of the beautiful one in my garden. Would you think it right for me to neglect my garden as Mr. Parker neglects his?"

"O, no, father, your garden is a good one, but Mr. Parker's is all overrun with weeds and briers. It won't yield half as much as yours will.

"Or, my son do you think it would be right if I neglected my son as Mr Parker neglects his, allowing him to run wild, and his mind uncultivated, to become overrun with weeds?"

Little Harry made no reply, but he understood pretty nearly what his father meant.

"I send you to school," Mr. Williams continued, "in order that the garden of your mind may have good seed sown in it and that these seeds may spring up and produce plentifully. Now, which would you prefer—to stay at home from school, and let the garden of your mind be overrun with weeds, or go to school and have this garden cultivated?"

"I would rather go to school," said Harry, "but, father, is Charles Parkers mind overrun with weeds?"

"I am afraid that it is. If not, it certainly will be if his father does not send him to school. For a little boy not to be sent to school is a great misfortune, and I hope you will think the privilege of going to school is a very great one indeed."

Harry Williams listened to all his father said, and, what was better thought about it too. He never again asked to stay away from school.—T. Arthur.

The British Officer.

BY MISS M. E. WINSLOW.

It was midnight in the rocky forest of Gibralter. The waves of the Mediterranean dashed with a regular beat against the rocks, and every now and then a sheet of spray, silvered in the moonlight, would appear on the window-sil of the room where an officer of the garrison tried in vain to sleep. Some hing kept him awake to-night, and his thoughts wandered to all the precious things he had left in his English home. There was the park with its broad acres of smooth, green turf and its grand old trees. There were elegant furniture, fine pictures, beautiful statuary, and books whose contents were more valuable than mines of jewels and gold. But there was something more precious still, for in a shaded nursery of that far-off home, lay two little heads, every one of whose golden hairs was worth more to their father officer than all the wealth that ever floated over that beautiful sea. They belonged to the little son and daughter of the officer. Their mother had died two years before, and now it was his greatest grief to be obliged to leave them alone in England, while he with his regiment was stationed so far away.

As he leaned over the ledge of the window, gazing wistfully on the moonlit sea, he heard the footsteps of the sentinel far above his head, pacing to and fro, and every now and then he would hear him say: "The precious blood of Christ! the precious blood of Christ!" At first he did not listen, but by degrees as he had been thinking of precious things the word struck upon his ear, and began to wonder if anything could be more precious than his dear little Elsie at home, or his bright, bold Harold. Then he tried to remember where he had heard the words before, and he though perhaps his mother had read them in a little old-fashioned book called the Bible, which he had not looked into for many a year.

There was an old dust covered one in his room now, and taking it up he read by the light of the moon, "You were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ." You know the Bible is God's word and sometimes he uses it like a direct voice from heaven to call some poor wandering child to his love and to his heart, and this was the case now. This officer, though he loved his children, and never loved Jesus; had never, in fact, thought much about him; but now in the still midnight, the thoughts of the "precious blood of Christ" melted his whole heart into sorrow that he had so neglected it, and a longing for that treasure that was more precious even than his children, and he never rested till he found it for his own.

Children, this is a true story. God made use of that sentinel in Gibralter as the means of the conversion of one of the noblest and most useful servants that he ever had. There is a voice ever whispering in your ears: "The precious blood of Christ, the precious blood of Christ." Do you hear it? Do you know what it means? It means that the most precious thing in the world, that which cost the most, is the salvation which our dear Lord Jesus died on the cross to procure for you. It is so precious that no money could buy it. No! though you should pile up all the pearls of Cape Comorin, all the diamonds of Golconda, all the silver of Peru, and all the gold of California, and bring it to the foot of God's throne, seeking to buy salvation with it, the whole would not be worth as much as one drop of the precious blood of Christ. Is it precious to you? Do you want to be saved? And do you feel so thankful to Jesus for shedding it for you, that you would gladly yield yourself to him to be his loving child and servant forever? Then he gives it to you "without money and without price," and you will find it all throughout your future life the most precious of all your posessions. Precious, because it will wash you whiter than snow; precious, because no one can ever take it away from you; precious, because when death and the grave has turned everything else to dust and ashes, this will be more real and more bright through all the long ages of eternity.—New York Observer.

A Brother's Charge.

One day a little boy asked his mother to let him lead his sister out on the green grass. She had just began to run alone, and could not step over anything that lay in the way. His mother told him he might lead out the little girl, but charged him not to let her fall. I found them at play, very happy, in the field.

I said, "You seem very happy, George. Is this your sister?"

"Yes, sir,"

"Can she walk alone?"

"Yes, sir, on smooth ground."

"And how did she get over those stones which lie between us and your house?"

"O, sir, mother charged me to be careful that she did not fall, and so I put my hands under her arms, and lifted her up when she came to a stone, so that she did not need to hit her little foot against it."

"That is right, George; and I want to tell you one thing. You see now how to understand that beautiful text. He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.' God charges his angels to lead and life his people over difficulties, just as you have lifted little Annie over the stones. Do you understand it now?"

"O, yes, sir; and I never shall forget it while I live."

Can one child thus take care of another, and cannot God take care of those who trust him? Surely he can. There is not a child who may read this story over whom he is not ready to give his holy angels charge.—Presbyterian.

There is a double lesson here: First, that the young should be encouraged to put their trust in God, and not say, "I fear I should not hold out if I made a profession of religion;" second, we may do angels' work by watching over Christ's "little ones," and plucking stones from their pathway.—Examiner and Chronicle.

Berlin High School.

Dear Brethren:—

We were glad to have our brother J. B. B. visit us, and examine the proposed location of our school, and we endeavored to profit by the opportunity and afforded him every facility for making a through and satisfactory interview. Which we know, too, he has appreciated. But in writing out his report, and especially his comments, he suffered himself to be led by a spirit which we could wish had not been done. Of course it was permitted unconsciously. We admire justice, still that take him by the throat and pay me that thou owest, is not the most admirable method as administering it. So, while we think Berlin should, if she can, subscribe the amount proposed, yet, if on account of the temporary financial pressure, the construction of a railroad, and perhaps having somewhat overestimated her liberality, she cannot at once do all she promised to do, we do not think that therefore the whole project should fail. Would it not be vastly better for a few other places to help make up the deficiency, and thus insure success to the enterprise? Brethren our cause can endure no dissensation, among its friends. We must suffer no selfish, sectional, or party spirit to move us in this matter. United we will succeed, divided we must fail. It is agreed by all impartial judges that our location is one of the best in the country. No better could be found, and, taking all things into consideration, its equal is hard to find. The healthfulness of the location is admitted by all; the church influence surrounding it is all that could be expected and we have an organization, forming a nucleus upon which we can work with fair prospects of success. Let us therefore concentrate all our powers, and, God being our helper, we must succeed.

Another view of the matter is this: The larger the territory from which the endowment is gathered, the wider will be the range of the influence and patronage of the school. And we think that neither Somerset nor any other county should be allowed to hold the dominant part of the investment. There are about twenty-five counties in the state of Pennsylvania, in which the brethren are largely represented. Should Somerset County take only forty thousand, and the others two thousand each, on an average, it would amount to ninety thousand dollars, leaving only ten thousand dollars to be taken by all the other states.

Nevertheless brethren, let it not be understood that Berlin will fail of meeting its proposition. I will even now pledge myself within five days from the time that the seventy thousand dollars shall have been raised elsewhere, to secure the balance of the promised thirty thousand dollars within the limits of the Berlin congregation. A year ago we could more easily have raised thirty thousand dollars than twenty thousand now. In six month after this, when our branch railroad will be in successful operation, and the burden of its construction will be swallowed up in the fruition of its benifits, our people will also be in a better condition to contribute to another enterprise than at the present. Therefore, should you solicitor occasionly explore other territory before the home field has been entirly worked out, he hopes to have answered in advance excuse No. 1: "The promise which thou hast made."

Over twenty thousand dollars have already been subscribed. More shortly. Sincerely yours.

H. R. Holsinger.

Berlin Pa.

Remarks.—We have long ago learned, by experience, the veracity of apostolic declaration. "When I desire to do good evil is present." We certainly did not desire to say anything that would in any way impede the success of the proposed school, but it may have been that the spirit of retaliation was hovering around when we were writing our report. We have to watch these things very closely if they do not intermingle with our good purposes. But one thing we want distinctly understood, if we were influenced at all by a spirit of this kind, it did not originate from a view of location, but from what was said about location. All who were present at the school meeting at Martinsburg know who helped to determine the location, and that all were satisfied in reference to that matter, but there were things said about our location that to us down here were extremely ridiculous. Our brethren from Somerset County who were present know all about this. We are accused for being influenced by a spirit that is not commendable, and if so, we do not want you to be mistaken as to its origin and humbly trust you will attribute the apparent expression of it to our fallibility. We have no selfish motives nor party spirit, neither had we at that school meeting more than the brethren at Berlin and Clover Creek.

What we said about the amount to be raised was only done to stir up your minds by way of remembrance. A promise should mean something and has its effect be it little or much. A failure to come up to promise will not necessarily make it a failure, neither did we say so, but if a promise means anything, and has any effect at all, it must certainly be conceded that a failure will not have a conciliatory bearing. This is certainly evident to all. Its tendency is not towards the object for which we are aiming. We are not desirous to take our brethren by the throat and demand "what thou owest." It is true, we love justice, but we are also inclined to be merciful. We are glad to learn also from the above communication that our information in reference to this matter was in the main incorrect, and that the amount will, after all, be raised. If ever we felt interested in anything it is in the success of this school, and can assure our brethren at Berlin that our efforts, as insignificant as they may be, either public or private, shall be for the success of the school. We earnestly hope that no unkind feelings will be entertained towards us, as it was far from our intention to wound any one, or do anything that might be, in any way, detrimental to the success of the school. J. B. B.

A KIND LETTER.

The following was not intended for publication, but it breathes so freely of that simple confiding charity which thinketh no ill that we have concluded to give it room, hoping that it may, in no way, displease our kind friend, and be of some interest to our readers. Complimentary letters sometimes do us good and show that our labors are appreciated. If some of our brethren in writing could use a little more of the spirit of christian forbearance, it would greatly lighten our labors and gladden our hearts.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

Worthy Friend:—I regard all of you good people as friends, whether personally acquainted or not. I have safely received all the books I ordered of you, and now send you one dollar for the book you have for sale—"Man and Woman," and which you recommended. I sent the advertised price of the book. I am receiving the Pilgrim regularly, and thus far they interest me. I shall have the papers read by others as much as I can and get you subscribers if possible. There is a general complaint of scarcity of money, and doubtless, a love of what is in the pockets of the people. Since I wrote my first I have lost one of my dear young brothers. On the 2nd of June, he was kicked in his right side by a mule and died in the space of 35 or 36 hours. He met death in a rational, calm, and resigned state. He repeated many comforting words from the Bible and said he would not take a thousand dollars for having read it. A friend has just copied and sent me the enclosed words as applicable to his death and state, and I admire them so much I send you a copy which you can publish in the Pilgrim if you desire to do so—just as as you prefer. They are titled "The Voice of the Departed," and read as follows:—

"I shine in the light of God.
His image stamps my brow;
Through the vale of death my feet have trod
I reign in glory now.

No breaking heart is there,
No keen and thrilling pain;
No wasted cheek where the frequent tear
Hath rolled and left its stain.

I have found the joys of Heaven,
I am one of the angel band,
To my head a crown is given,
And a harp is in my hand.

I have learned the songs they sing,
Whom Jesus hath made free;
And the glorious walls on high still ring,
With my new-born melody.

No sin, no grief, no pain,
Safe in my happy home;
My fears all fled, my doubts all slain,
My hour of triumph come.

Friends of my mortal years,
The trusted and the tried,
Thou art walking still in the vale of tears,
But I am at thy side.

Do I forget thee? Oh, no!
For memory's golden chain,
Shall bind my heart to hearts below,
Till they meet and touch again,

Each link is strong and bright.
And love's electric flame
Flows fully down like a river of light,
To the world from which I came.

Do you mourn when another star
Shines out from the glittering sky;
Do you weep when the noise of war
And the rage of conflict dies?

Then why should your tears roll down,
And your heart with grief be riven?
For another gem in the Savior's crown,
And another soul is in Heaven.

My dear brother was no professing Chistian, but many signs were long shown me that his young heart was being gradually led to Christ. He was well stored with religious knowledge, which impressed him much. He said many precious things of different natures, when he was told of his approaching dissolution. To have seen him and to have heard his words, surely no one would doubt his fitness for heaven. In fact, our neighbors say, it was an easy matter for him to meet death. While he was dying I told him that if he got to Heaven and could do anything for me he must do it, and he said, "I will do all I can for you." 'Tis sad indeed to lose the dear ones from our home-circle. In less than ten years we have mourned the loss of four—three brothers and a sister—the latter was a young wife, and died a sad death in 1872. Truly our afflictions have been heavy, but I well know that God is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. Although you are a stranger to us, yet I felt inclined to write what I have written. Hoping that your good work and intentions may have as much success as God wills, I subscribe myself

Your well-wishing friend,
Julia A. Wood.

Dear Pilgrim:—

Being at home today, I am musing about the many that are assembled at the house of prayer the country over, also about those that will be reading the columns of the Pilgrim, by which those of the far west will hear from their friends and brethren in the east, and vise versa.

A circumstance passed my notice this morning which would not be proper to mention here, which brought many things to my mind and which I conclude to pen—or some at least.

"God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these latter days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, * * * when He had by himself purged our sins." Heb. 1: 1 2 3.

"Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard lest at any time we should let them slip, for if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Heb. 2: 1, 2, 3

"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works. But go on to "the doctrines of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, and this will we do if God permit." Heb. 5: 1, 2, 3.

Now brethren "let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us, of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it, for unto us was the gospel preached." Heb. 4: 1, 2.

"For unto us was the gospel preached." Nothing else need be preached, for we are just silly enough to believe that if the doctrine of the New Testament is not broad enough that through it we can comprehend the plan of salvation, it is no use for mortal man to endeavor to remedy or complete it.

The foregoing language of Paul is very decisive on the "doctrine of Christ," and I believe to-day that if our brethren were to preach a little more of the doctrine of Christ, and not quite so much order it would be a little more in accordance with the tenor of the gospel.

Would it not be more compatible to preach the doctrine of baptism, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead &c., according to the gospel, than preach so much order for which there is no "thus saith the Lord," for we incline to the opinion that reliance on order alone, would be superstition, and again we conclude that especially with some, order is adhered to more in word than in deed, and then if is only adhered to in part, and that only for reputation, what is it worth, in particular if they do not practice what they teach. We like to see brethren practice what they preach, or else preach only what they do practice, for consistency should be a prominent feature in every christian's life.

The apostle Paul in giving his charge to Timothy says: "preach the word." What word? "Unto us the gospel was preached." Preach the gospel, preach the word of God, preach the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ. We heard it said that a minister once said that the word of God never converted a soul, but it was the paraphrasing of the word by the minister that converted. While such may be the case to some extent, we would be sorry to believe that the word itself is not able to convert, when that is the purpose for which it was intended, for "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure making wise the simple."—Psalm 19: 7.

Now for fear prolixity might be considered inconsistency, we would say by way of concluding, that we have written thus much for our consideration, hoping that we may all profit by preaching and hearing the word.

J. B. Lair.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

In No. 23. of the Pilgrim is a notice that a number of our brethren and sisters from the Western States contemplate paying their friends in California a visit in the after part of the season, and to make the journey more home-like, have hired a first-class car for $1,000 for the round trip. Now brethren, this looks business-like, and gives evidence that you have not forgot your friends on the Pacific slope. It is not only business, but it is apostolic. Brethren come and see us, we are glad, and our hearts rejoice to think we may meet again on the journey of our pilgrimage on earth. If we have never seen your faces it makes no difference. "That faith that works by love and purifies the heart," is like the water that mingles together. It seeks and finds its level and sameness. In California you will find the country similar to that you read of in your Bibles of ancient Palestine, in the palmy days of David and Solomon.

How is this? The day after the close of the A. M. there appeared in the San Francisco Weekly Bulletin an article, or notice, that the Dunkards, or German Baptists, had held their National Convention, at Girard, Ill., May 26th and 27th, 1874. Among the business done, and matters discussed, was a committee of three elders to be sent to California to settle trouble in the churches. This same account, on the 29th of May, appeared in the Stockton Independent. On the 4th day of June, the same account, with very little variation, reached us in California through the Desmoines, Iowa, State Register. How is this, that our political papers furnish us news so far in advance of our own papers? It is now June 25th, and the Pilgrim has just reached us with part of the first days proceedings. Is it because our own brethren editors are denied the right of making a full report with the names attached that we are so far behind the times? Yes, brethren, this is the cause of the delay. The spirit of the age demands that religion should be acted out as did the Savior, and when inquiry was made about his doctrine and disciples, he answered, "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." John 18: 20. If brethren who live at a distance from those meetings can get the information they desire through the political papers quicker and fuller than through our own, of course they will do so. This lessens the patronage to our papers, which is their just dues. Hence our brethren of the press, with their limited patronage, are not able to give us telegrams and full particulars, where it differs from the old method of communicating, because there is some cost attached

What is it for? The committee was the startling communication. What is it for? The church in California is in peace, love, and unison. For 17 years we have endeavored to keep the unity of the faith in the bonds of peace. Our communion meetings have been conducted as the Lord directs, with the best of feelings on the part of the communicants. Preaching the Word has been attended to with a good degree of prosperity. Within the space of 6 or 8 months 15 have been added to the church by baptism. The most of these had never heard that there was a people called the Brethren. We teach the people just what the word teaches us. But says one, all professors of religion say they are directed by the word to teach others what the word teaches them. For the sake of brevity, let us test this assertion on church government. There are but two rules contained in the law of Jesus Christ to govern two different cases of trespasses in the church. The first is, "If thy brother trespass against you, go and tell him his fault, between thee and him alone." Brother, have you done this? If you have been manifesting the spirit of Christ, you then prove your assertions to be true, but if you did not do this your assertions are groundless and false. Or did you say nothing to your brother about the trouble? Or did you report the brother you thought was doing wrong to other brethren, saying, there is no order in the church, and call on other brethren to do what the Lord makes it your imperative duty to do yourself?

Second, the objector to a compliance to this rule laid down by our Saviour in the 18th chaper of Matthew, does not cover all cases. We willingly grant it. There are cases that some times comes up of a public nature, that do not require the way of proceeding. There is in Paul's letter to the Gallations a case bordering on the subject. Paul reproves Peter at Antioch. Gallations 2: 14, 12. Bro. Paul does here just what he directs Timothy. "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others may fear also." Timothey 5: 20. Now brethren if we will give heed to the teachings of our Lord and not undertake to carry out the theories of others or our own, all will go well, and we will have no need of a committee, for the Lord has nowhere given such a rule in case of trespass, until the rules of trespass is complied with.

The objector may say there are cases that does not come under these rules. If such is the case please show us where it is to be found, in the law of God, that came by Jesus Christ. I yield and bow to the word of the Lord, but not to the laws or rules of men. The law of the Lord is perfect and reaches every case. Of the rules of men one is as good as another, until one is shown to be weaker than the other. When I came into the church, I believe I came in legally, according to the Apostles direction, or definition of the true method of discipling men and woman. Gallations 3: 26; 7, 8, 9. We now ask what is the trouble in the churches in Cal. The committee is coming to adjust as reported in the papers, and who is it belonging to the church that has called for such a committee. The church of Ca. has not called for it. We are desirous for the brethren to come and see Cal. and assist us in a closer observance of the law of Jesus Christ. To communicate and forget not is sacrifice God is well pleased with.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BE SLOW TO CONDEMN.

There is a growing tendency among men to condemn every one whose views and opinions do not coincide with their own preconceived notions. In order to strengthen their position and secure public sympathy in their favor, they do not scruple to assert that those who differ from them are influenced by improper and mercenary motives. All this is wrong. No man has a legal right, and much less a moral right, to assert that those who do not think as he does are corrupt and venal. Many of the petty quarrels and bickerings that disturb society and mar the peace of communities, have their origin in this reprehensible practice. It is always safe and fair to presume that every man is doing what he believes is right, until he demonstrates by his conduct that he is no longer deserving of that confidence.

When a man performs an action or expresses an opinion that does not meet their approval, such men immediately cast about them for some sinister motive that controlled and compelled him to do as he had done. Blinded by prejudice and maddened by vexation, they sieze hold of circumstances, drag them upon the witness stand, and torture them until they tell just what they want them to tell, instead of permitting them to reveal the truth. Many a fair, stainless character has been blasted and ruined in this way. It is a matter of astonishment, too, that people will devour with so much greediness stories prejudicial to the probity and morality of others. It is better to be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath, and slow to judge, or imagine or believe evil in others. Judge not lest ye be judged. Selected.

OCEAN GARDENS.

It seems to me that I'm learning faster than ever I feared before. Perhaps it's on account of being helped by so many girls and boys. One of the latest things I've found out is that there are gardens in the ocean.

The paths are made of smooth, white sand, winding about among beds of rocks. The plants are delicate waving things of every graceful shape, and of beautiful colors,—red, yellow, pink, purple, green, brown and grey. Among them the coral branches wave, while out and in, around and between them all, silently swim the glittering forms of fishes as wonderful as the flowers.

A solemn sort of gardens must these be, with never a voice to be heard in them. I think I like best the gardens of the land, made glad by the voices of children and birds. On the land, at least one would not be likely to mistake an animal for a plant.

In the ocean gardens, many of the things that look like plants are really animals, and we (if we could get at them) might try to pluck a pretty orange colored or puple blossoms, and find out that we are breaking a piece from an animal, which would be unpleasant to both parties.—From "Fact in-the-Pulpit," St. Nicholas for August.

HYDROPHOBIA.

Dr. J. C. Dalton, formerly Sanitary Superintendent of New York City, has written a letter to the Board of Health containing suggestions with a view to diminish hydrophobia. He says that the rabid dog is not afraid of water, and is by no means always aggressive or violent in the early stages of the disease. If people see a dog in cool weather willing to drink, and not particularly ferocious in his manner, they are not afraid to approach him; and yet he may be capable of inflicting a fatal wound, or even of communicating the disease by licking an abraded spot on his master's hand.

Another frequent and serious mistake is this: As soon as a vagrant dog has bitten any one, the first impulse of the bystanders is to kill him. But when this has been done the only possible means of knowing whether the dog were really mad is lost, and several months must elapse before the injured person can be relieved of anxiety from this source. It is evident that such a dog should never be killed at once, but he should be secured and kept under observation for a few days till his symptoms are fully developed. In the large majority of cases it would turn out that the disease was not hydrophobia.

The doctor adds that when a person is bit by a suspicious dog the wound should be cauterized by a stick of "lunar caustic," or "nitrate of silver." The stick of caustic should be sharpened to a pencil point, introduced quite to the bottom of the wound, and held in contact with every part of the wounded surface until it is thoroughly cauterized and insensible. This destroys the the virus by which the disease is communicated.

MARRIED.

Beach—Rily.—In the Clover Creek Church July 12, by J. W. Brumbaugh, Mr. George Beach to Miss Mary Rily, all of Blair Co., Pa.

DIED.

McKracken.—In Smithville, Wayne Co., Ohio, on July 2nd, 1874, Sister Maria McKracken, born, Nov. 1st, 1795, aged 78 years, 8 months and one day.

Although her mental powers had become weakened in her advanced age, yet her faith in her Savior was strong until death, and bore her joyfully across the river. Funeral preached in the Hill Church, Smithville.

Hostetler.—Catharine, wife of Jonathan Hostetler died July 5th, 1874, aged 32 years, two months, and 3 days.

The mother and her infant babe were inclosed in the same coffin and buried in the same grave. We hope they may not be separated when Christ shall welcome his blessed to the joy of his everlasting kingdom. The deceased was a consistent member of the Amish Mennonite Church of Wayne Co., Ohio. She leaves a sorrowing husband and three small children to mourn their great loss. Funeral discourse in German by her Pastor, John K. Yoder, and in English by the writer. E. L. Yoder.

Clingenpeel.—In the Mexico, Ind., church, mother Nathaniel Clingenpeel, aged 81 years, 10 months, and 4 days. Funeral by the Brethren to a large concourse of people.

The subject of this notice was born in the State of Maryland and raised in the State of Virginia, in Franklin and Augusta Counties. He moved from there to Preble Co., Ohio in 1824, and in 1836 to Miami Co., Ind., where he permanently resided till his death.

He was a member of the church of the Brethren for upwards of 55 years. He lived up to the order consistently, both in prosperity and adversity. He was very temperate in his habits in life, never using any tobacco in any way, nor spirits, only for medical purposes.

At his death he had six children and thirty-seven grand children living, nearly all belong to the Church. Also seventeen great-grand-children, some nearly grown up. He lived to see all of his brothers and sisters pass away. J. B. Lair.

Cover.—On June 27th, 1874, Clarissa Cover, aged 51 years, 4 months and 11 days.

The Sister had been confined to her room and a great part of the time to her bed, for the last 10 or 12 years. Now her afflictions are ended, and as she has suffered with Him she shall also rest with Him. She leaves a husband and a family of children to mourn their loss. Funeral discourse at the Beech Grove meeting-house.

LITERATURE.

—Send any sum, from 25 cts. to one dollar or more to Geo. Trask, Fitchburg, Mass. and you will receive specimen of the Anti-Tobacco Journal, a most valuable periodical, and some sheet tracts, that when circulated may do much good to those addicted to the "Popular Sin."

—There are many monthlies come to our office that afford pleasant pastimes, and some instruction, but there are a few that come regularly laden with sound instructive reading, just such as should be known in every family in the land. First and foremost among those are the Phrenological Journal and Science of Health. They, together, make a full team, the first—treating on the functions of the mind and its relation to the body, and the other, on the body and its relation to the mind. O, how we wish every body would consent to know more about self and not so much about every body else. These periodicals are based on purely scientific principles and are sacredly free from the popular serials and sensational trash. Published by S. R. Wells, 389, Broadway, New York.

—For the young, much is written, and many very handsome papers are published for their special benefit, but after all there are but few that fully cover the large field that is open to the youthful mind, the truth is the two thirds of all that is published is downright fiction, telling many little tales about solitly little boys and girls, little saints and little angels that never had an existence in the world nor never will. This is a stulling process which can never result in a healthy growth. There is enough truth in the world to interest and instruct our youth and we are pleased to recommend only such papers as rule everything else out.

We are favorably impressed with St. Nicholas, because contains a greater amount of this kind of reading than many others. The young mind needs development and then religion. This St. Nicholas is trying to do by very ingeniously combining history, morality, and religion together. "A Garden Party of Wild Animals," "Some Missionary Insects," Wood Carving,"&c. in St. Nicholas, for August, are interesting papers and are calculated to instruct and elevate the young mind. Published by Scribner & Co. New York, at $3,00 per year.

—The American Agriculturist for July contains more practical hints and suggestions than can be found in any other periodical, and each one of which is worth more than the yearly subscription price to any farmer. No one having an acre of ground or even a garden, or flower plot, to cultivate, should be without this help.

—Hearth and Home, that favorite family paper formerly published by Orange Judd, Co. and now consolidated with the Weekly Graphic, and published by the Graphic Company New York. The Co's facilities, for reproducing the best of engravings, and or publishing a really good paper are so perfect that we would reasonably expect great things of it. As yet it has not come up fully to our expectations but it is improving, and may yet fairly rival the other illustrated papers whose laurels are yet fresh and green.

GROWTH OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.—The following statements of facts in relation to the growth of the Roman Catholic Church are creditable to the zeal and energy of that body and eloquent in their lessons to Protestan's of all denominations:

—The thirtieth anniversary of the parish of SS Peter and Paul, Brooklin, and the twenty-sixth of the foundation of the church, was celebrated in Brooklyn, E. D., on Sunday, July 5th. Father Malone preached a sermon on the invincibility of the Catholic Church. Towards the close, in making allusion to the growth of Catholicity in Brooklyn, he said: "Thirty years ago there were but 400 Catholics in this district and two churches—One for the Germans and the other for the English-speaking people. Young in years and from the seminary, I was charged with the responsibility of this parish. There was great poverty and Catholics were few and friendless. At the commencement, after all my labor, and after exhausting all my resources, I secured $1,300 with which to begin this Church. This is the first church built by Mr. Keily, and has been the harbinger of nearly 400 magnificent temples in these United States erected by that distinguished architect. In the Catholic Almanac I counted twenty-five churches within the limits originally assigned to me by the late lamented Archbishop Hughs. The last of these is the Church of St. Sylvester.

The Presbyterian church raised $618,000 for foreign missions last year, being the largest sum ever raised in one year for this purpose by any single denomination.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $0.60. Four copies, $1.50. Sent post-paid. Address

POETRY.

The Land For Which I Sigh.

BY WESLEY.

Though brightly fall the sunbeams,
Upon terrestrial soil,
Dispersing gloomy shadows,
Relaxing sorrow's coil:
Yet far beyond these valleys,
With pleasure I descry,
Arrayed in wondrous beauty,
The land for which I sigh.

I see the smiling verdure,
Which crowns thy fertile hills,
I hear the soothing murmurs,
Imparted by thy rills:
My soul, aglow with ardor,
Impatiently would fly,
To roam thy fields forever,
Oh, land for which I sigh.

There fruit of luscious flavor,
Fast ripen to the taste,
There flowers bloom, whose petals
By thorns are ne'er defaced:
What e'er can please the seeker,
Or win the anxious eye,
Is found within thy borders,
Oh land for which I sigh.

But patience claims my service,
And bids me be content
Until the welcome message
Across the gulph is sent,
Which dims Celestial beauties
To mortals searching eye:
Then shall I greet thy valleys,
Oh land for which I sigh.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE BIBLE.

Looking at the Bible as a historical fact, aside from its claim of orgin in heaven or of inspiratioo, we are made to wonder at its march in the world, and what a potent element it is in the affairs of humanity. All other books sink into insignificance in comparison with this Book of books. Even infidels must acknowledge that it evidently, so far, is a fact that the Bible is the most marvelous, stupendous, and influential book in the history of the world, in providential protection and prosperity in its march, as an agent of its kind, it has no other to compare with it. Let us look at some facts touching its influence and career. In all probability it was the first book ever printed in types—such was the case in England, Germany and where ever the art of priuting originally spread. And to-day it keeps pace with civilization, being the first book published by heathen nations upon the dawning of light. The Bible and type go hand in hand traversing the habitable globe, in almost every instance being the first book published by the natious. In point of circulation it is so far ahead that to make a comparisoa with other books is scarcely a comparison at all. Much has been said about the almost "unprecedent" circulation of some other books—books published in half a dozen or more languages, the publication of some reaching even to one or two millions. What comparison is that to the Bible which has been published in over one hundred tongues or dialects; and as to circulation, one single country—Great Britain—has issued more than eight million copies per year. In our country the annual circulatioo of the Bible supercedes all other books taken together. The matter contained in any other one book is only known to a mere few when taking the civilized world into computation, but there are but few that have not some knowledge or acquaintance with the Bible or its contents.

In point of how the Bible has affected and influenced the world, we notice it has in a great measure a close connection with the five arts, sculpture, music and poetry. The leaven of the Bible has, in a most wonderful manner, worked its way into the literature of the civilized world. Even those that have no faith in the Bible spice their books with scraps from the Bible, and those quotations are the most interesting part of their books. In our government and law, is engrafted, in a great measure, the principles of right and justice found in the Bible. The Bible is the foundation stone upon which civilization stands. A single glance at the history and influeoec of the Bible must convince anyone that it is as a medicine of influence, a tremendous and marvelous fact. The more we look at it in history and influence the more we see of its greatness, and the more foolish will appear the idea of its being the work of man. No other book than the Bible has such an importance in publication as to require immense buildings solely for that purpose. No other book has gained such favor as to bring millions into the hands of societies for the purpose of a free distribution. In the history of the world the Bible stands as the world's Book. It stands far above any other book or publicatioo in power and influence. Take away the Bible and its iofluence and the great fabric of our moral civilization must crumble. Society, socially, would be robbed of that potent power that makes life tolerable. And once destroy the iofluence of the Bible, and we destroy the essence of our security for virtue, morality, and worth. Once let go the bands of Bible security and we fall into the pit of immorality, degredation, and brutality.

The Bible as we have glanced at it as a matter of history, power, and influence apart from its spiritual significance is a fact not be winked at. Men may despise the Book, nevertheless they must admit it to be a miracle of power. By its power and influence the society of a world is shaped, and, indirectly, it is the stepping stone to prosperity and greatness in the ascending scale of humanity in this universe. The Bible is ours above all other books to shape our ends here. But when we conceive in a more important point, that our adherence to the Bible rests upon the fact that it is the book of Divine truth—the Book of God—we are more deeply impressed with its powerful influence. Infidels may mock at our words, and laugh at the spiritual or divine claims of the Bible, yet they must see its providential mission has successes beyond any human invention, that is, it has an unequaled hold on human nature, and substantially has possession of the world. You may search the wide world over and no other book or code of morals can be found that will give such comfort in distress and such potent remedies in affliction, such strength in weakness, such light in darkness, such peace in a storm, such happiness in trouble, such richness in poverty, such raiment in nakedness, such fortitude in trials, such hope in life, and such life in death, as faith in the Bible of divine truth. How many thousands have drank of the waters of life flowing from God through the means of Bible truths and have passed away! They thirsted, were filled, and shall never thirst again. Oh, the multitude that have passed over the wind-tossed and troubled sea of life guided by the star of truth and landed safely in the harbor of eternal rest. Take all books disconnected entirely from Bible truths, pile them together, dilute, and extract the essence of good from them, and yet the whole mass would not be equal to the power of one ray of salvation from the Bible. To-day the Bible is the power of faith in God. Faith in God the power that entwines the cords of love around the human heart—the tower of strength that upholds christian union—the power that dispels hatred and malice and bids the smiles of love to shed a halo of glory around. Where, Oh where! shall we find such consolation as in the blessed Bible, the antidote for sin, sorrow, and disappointment. Take away all else and give me the Bible and I may have a hope of glory in eternity. Give me all else and take away the Bible, and life will be a bewildering dream with a dismal awakening.

God pity the soul that hath not faith in the Bible! Away with human philosophy that would reason away the Bible of divine truth. The overwhelming evidence as to the Bible being the book of God is such that to doubt it is a sin great enough to weigh a soul down to everlasting perdition. It needs no other evidence to prove its divine origin, than those that hang around it, clothing it in the habiliments of heaven's livery. Of all the wonders in the world, the Bible is the most wonderful, most powerful and impressive. A combination of miracles culminating in one grand and sublime miracle of God's might, power and love. A mirror of divinity, reflecting heaven, earth, and hell. The greatest and most magnificent display of God's revelation to men. The world of divinity that revolves in the moral heavens, baptized in the sheen of God's glory. The realm for earthly saints, the way penciled out by the fingers of God that we may escape from the shades of death, and climb to the glorious upper world of love, light, and eternal joys. The Bible! the Bible, precious Zion from the diadem of God's glory! Oh! may I love it while I live, and love it when I come to die.

J. S. FLORY.

Buffalo, Col.

Judge Not.

"Judge not, that ye be not judged." He who spake these words was wise above all others; and well would it be for his children to heed the warning voice of that dear Savior, coming down to them through the lapse of intervening ages, teaching his little flock the blessed doctrine of forbearance and patience with all men. When we see actions in others that look wrong to us, let us remember, that "charity thinketh no evil," and we are not to be their judges. We know little of the outward circumstances surrounding them, or the influences brought to bear upon their conduct; nothing of the inward temptations, the heart-struggles, they may have to contend with. How chary, then, should we be of censuring them; for what we would condemn as reprehensible may be unavoidable necessity, or, viewed in another light, may seem right to others. There is sometimes a very fine dividing line between right and wrong; let us each, and all, act as our conscience may dictate, not as our self-interest would lead us; and leave the rest with God. We are all short-sighted beings, and the best of us are liable to err, being very apt to take that view of any case that will best promote our own interests. With our own faults we can never be too severe, but we ought always to think with consideration of those of others, remembering that we are all little enough deserving of the mercy and kindness shown us by our Heavenly Father. If we do not follow the divine example, and let judgement be tempered with mercy, how can we expect to escape the more just wrath of an unerring God? Let us daily ponder these words in our hearts, and live by them. "Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."—Selected.

PURITY AND PEACE.

"Anything for peace." "We do not want any difficulty." "Anything rather than have a fuss." Such are some of the pleas of time-servers and chicken-hearted leaders, who, to avoid reproach, retain position, or secure the praise of men, consent to whitewash, and cover, and conceal, and tolerate sins, errors, and wrongs, against which they pour forth their earnest protest in behalf of truth and righteousness, and their indignant rebuke against craft and iniquity.

Their policy is wrong and ineffectual. Their efforts fail, and deserve to fail. They sell out truth and principle for place and pelf, and the peace that they patch up usually ends in the fiercest warfare. Their daubing with untempered mortar is vain; the wall they have builded falls, and they are buried in its ruins.

"If we publish this we shall have a fuss," said an editor to one who importuned him to admit to his columns a stern rebuke of error and false doctrine which was being spread on every side.

"Don't you know that you have got to have 'a fuss,' and the sooner you have it the less you will have of it?" was the instant reply.

But the man who feared 'a fuss' had his way, and the first he knew he was tumbled neck and heels out of his place, his chair was filled by an advocate of the very notion that he had feared to attack, and mischief was done such as only the day of judgement can reveal, in the spread of error, which has since been repudiated by some of those who were foremost in its advocacy, but who are powerless to undo the damage which they have inflicted.

There is no peace to the wicked, and there is no peace to be made with wickedness. God has sent his servants into this world to fight the fight of faith, not to make leagues with Amalek; to weild the sword of the Spirit, not to enter into treaties with the Canaanites, nor to wink at their abominations. God will never make bargains with sin nor Satan, and Satan will never keep promises with God nor man, no matter what he may agree to. Crafty men may patch up compromises, besmear each other with lying compliments, and flatter Christians into agreements and concessions, but all treaties between good and evil, between right and wrong, are without authority on the part of God, and without force on the part of Satan. Whenever Christians trade with the Devil, they get cheated. No matter what the terms are, no matter how fair the understanding is, no matter how good a bargain Satan makes, the result is ever the same. Whoever does business with the Devil is sure to get "beat." He is too shrewd for mortals to deal with; he cannot be conquered with his own weapons; there is but one way, do right, make no bargains, stand firm as a rock, have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, resist evil, and trust in God. The safe way is the right way; first pure and then peaceable. This is wisdom's way; the way of the wisdom that cometh from above. Do not be deceived with pleas for peace and harmony. Do not mistake cowardjee for long-suffering. You may abandon your rights, but you must not sell out the Lord's. You may yield your preferences for peace's sake but you must not barter away God's eternal truth; nor consent to sin or wrong in any form. Do right, or do nothing. Have no parley with the Devil; no fellowship with his works; no compromise with wrong, or craft, or guile. Live so that crafty schemers cannot use you, and dare not undertake it. Do nothing that you are ashamed of. Do nothing in secret, nor by craft, which you dare not do openly and avowedly. And do not try to evade the just consequences of your own acts; but accept them manfully, bear the blame that belongs to you, and seek to do better in the future, finding strength in the integrity of an honest heart and a righteous purpose.

This may cost something, but any other course will eventually cost much more. When once your feet have found rest upon the eternal rock of truth and righteousness, you have fought a hundred battles in one, and gained a victory that will give you joy forever. Men who deal in tricks and lies, in frauds and jobbery, will be repelled from your very presence, and will slink away into darkness with their craftiness and guile, for you will be known as one who cannot be bought nor flattered, and the tempters will not even dare to approach you with their bribes.

"I have heard," said Senator Sumner one day, "that there is corruption in Washington. I have lived in Washington many years, and have seen no corruption." Once out of the region of fogs, jobs, hypocrisies, lies, and villianies, and you have sunshine and peace. But there is no peace possible with lies, and sins and devilries covered up at the bottom. The house is on the sand, and it will surely fall. Wickedness ends in war. It has been said, "There never was a lie but what ended in a broken head for somebody." Sooner or later the dire result is reached, the bitter fruit is borne. The hail shall sweep away the refuges of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding places, and the storms of judgment shall batter in to eternal ruin, every structure of human pride and hope which has been founded upon craft and falsehood, upon trickery and deception. But with truth as a foundation, the superstructure is secure; for "the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever." Isa. 32: 17.—The Christian.

Take Up Your Cross.

Then said Jesus unto his disciples if any man will come after me let him deny himself take up his cross and follow me.
Matthew, 16: 24.

There were in the days of our Saviour those who were willing to follow him as long as there was no cross to bear, and the denial of self was not required. We learn that even among the great there were many that believed on him. But, fearing they might lose the praise of men, they did not confess him openly for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God. They would not humble themselves so much as to take up their cross and obey that prophet of whom Moses said, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, unto him ye shall hearken." Deut. 18: 15. They despised the cross of the meek and lowly Jesus, therefore they would not hearken unto his command. They claimed to be followers of Moses, though in reality they were not, for Moses wrote of Christ but they rejected his writings

We have many people in this day and age of the world that are no less superstitious than the Jews of old, for they loved the praise of men more than the cross of Christ, and try to follow the Saviour in their own way and manner and so pass along through the world with ease, having no cross to bear and no denial of self to make. They are like Micah who said, "Now know I that the Lord will do me good," seeing I have a levite to my priest. But alas, for this poor man of Israel, soon there came along a company of Danites who stole away his god of gold in whom he trusted. So will it be with those who think because they belong to some church the Lord is with them, and they can float along through life and dress in all the fashions of a vain and wicked world, and observe only such of the commandments as in their estimation, requires no cross and call every other commandment of the New Testament nonessential. They seem to forget that God is an unchangeable God, and every command in the law of Moses had to be strictly observed else the people met with the sore displeasure of God who always punished disobedient and spared the guiltless. This proud spirit that works in man to persuade him to disregard the law of God, and set up inventions of his own, believe that the same will be accepted of him and made to despise the cross of Christ, is from the devil who is continually seeking our ruin. O that man would consider where this spirit is from that tempts them to despise the cross of Christ. This same spirit worked in Saul, king of Israel, who when he was little in his own estimation, was chosen to be king of the children of God, but after being placed in this high position become exalted and rebelled against the laws of God and took his own way instead of the word of God. The result was, God took the kingdom from him and gave it to David, who was of an humble and contrite spirit, and who prosecuted the work of God according to his will.

Then dear reader, let us become very humble and take up the cross, and follow Jesus, then may we be seated with him upon his throne and wear a crown that fadeth not away. Jesus has said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me. I am meek and lowly in heart and ye shall find rest to your soul, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Sinners come to Christ and learn of him. The obedient realize great joy in bearing the yoke of the Savior. Take up your cross and follow the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. But remember you can have no access to a throne of grace until you comply with the conditions laid down in the word of God. O, think of the value of your soul. What would you not give in exchange for it? Worlds could not purchase it. You have the power to save it from eternal burnings, and all it will cost you is a little self denial for which you will be paid many thousand times. You will see much pleasure in this world and in the world to come eternal bliss and happiness, which is far better than the sinful pleasure of this world which lasts a season only and all is gone. Paul that great apostle was not ashamed to bear his cross, saw pleasure in these "light afflictions" as he called them, and which he said, "Work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." He was not afraid of self-denial, but rejoiced when he could sacrifice self to the glory of his Master. Paul lived in an age when there were persecutions on every side, and was made a prisoner as an evil doer, and taken from place to place and tried before the unjust, who often had him severely punished! Yet in all this he rejoiced for he knew it would add much to his happiness in the future world. Then if Paul could endure so much for the sake of his Master, cannot we, who live in the age of Christian liberty, sacrifice a little for the sake of our Redeemer, and for the salvation of our souls. One who never failed to perform his promise to the children of men, will also perform his promises to us. He promised through his Son that if we would take up our cross and follow him and deny ourselves of all the vain pleasures of this wicked world our souls would be saved. But on the other hand if we do not deny ourselves of the vain amusments of the world, and engage in all the superfluities of life, adorning ourselves with the vain fashions of the world which is highly esteemed among men, but it is an abomination in the sight of God, we shall loose our souls and be hurled down to perdition to suffer the reward of sin. There, if we have disregarded the law of God we shall take up our abode with the damned to suffer everlasting misery. Reader may God grant that this may not be your or my lot. Let us come out from the world and be a seperate people, obey the commands of the Savior, and when the great judge shall come to call his people home we shall stand with them on mount Zion where we shall enjoy the company of angels, and ever be with the Lord whom we have loved and served in this lower world.

GOD'S PURPOSES.

"For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ." Thess. 5: 9.

Brief as is the sentence above, it is yet very comprehensive. Therein we discover what is not God's purposes, and what also is his purpose. And at the same time we have indicated to us, the manner of its accomplishment. First then, it is declared that he "hath not appointed us to wrath," yet there are many who effect to believe it, and act upon that principle; and there are others who do not believe it, and also act as though they did believe it. In either case the result with such will be the same. They become "vessels of wrath" filled for destruction, and destruction will be their end, and that from the peaceful presence of the Lord.

Such being the result of a sinful life, the subject of it, dare not say he or she was appointed thereto, as the above Scripture teaches the reverse. But lest any should say that the passage at the head of this article is a mere assertion unsustained by proof, if such proof is not always found in connection with such declarations, they are yet to be found elsewhere, and almost anywhere in God's word.

I would especially refer the reader to the first chapter of Romans, where he or she can find the mode and manner used in that day, and even at this period of time, by which men and women fit themselves as instruments, or vessels of destruction. God does not do it.

Having then briefly shown what God does not do, let us next proceed to show what he does do, the authority for which is also found in the verse at the head of this article, "He hath appointed us to salvation" And what is implied by the word "salvation" in this connection? Not evidently a salvation from one of the many dangers we are exposed to in this life, but a salvation both present and prospective, even beyond this vale of tears. Its value, that is, this salvation which we are appointed to by God himself, can only be partly determined from the great interest manifested by parties (so to speak) who are not benefited at all by our salvation.

For instance, angels are not promoted in glory as a consequence of our salvation, yet our salvation affords a source of rejoicing to them. We should not have been appointed to this salvation, if God had not been concerned for our elevation from deep degredation to which we were sunk by sin. Hear what his Son says on this point: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

This last Scripture quoted sustains all three of the points made in the verse at the head of this article. And I have no doubt the apostle Paul obtained his view of the subject from this, and similar passages of Scripture which enabled him to say, "God hath not appointed us unto wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ."

Assuming then that the great apostle to the Gentiles knew what he affirmed to be troth, and taking it for granted that we assent thereto—assent to what,—why that God has not appointed us to wrath, but to salvation—we will then notice the means he has instituted for such salvation, "by our Lord Jesus Christ." Yes, so says the apostle Paul, yet I would like to know the precise means, say you. I answer, I am not able to tell you precisely. Here is ample scope for faith, "without which we cannot please God." But we may venture to give an opinion. We learn from the Scriptures, that Christ redeemed us, hence we were lost, lost to God I apprehend. Our redemption was not procured by corruptible things, such as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, hence we are no longer our own, but we are Christ's, his by right of purchase, having paid the highest imaginable price for us. He now becomes our chief shepherd, willing and desirous to lead us, assuring us that he will (after leading us through this wilderness world) lead us through the valley of the shadow of death. This you must believe. To hesitate, or doubt, his ability to fulfil his promise, will be fatal to your spiritual welfare. Remember you have been redeemed, whoever you may be, no matter what you are now, you have been purchased. Have you given evidence on your part that you wished to throw off the government of Him who purchased you? And having discovered it, regretting your conduct, hear him addressing you, "Come to me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Are you anxious to know whether you are related to him. Hear him again, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, sister and mother." Do you discover that with your best efforts you are not what you ought to be, and wish to know what to do. As Peter says, "obey the truth" more fully, as there by primitive christians purified themselves. Say you, I thought we were purified by the Spirit. Even so, the Savior says his words are spirit and truth. Be diligent to make your calling sure. EMMANUEL SLIFER.

Passing Away.

All things earthy are rapidly passing away, nothing lasting, nothing durable, and will soon fall into oblivion and be forgotten. This world with all its pomp and show, with all its grandeur and magnificence will pass away. But there is something within us, an innate principle which will live when these poor perishing bodies shall have crumbled into dust and become food for worms. This world may attract, it may cause us often to neglect duty and lavish our thoughts upon its allurements, but its pleasures and sinful gratifications will not make us happy. True they may engage the mind for a season, but they will not last, they'll pass away. There is something higher, more noble, above these earthly scenes that claims our attention, something that is calculated to satisfy the mind, and that will remain when all things earthly shall have vanished from sight.

Passing away is written upon every leaf and flower. We behold it in all the scenes of life. Time passes, oh, so swiftly, and with it all things pass away. Truly a few short months ago we were in the midst of stern winter. Cold and piercing winds howled around us, and the ground was covered with snow, but where is it now?. It gradually passed away. Spring came with all her loveliness and cheered us with her bright sunshine and balmy days, with beautiful flowers and green verdure, but these scenes too are gone, they have passed away. Summer is here with the bright burning sun beaming upon us, everything seems to have changed, and soon will be no more. A little while, and the cool winds of Winter will again visit us and then will pass away. Thus it is in life, all will pass away. So with us, these bodies upon which we lavish so much care to decorate, all for pride and show, will soon, one by one fall victims to the cruel hand of death and pass away. We cannot always remain here, many are passing away all around us and are known no more. But there is something lasting, something that will not pass away. 'Tis the blessed climes of Heaven, the scenes of immortal glory. There are pleasures that last through all eternity. This beautiful land we can all possess if we relinquish our claims in this probationary state and labor with zeal for the Master, where there are joys forevermore. In that beautiful land no trouble exist, no trials and temptations as are common in this vale of tears. No sickness will be there, no pain nor death, and God Himself has promised to wipe all tears. Truely a beautiful home: Oh, who would not desire an inheritance there? Christian reader, are you laboring for this home? If so you can welcome the hour, you will pass from this world—pass from earth to Heaven. May we all be more impressed with the solemn truth, we are passing away. W. A. CLARK.

DECEIT.

SELECTED BY KATE BRENIZER.

If there is one law above all others written in wisdom—a word that I would trace as with a pen of fire upon the unspoiled heart of a child, 'tis this word deceit. Could the curtain of human experience be rolled back and its hidden things be disclosed to us, what a picture of wretchedness, misery, and woe would present itself to our view, caused by the foul fiend of deceit. We should start back in horror from the contemplation. How many noble spirits, and warm hearts, with hopes encouraged for a time and blasted; affection nourished for a while and then cast off as a worthless thing blighted and wasted. How many hearts that once throbbed warmly with hope's bright spirit have been repulsed and chilled by its withering power. How many gentle and sensitive saints have sunk under its cankering influence and gone down to untimely graves. How many? let the page of human life record the sad and heart-sickning answer. The spirit of deceit has shed its blighting and destroying influence over every walk of life. It has entered the sacred precincts of the domestic sanctuary and enshrouded in darkness and gloom the home once joyous and radiant with those smiling cherubs of life, hope and love. It has polluted with its poisonous breath the social hearth and destroyed the fair fabric of connubial happiness. Ah! and woman, who was endowed and made susceptible of noble and generous feelings, with a gentle and sensitive spirit, a frank and confiding nature—even she to whom we look for all that is pure and lovely, ennobling and exalting, whose heart should be the seat of innocence, of virtue, of truth and sincerity—even she (alas! that she should thus degrade herself (has drank of the poisonous draught, sullied the fair purity of her character, polluted the fountains of her soul, and darkened her heart. It has taken from her the most powerful charm, the loviest and most winning trait of her character, that heart-trusting faith, and frank simplicity, that confiding trustfulness, that involuntarily win our respect and love, thus rendering the fairest features repulsive and revolting, and the sweetest smile sickning to the heart, for who will trust to the loviest smile, who will drink in the sweet and musical tones of kindness from the sweetest lips, when beneath them may lurk the poison of deceit, the dark spirit of malice and cold selfishness. Oh!! rather let the features be set in cold and marble-like rigidity, rather let the stern and passionless demeanor of the stoic enshroud them, than light them up with the pale glow of hypocrisy and deceit. Oh! let us avoid, as we would the break of the deadly sirocco, the foul fiend deceit, it is the Bodan Upas of the moral world, diffusing blight and misery where it exists. If it has found a place in our bosoms, let us banish it as the bane of all earthly happiness, ere its poison hath diffused itself o'er our hearts. Cling to the spirit, and bind round the white and spotless robe of sincerity and truth. Make it the ruling and guiding star of thy life, and it shall encircle thee with the radient light of moral purity and loviness, a light from whose searching rays the degraded votary of vice shall shrink in shame; a light that shall win the respect, esteem, and love of the pure and good; a light that shall insure to thee that happiness is the blessed meed of the pure in heart; a light that shall guide thee to the blissful and celestial mansions of heaven.

THE USE OF TOBACCO.

Boys, heed these words: Westward the smoke takes its way. True civilization is growing away from vices as true reform is growing away from idols. We must make men upon modern principles, not upon modern habits. This age has splendid colleges, churches, schools; splended ideas, hopes, wishes; but a more disgusted set of young men never looked the world in the face without a blush.

If there is a young man who does not use tobacco, he is a blessing to his home, to his town, and to the whole world. He is a man to be proud of; he is a noble example, a rebuke to the most filthy, senseless habit of the day. He should be the boast of all true men and the pride of all true women. It is not a little thing to live in this age of tobacco, cigars and pipes, and say to the tempter "Fineeut," "Honey-dew," or "Meerschaum," "Get thee behind me, satan!" It is a great good thing to do, and he who does it for his race a brave, kingly thing, which is as sure to bring a reward as it is to give a blessing.

We want to call smoking just what it is—dreadful small business of a man. It is injurious, silly and nasty. It is bad for one who smokes, and terrible for the one who has to breathe the smoke.—Young Folks' Rural.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

Diana Muloch, than whom no purer thinker ever lived, thus pertinently addresses herself to young girls in her book, called, "A Woman's Thoughts about Woman." "Young ladies, 'tis worth a grave thought—what if called away at eighteen, twenty, or thirty, the most of you would leave behind you when you die? Much embroidery, doubtless; various pleasant, kindly, illegible letters; a modest store of good deeds and a cart load of good intentions. Nothing else—save your name on a tombstone, or lingering for a few more years in family or friendly memory. 'Poor dear!—what a nice lively girl she was!' For any benefit accruing through you to your generation, you might as well never have lived at all."

Must this be said of our girls? —Young Folks' Rural.

SABBATH MORNING.—How we long for the return of the sacred hour! The cares and toils of another week have passed away and we again welcome the day of rest. Many will this morning go up to the house of the Lord to worship, where prayers will ascend like sweet incense to the hill of Zion. How sweet the hour, and how precious to the soul while sitting under the droppings of the Sanctury! Ah, were it not for the Sabbath, had we no stated places of worship where we can repair, apart from the noise and confusion of the busy world, our lives would indeed be dreary ones. These seasons are bright spots in our lives and should be highly estimated by us as they are intended to fit and qualify us to live, and also prepare us for the solemn reality of death.—W. A. Clark.

"Study to be Quiet."

A calm, peaceful frame of mind is what comparatively few persons have. Even trifling annoyances disturb and excite them. There are those, however, a happy few, who possess their souls in tranquil patience and unruffled equanimity. They behave and quiet themselves "as a child that is weaned of his mother;" they are so far weaned from creature comforts by merging their wills in God's will, that they take whatever comes, resigned and placid. Though provoked they keep their temper, though tried they complain not. We should make it a part of our religion to do so. "I dare no more fret," said John Wesley, "than curse and swear." And relative to persons of a contrary spirit, with whom he was frequently forced to come in contact, he observes: "To have persons at my ears murmuring and fretting at everything is like tearing flesh from my bones. By the grace of God I am discontented at nothing. I see God sitting on the throne and ruling all things."

We grow old more through indolence than through age.

—The Beecher Scandal. The Beecher Scandal is now the all absorbing topic of the religions world. The investigating committee are busily at work and seem determined to ferret the thing from the bottom. One unfair aspect of the investigation is that the committee is wholly made up of Mr. Beecher's avowed friends who it seems are laboring more to screen him than to show justice to both parties. The charges made by Mr. Tilton are certainly very grave and necessitates Mr. Beecher to refu e the whole of them. This he has promised to do and his friends are very sanguine of success. By our next issue we will have the decision of the committee when our readers can expect to hear of the result.

To Tarshish or Ninevah, Which?

Among the minor prophets we have none, the writings of whom strike the reader more forcibly than those of Jonah. Read them once and the whole narrative is so indelibly fixed in the mind that it cannot be forgotten. The call, the preaching, going down to Tarshish, entering the ship, the storm, the casting into the sea, the whale, the deliverance, the preaching and "Jonah's Gourd" are all way pests that leads the mind right along and makes the whole history as familiar as some household story. But in this short narrative is contained great truths and important lessons. Of the history of Jonah we have but little, so little that some overwise Bible students have taken the liberty to deny the authenticity of the whole account. But this cannot be done without impeaching the truthfulness of the New Testament Scriptures, "For as Jonas was a sign to the Ninevites so also shall the Son of man be to this generation."

The history is highly symbolical and there is contained in it, a hidden prophecy. He seems to have been one of Israel's ordinary prophets that had as yet never been brought into practical use, and now for the first time perhaps receives a call to "go." But the mission is of such great magnitude that he becomes dumbfounded. "Go ye to the great City, even Ninevah and say: Yet forty days and Ninevah shall be overthrown." Before him was Ninevah, behind him was Tarshish and the great question with him is, to which shall I go? To go to Ninevah will be to face the scorn and derision of the great city and perhaps death, but to go to Tarshish will be to throw away the prophets garb, kiss the common vagrant's lot and accept his position. To do the first is duty, to do the other is self-ease and gratification. He decides on the latter and goes to Tarshish.

In looking over the Church, the world and the work that is being accomplished, we are made to fear that we have, now, many first stage Jonahs. Ninevah has not grown less but on the contrary, the great city has grown fearfully and the command to the Lord's prophets to-day is "go ye into all the world and preach my gospel."

Brother, you are called and where are you going or where are you? Have you too gone down to Tarshish and taken passage in the ship of ease? Have you too thrown aside your high priestly robe and identified yourself with the common herde? If so, think of the great city, of the thousands and millions of precious souls for whom Jesus died, living and dying in the world without ever hearing of the true light. Jonah's commission was an important one, and upon its fulfillment depended the weal or woe of the great City. Their sins were grievous and the cries of the oppressed had already reached the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth and dire retribution was hanging over the doomed City, nothing but a repentance in sackcloth and ashes could save them, and this depended on the truant preacher. But as great as was his responsibility still greater is that of the minister of Jesus Christ. While upon Jonah's preaching depended a temporary catastrophe, upon ours depends eternal life or endless misery. Let us not be deceived in regard to the magnitude and importance of the great and responsible calling. Salvation of the soul is the great object in life, and to it all other objects and engagements must give way. No matter what may be our position or temporary surroundings in life, they cannot excuse us from fulfilling our commission. God's work must be done and if that is entered into faithfully, a way will be opened for us. Tarshish and Ninevah are not set before us as a matter of choice. To go to Ninevah is a duty from which no circumstances in life will excuse us, but to go to Tarshish means, disobedience and rebellion, and for it, God will hold us fearfully responsible. Then, dear brethren, let us examine our position well lest some of us may be found, with Jonah, down in the ship sound asleep, while sinners are starving and dying for the bread of Life which God has given us for distribution.

Judging by the Fruit.

"By their fruits ye shall know them."

As it is in the kingdom of nature, so it is in the kingdom of Grace. If the fruit is good the tree is good, and if the fruit is evil the tree is corrupt. We are not to pass judgment upon any one, yet we may, and indeed it is our duty to judge as to the degree of virtue men possess by their fruits. "Of thorns," saith Christ, "men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes." The fruits which men produce are determined by what they say and do. When men swear and lie and cheat, the fruit is evil and so also the tree. "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is evil." Such persons' fruits indicate very bad hearts. How wicked must the heart of that man be who can calmly and deliberately curse his Maker; and how dishonest and deceptive the heart that can, knowingly, deceive and cheat his fellow man. Again, where persons adorn the body with things that are unnecessary and that are intended only for display, we must conclude that they have a proud heart. Some persons seem to think that the adorning of the body is no indication of pride, but this is surely a mistake, as it is only for display which is not in harmony with the Christian spirit. The Apostle Peter speaks very pointedly in reference to this matter. He says, "Your adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing gold, or of putting on of apparel: But let it be the hidden man of the heart, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." When there is a desire for the outward adornment of the body the fruits of a meek and lowly spirit are not discernable.

The fruits of a proud heart is to make an outward display in any way. Not only is it discernable in dress. Some persons are plainly appareled and yet have very proud hearts. When men think they know more than any one else, and are determined to have their ends accomplished, regardless of the opinions of others, it is the index of a proud heart. Paul, in writing to the Roman brethren, condemns this feeling and says, "I say through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think more highly of himself than he ought to think." An unreasonable high opinion of one's own superiority of judgement, is the fruit of a proud heart, no matter from what source it may be exhibited.

The fruits of pride are also seen in lofty airs. Some persons have a look that indicates pride. David observed this, and it seems to have been especially repulsive to him. "Him that hath a high look and a proud heart I will not suffer."—Psalm 101: 5. Solomon declares also that the Lord hateth a proud look. From these references we think it is evident that the facial expression, or the physical movements may be the index of pride, and this appearance is as repulsive to the Christian as swearing, lying, stealing, or any other vice.

Again when persons are more concerned about the things pertaining to the kingdom of this world than they are about those which pertain to the kingdom of God, the fruits do not indicate that of righteousness. By their fruits, by their actions, by their conversation, ye may judge where they belong. We have heard of Christian professions going to market or attending to some other business away from home, on rainy days in order to economize time but when Sabbath comes and they should go up to the house of worship, if it has even the appearance of rain they are afraid to venture out. Others again labor hard through the week and on Sabbath are too tired to go to church. Does not this seem to indicate a greater concern for our pecuniary affairs,—for that meat which perisheth than for that which endureth forever? Surely there is not that hungering and thirsting after righteousness that should characterize the regenerated soul. Jesus says, "Where your treasure is there is your heart also." Does not the fruits indicate that our treasure and heart is in this world? Brethren and sisters let us think of these things.

We may also judge the tree by the nature of the fruit, or the effect which it produces. Evil fruit may injure or kill the body, and so one tree producing evil fruit in the church may injure or impede the progress of the whole church. One cold indifferent member may cause others to become careless. As there is a close alliance and dependence one upon another of the different members of the body so it is in the church of Christ. For a church to prosper all the members should be in a healthy condition bringing forth none other than the fruits of righteousness.

The fruits of righteousness are peaceable. The apostle Paul in exhorting the Hebrew brethren to constancy of faith and patience tells them that "no chastening for the present seems joyous but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness." By peaceable fruit we understand such as will produce no injury,—something that is healthy, invigorating, and life-giving. Hence the fruits of righteousness will not produce discord or jangling; it will have a tendency to promote unity and harmony among the children of God. Let then the fruits of righteousness be seen and felt more amongst us, and although there may be dissentions, yet by right action all may be adjusted to divine acceptance, As long as dissentions are among the people of God, so as to cause party or sectional feelings, judging by the fruits, we must conclude there is something wrong with the trees.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

TO OUR YOUNG READERS.

TO THE BOYS.

For a long time our young readers have been somewhat neglected, not because we do not care for them, but for want of time. Perhaps another reason may be that a great many o you have been attending Sunday School, and there have learned so much that you can afford to do without our service. We hope those of you who do not or cannot attend Sunday School, have godly parents who teach you at home, at any rate, we hope that none of you belong to that class who are called bad boys and bad girls.

There are so many ways of being bad that we feel quite fearful that some of our young readers may be tempted by some of them. That old saying or quotation—we do not know who said it or from where it was quoted,—"Satan always has some mischief for idle hands to do," is equally true with the young as well as with the old, and if you are not kept at something useful, we very much fear that Satan will be offering you some of his little jobs to do, and before you think of it, you will go right to work. Not long since we saw a number of little boys at work for Satan and ugly work it was too. First they ran off from home and gathered together in a little crowd made up of other boys of the same stripe. They organized, or to be more plain, commenced their meeting by telling little stories. This soon turned into quarrelling and that into swearing, and then, to conclude, several bantered to fight. Now, this was all Satan's work, and had those little boys been employed at home, helping mother, weeding the garden or some other useful employment, satan would have been compelled to go somewhere else for hands, or left that ugly little job undone. On the next Sunday we went to the nearest Sunday School, and while there we thought we would look around a little and see if any of that little gathering were present, but not one of them did we see. We suppose they were busy at Satan's work; perhaps gone fishing or on a rampage of general mischief.

The more you work for Satan the more he will have for you to do. Disobeying parents, playing truant, telling stories, swearing, smoking and chewing tobacco, stealing, quarrelling and fighting are all his works and are only done by bad little boys and girls who have nothing else to do. Now, my young readers, please make a note of these little jobs and do not be caught in any of them. Always try to spend your time at something useful. Good works for little boys and girls to do are found anywhere and everywhere. By attending to them you will always be employed and then satan will not trouble you.

THE USE OF MONEY.

Of the uses of mony, there are many ways to dispose of it. When little children first receive a few pennies or a nickel, they little think of parting with their bright plaything, till they get sight of the toyshop, then they soon find that money is not to be prized for itself alone, but what it will buy. Every cent, or five cents that the little girl then gets brings dreams by day and night, of the doll that can open and shut its eyes, and has "sure enough hair."

The little boy hoards up every cent he receives, for marbles, balls and shooting crackers, and that cure for all sorrows of the boys and girls—candy.

After a while the girl gets ashamed to be seen playing with her pretty dolls, and uses all her money to buy finery to make a doll of herself. It is the same with the boy; he thinks it would not look manly to be seen playing with the toys he once prized so highly, so he throws them away, and cigars, a fast horse and fine clothing, are now his pride.

I am sorry to say that in this fast age there are many who throw away their money in drinking saloons and at the gambling table. Yet, among the thoughtless ones, on both sides there are many, who, knowing that the mind is of far greater importance than the body, spend most of their money in such a way as to win admiration, not for their find clothing, but for their knowledge.

When a father gathers up a few hardearned dollars, and sees through them a nice little cottage that he can call home for his loved ones, he feels that money is a great blessing to him. When, at last he can call the wished for prize his own, and the happy faces within it smiles him a welcome greeting home, the heartfelt thanks of all ascend to the Giver of all good, for the blessings they have received through the proper use of money. With what energy they all now labor that they may make their homes, persons and minds, more beautiful, and have some money left to give to those who are in need!

When a poor widowed mother returns home from a hard day's work, with a little money to buy bread and meat for her almost famished little ones, it must seem that money is the greatest blessing; for with it how easily could she obtain comfort and schooling for her dear children, which all her daily toils and nightly prayers cannot now bring them. Let us all hope that her prayers will soon be answered and those who are spending money with a reckless hand, for something which brings them no good, will be touched with pity, and will help to make her and her children happy.

Some hoard up money to count and recount, or deprive themselves of many of the common comforts of life, to buy more land and build larger houses and barns, that they may hear it said of them, as they pass along, "There goes the richest man in this country!" forgetting that death will soon take them from their treasures on earth. They cannot take a dollar of money, nor an acre of land, nor any of their fine buildings with them; and if they have happened in lifetime, to give anything to the poor, it was only that they might be seen of men; they have received their praise from men, but when they come to Heaven's gate, they will find no treasure laid up for them there.

"The mind of men seeketh out many inventions;" but without money they could be put to very little use. With it, the wonderful steam engine takes its long train filled with precious souls and costly goods, swiftly as the wind. If mountains are in the way, tunnels give it passage through; if rivers cross its path, splended suspension bridges, or more solid ones of broad stone piers, bear them far above the rolling waters.

Very grand and wonderful seems the telegraph which carries the news asross the continents and under the seas, with just such lightning as makes the storm terrible. Then there are the steamboats on our rivers, some of them floating palaces, and the great ships on the ocean, with which we carry our own commerce, and become rich and great as a nation; all these are the effects of money, put to a great and good use.

In fact, nothing can be done without money; even the houses we live in, and everything that makes our homes pleasant, the books we read, the clothes we wear, the food we eat, and the very ground we walk on, are ours only by the use of money. Why, then, does the Bible say, "The love of money is the root of all evil?" Just because we should not love money for itself, but prize it for the good we can do with it!—Young Folks' Rural.

Your Sin Will Find You Out.

"Mother mother!" said Mary Jay, running into her mother's room. "I believe I've found out what makes Clinton sick every day. I saw him just now, out in the garden, behind the lilac bushes, with big Fred Saunders and Fred was smoking a cigar."

"Did Clinton have a cigar?" asked her mother.

"No, I didn't see any; I just saw them a minute I guess they didn't see me."

"I will go and see myself."

Saying this Clinton's mother put on her bonnet, and walked out into the garden. There the children stood, in a shady corner, each with a cigar in his mouth, and Clinton with a bundle of matches in his hand.

The two boys who were with him ran when they saw her; but his mother called "Clinton" in a loud voice to stop, so he stood still. He knew he had been doing wrong, and his first impulse was to get rid of the cigar.

What do you suppose he did with it?

It is very strange, but it is true, that people who are caught doing wrong never act as they thought they would if found out. It is as true of grown people as of children. It is very easy for persons to make up their minds if caught in a crime; but strange to say, they seldom do the thing they planned, and most often do the very thing that proves them guilty.

Clinton might have thrown away his cigar, I suppose, before his mother reached him; but instead of that, he thrust it under his belt. He did not do this because he thought it the best plan, or because he thought at all; it was what is called an impulse.

"Clinty," said his mother, "have you a cigar?"

"No," said the little boy. One sin leads to another.

"Clinton," said his mother, solemnly, "is this the truth?"

"No, ma'am, I havn't got any," persisted he; "Fred and Bennie had though."

Just at that minute a little blue smoke came curling from under Clinton's apron just above the belt. He turned pale as he saw a hole burning in his apron, and there was the burnt end of a cigar under it!

Ah, Clinton, your sin found you out.

I will not tell you how Clinton was punished, only you may be sure he did not smoke any more cigars.

"I think he was a silly fellow to put a lighted cigar under his apron!" some child says. "I would have had it better than that!"

No you wouldn't. You do not know what you would have done. Unless you have been a great while learning to decieve, and grow cunning, you would not have been wiser.

When child or man, who is generally honest, commits some sin and wishes to hide it, the very thing he does to hide it quite often becomes the means of his being discovered.

"When you want to sin in safety go where God is not." But since God is in every place, you may be sure your sin will find you out!

Boys, a Word with You.

Are there not obligations laid upon brothers? You are stronger than your sister. Ought you not to spring to her aid if she is doing something difficult or fatiguing? For instance, in house-cleaning there will be pictures to hang, carpets to tack, shades to put up, furniture to move from place to place, and all sorts of back-breaking and back-aching operations for a week or two. Of course "it is not so pleasant for a fellow" to be around in those days, and so a fellow—pardon the expression, but we have heard young gentlemen use it so often—unless he is very manly and unselfish, will be apt to think of engagements out of the house. Let us whisper a secret in your ear. He is a jewel among men, who is never in the way when he is not wanted, and never out of the way when he is. There are a great many little things and big things which a good son and brother can do in domestic emergencies if he only cares to make himself useful. If you live in the country, there is many a lift you can give to the women-folks in the way of carrying in wood, bringing pails of water, and generally lending a hand.

Then, young man, if you are an elder brother, bethink yourself sometimes, that your sister may like to have you take her out, as well as some of the other young ladies of your acquaintance do. Jennie is quite as pretty, quite as well bred, and has quite as many capacities for enjoyment as any other girl of her age. She would be so pleased, if now and then you would invite her to go with you to a lecture or a concert, and you would, if you only tried it, find out that an evening with your sister would, pass as agreeably, and perhaps more restfully, than an evening with any one else, not excepting even the dearest and best girl in the world, whose image is with you like a guardian angel, and whose name you always speak with reverence and regard. —Presbyterian.

A Noble Thought.

Young men! It was like the song of some wonderful bird, and it made the air shine after the sound had passed away; and yet it was just the remark of a brave young man who walked past me one day, arm in arm with a companion.

"Depend upon it, Tom, old St. Edmund, of Canterbury was about right when he said to somebody, work as though you would live forever; live as though you would die to-day.'"

Tom nodded and walked on.—St. Nicholas.

—Our manner is of importance. A kind no is often more agreeable than a rough yes.

A TRIAL OF FAITH.

A SKETCH OF THE LAST DAYS OF YOUNG WOMAN AS RELATED BY HER MOTHER.

About Christmas she came hom to her mother, telling her that she felt as though her time for this life was soon to close and that she would be to bid them all farewell. Her mother knowing that she was not sick, concluded that her mind was troubled and persuaded her to remain a while with her, and then asked her if she wanted a physician. She said, "No; medicine will do no good." Her mother however, being alarmed, sent for him, who, after examining her, said there was nothing wrong except that her mind was somewhat disturbed. Her mother insisted on him to leave some medicine, which he did and then left, when she in obedience to her mother took it, but told her mother not to send for the physician any more, as she had a revelation of her death, and that she must take the parting hand. From that time she began to grow weak and in a few days was unable to nurse her own child. She then took her bed and soon became so feeble that she could not raise her head from the pillow without fainting.

In this weak situation she examined her heart and reflected on her life which was shortly to close, and found that she was not prepared to meet her God. She was made sensible that there were duties required of her in the New Testament, with which she had never complied and becoming uneasy about the salvation of her soul, she confessed her disobedience to the commandments of God and lamented that she had put off her duty until she feared it was too late. But in the midst of her distress, her spirit was revived in the consoling promises of her Savior, "He that cometh to me I will in no wise cast away." Though she was weak in body she was strong in faith and determined to follow Jesus and serve Him in His own appointed way. In order to do this she requested to be baptized by trine immersion. An old minister of the gospel was then sent for but in the meanwhile her request was made public and a Methodist minister hearing of her desire, came and asked permission to speak to her which was granted by her mother, when the following conversation took place:

Minister. "I heard that you wish to be baptized."

Woman. "Yes, that is my desire, and I have sent for one who I believe will baptize me agreeably to the gospel."

Minister. "But have you never been baptized?"

Woman. "I have received in my infancy, what some call baptism, but the Gospel teaches me first to repent, and believe and then, according to the example of Jesus, be baptized in water for the remission of sins."

Minister. You are laboring under an error, woman, if you have been baptized once that is enough, be content ,or there is no difference how or when you were baptized."

Woman. "In such doctrine I can never believe for the gospel teaches me but one way, which is Christ, and him I am bound to follow."

Minister. "Woman, let me give you good counsel in time. You know that you are helpless, you cannot bear to go into the cold water to be baptized and if you do it will prove instant death. I advise you to abandon your strange notions and save your life."

Woman. "Christ has said, he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it unto eternal life. I trust that he who has called me unto obedience is able to give me strength enough to follow him and if I die in the attempt I only die in the act of obedience."

Minister. "By so doing you will destroy your own life which is wrong, sinful and this you may rely on doing if you undertake it."

Woman. "I am not destroying my life when I try to obey the command of God, undertake it I will and you shall know that I shall not die in baptism, for there is a little more work for me to do before I die, though die I will before many more days pass by."

Minister. "I once more repeat by persisting in your present course you will be taking your own life and you will be considered as a murderer.

By this time, a tender hearted mother, who was present and heard the whole conversation, could keep silence no longer, and said to the minister; "If this is the way you express yourself to a sick woman I want you to trouble her no more."

REMARKS. It is degrading the holy profession to call such a man a minister who labors to persuade a dying woman that she would commit moorder while attempting to comply with the means that God had given for the salvation of her soul, and we cannot but admire the mothers wisdom in informing him that such services were not needed, as he was teaching the way of death instead of life and salvation.

W. H B.

The ministers being dismissed in this way, left the house and on his way homeward met a Universalist to whom he related the circumstance, and both of them being destitute of gospel light, agreed that the womans conduct was alarmingly foolish, so much that the Universalist concluded to go and, if possible persuade her to disist from wantonly rushing herself into danger and death. He also came and asked permission to see her which was granted. He then commenced reasoning about her dangerous undertaking but all his arguments were repelled so firmly and steadfastly that he acknowledged she was too strong for him and left without being dismissed.

Next came the old minister that had been sent for and after beholding her weak condition told her that he feared she was too weak to be baptized, but the courageous young woman said to him, "We must have faith in God only undertake it, I believe that the Lord will strengthen me. To him that believeth all things shall be possible." The mother then, with the assistance of a few neighbor woman, took her out of bed and when they had her prepared they went to the water, cut the ice open, her own husband carried her in and when the minister received her she said, "do you think the water is deep enough, I want to be wholly immersed." He answered, it is, and proceeded and she was baptized without the least difficulty. Leaving the sorrows and sins that had burdened her soul, she came up out of the water with joy and gladness. They then went to a neighbors house close by where the physician was and had prepared his stimulants and as she entered the room he said, here take this. What have you? said she. Some tea said the physician, take it it will prevent you from taking cold, but she answered him, "will you have it said that your medicine saved my life?" I will not take it." She could hardly be pursuaded to even lay down on a bed,

A few days afterwards as her mother was waiting upon her she heard her praying fervently to God. she then asked her whether she wished anything. She said if it was not too much trouble she had a longing desire to celebrate Communion in memory of of her dying Lord before she died. The mother replied that it would be no trouble. The preperations were then made, and the old brother sent for, the time came and everything was in order. When it was told her that she could commune in bed she said "no, I want to sit at the table with my brothers and sisters while observing the institutions of the Lord." She was then placed in a chair where she remained during the whole services. After this she addressed them all saying that she now had discharged her duty, admonishing her husband, brothers and sisters and friends to follow her example in obeying God, telling them with a clear conscience, that she had now a fair prospect for heaven and happiness, where the weary are at rest and the wicked cease from troubleing. Thus she kept on speaking of her happiness and rejoicing in the Lord. In her last moments she was asked whether she had fair prospects of heaven. She answered, I have, and then uttered her last words, Oh, sweet Jesus and passed sweetly away. W. H. BAILY.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

IN PILGRIM No. 29, page 230, C. M. Armbrost asks for an explanation of Matthew 6: 24—34. I will try in the fear of God to answer the query, as contained in said paragraph. 1. "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other. A master denotes a superior, a leader, a chief, &c., and to serve, one must first become a servant, to act as a servant, to be in the employment as a servant. In this case it implies to render spiritual obedience and worship to God, whom we only shall serve, and render to no other service as a God. The Lord Jesus Christ must be commander in chief. Now he saith, "You call me Master and Lord, and you say well for so I am. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, for this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments, and his commandments are not grievous." Now when a servant is bound to his master, no matter in what way he has obligated himself, just as long as he loves him above anybody else, that long he will serve him with full purpose of heart. He will hold to his master, and do the work his master commands him, heedless of anything that any other might say or command him. And so it is with the children of God. While their hearts are filled with the blood shed abroad through the Holy Ghost, so they cannot be servants to mammon or the god of this world, or in other words, the wealth and riches of this world. They cannot have the service of the child of God, for the children of God will only have them to their service as wise stewards. I have showed above that to be a servant, we must be in subjection to him that lords over us, or we are no longer servants; "I say unto you, take no thought for your life what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body what ye shall put on." The Lord seems to ask us the question, do you not know that it is every master's business to furnish sufficient food and raiment to his servants or slaves. Are ye of so little faith, my children, that you can possibly think that I the great Master, will overlook your daily wants if ye are my servants, and be the faithful children of the heavenly Father? O, no; this you may learn at once. Only behold for a moment what I do for the fowls, and lilies of the field, how I care for them, and feed them; you need not have any concern of what shall we eat, or with what shall we be clothed, only do my commands as a faithful servant of mine, for I told you in the contest contained in the 5th and 6th chapters of Matthew, how ye shall be the light of the world and the salt of the earth; that men may see your good works, I told you to give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away, and I, your Master, have told you to do good to them that hate you, and I have also told you how you shall do when you give alms to the poor. I also told you, you always have poor with you that ye can do them good if ye will, I also tell you, by the language of Paul, that you shall work with your own hands, that you eat your own bread, and that you may give something to the poor, and methinks the Master has so fully told us our duty, both that which we owe to God, and to our neighbor, and to ourselves. Then let us plow at the proper time, sow at the proper time, reap at the proper time, thresh at the right time, go to milk at the right time, get out of bed at the right time, go to meeting at the right time, thank the Lord at the right time, become reconciled to your brethren at the right time. If we thus first seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, which is to do every day right, then God is on our side, and his blessings will be added unto us. Let us never make the day more evil by crying and fretting about to-morrow, for the Christian's labor is to day while it is called to-day.

The same querest also asks an explanation of Acts 2: 41 and 47.

The reading of the verses in our common English version is as follows: "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." The corresponding verse in German, "die nun seio wort gern annahmen lieszen sich taufen; und wurden hinza gethan an dem tage bey drey tausend seelen." In the emphatic diaglott the 41 verse reads: "They that gladly received his word were immersed: and on that day about three thousand were added." 47th verse reads: "Praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord daily added those being saved, to the congregation." The German is about the same word for for word. Our version has it, "Praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Now I cannot see much room for comment or explanation of the above verses, from the fact that Luke is so pointed in telling us how and what Peter preached to those people, and the effect it had on them, and the question they asked him when they were pricked in their heart, when they said "Men and brethren what shall we do? Then we have it so plain again what Peter told them to do to be saved. Now the language follows, "they that gladly received his word," that is, the word Peter was preaching to them, were baptized, &c. We need not wonder why it is said in the 47th verse, "Praising God and having favor with all the people." Here was a little season that worked very favorably for the people of God, not only because the Lord added daily such as should be saved, but we are told they had favor with all the people. They were not persecuted for a little season. But the joyful season was short for the church, and more so for the apostles. Peter and John were soon forbidden to preach in the name of him from whom these glories has sprang forth, and all the threatening of the rulers, and of the Jews, and the heathens, could no stop the work of the Lord. May we take example and courage from the same, is the prayer of your well-wishing servant in the Lord.

QUARRY, MARSHALL Co., IOWA.

Respected Brother Brumbaugh :—

This leaves us in usual health and trust it will find you the same. On Thursday 2nd inst., I took the train at Marshalltown to go west in order to assist members in restoring love, peace and union. First stopped off about 50 miles west of us. Here brother Samuel Garver, Joseph Trostle and myself, as a committee, labored with the members in the district where brot er Wm. Thomas has the oversight, but failed to accomplish what was desired. The case was postponed till the third Saturday of August. We remained with the members here till Monday, 9th, then took the train west to Mo. Valley, which is about 180 miles and upward west of us. Here Elders Samuel Garver, Samuel Longenecker and myself served as a committee, visited from house to house for two days and on the third day we came together in church council. Here our labors seem to have the desired effect and at this time I feel to say may God grant grace to those members in the Mo. Valley, sufficient for their day and trials, and I ask them to accept of my thanks for their kindness shown me whilst I was amongst them. Early on Friday morning, the 10th, I took the train for home and in the evening met my loving wife who came after me with a horse and buggy. Many thanks to our kind Father in heaven for His love, cares and mercies over us until the present time. I also wish to say that on Wednesday fore-noon, as we were passing some cornfields, it was remarked, if any corn would yield a a hundred bushels to the acre, that would, but before night a storm of wind, hail and rain came across the valley, which done much damage to buildings, and fences, and the next day t was sorrowful to look over those corn fields that appeared so promising the day before, this being the district where the grasshoppers had passed through. They had been over several counties on the east side of the Missouri river. Many wheat fields that had been eaten by the grasshoppers, were planted in corn, and the corn was about a foot high on the 9th of this month, July.

ELD. JOHN MURRAY.

Dear Pilgrim :—

At this date, July 15th, we have no special news to communicate. Have some week. of very hot weather, for few days the mercury in the shade reached 100, generally the nights pleasant. Had a fine shower of rain the 11th inst. The river is unusually low for the season, owing to the fact that the hard rains in the month of May took off large quantities of the snow in the mountains earlier than usual. Persons coming to our valley at this season of the year are struck with the wonderful beauty and charms of our crystal streams. The water is so transparent that the small pebbles can be seen upon the bed of the rivers or creeks. Our pump water is likewise clear as crystal and cool and pleasant to the taste, with pure air ever floating down from the snow-capped peaks of the Rocky mountains. Pure, healthy water, wild meat, grain and vegetables unequaled in quantity to any in the United States. It is no marvel why invalids from every section of the east and other countries seek our climate for a new lease of good health.

DIED.

MILLER.—In Springfield, Noble Co., Ind. June 28th, 1874, Bro, Daniel F. Miller, aged 64 years, 2 months and 1 day. Funeral services by brethren Christian Weaver and Joseph Fry.

The deceased was born in Somerset Co., Pa., but was taken to Tuscarawas County, Ohio, when yet a child. He was married on the 13th day of February to Lydia Funk of Holmes county, Ohio, and resided in this county until 1857. He then moved to Dekalb county, Ind., where he lived until 1870, and then moved to Springfield, Noble Co., Ind, where he remained until his death. His remains were interred in the Springfield grave-yard, and his funeral was largely attended by friends and neighbors. He was a consistent member of the Church for 25 years and died in the hope of eternal life. 30 minutes before he died he said to his wife "I will soon leave you, it is better for me and you to go where there is no suffering, pain and death." In his death the family lost a kind parent and their best earthly friend.

MILLER.—In the Mill Creek congregation, Rockingham Co., Va., June 17th 1874, Jonathan Miller, aged 76 years, 5 months and 15 days. Funeral discourse by Eld. Isaac Long, assisted by Christian Hartman, Samuel Cline, and Frederick Miller.

MYERS.—In the Codorus church, York county, Pa., July 16th, 1874, brother Jacob Myers, aged 61 years, 6 month and 13 days.

He was a faithful member for nearly 30 years, and about 18 years of that time he filled the office of deacon faithfully. He was a zealous member, and as long as he was able occupied his seat in church, in council, and wherever needed. He was liberal and strong for the word of God in Christ Jesus. He was a brother of our ordained elder Isaac Myers who left for eternity some six years ago, and also the last of four brothers. He leaves a widow, four children, an aged mother, one sister, and a great many friends to mourn their loss, but we hope their loss is his eternal gain.

He died on the 16th and was buried on the 18th, at the East Codorous meeting house in the presence of a large concourse of brethren, friends, and neighbors from far and near. Disease, consumption. Funeral occasion improved by brother Peter Kauffman and the writer, from 2 Cor. 4: 17, 18, and 5: 1.

SPIECE.—Also in the same congregation, July 23, 1874, sister Spiece, in York, aged 68 years, 5 months, and 6 days. She was buried in the Union Cemetery in York. Funeral occasion improved by the writer and an Albright preacher by the name of S. Aurander.

She had been confined to her bed helpless for two years and five months and bore her afflictions well, and her desire was all the time for her Savior to take her home. Her husband is a member of the Albright church.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A water-spout bursted recently in the mountains of Nevada, by which the track of the Central Pacific railroad was washed away, a number of persons killed, and a large amount of property destroyed.

Evenings at Home, is a monthly household journal, devoted to mental, moral and physical culture. Published by H. A. Munsaw, Elkhart, Ind., at 75 cents per Annum. Those who subscribe now for 1875 will get three numbers of this year free.

From Bro. R. W Branson, of Muncie, Ind., we have the following: Wheat thro' this county is good, as a general thing, at the present time. Oats and flax are are tolerably good, the meadows are light, weather cool and pleasant and health good.

—Reports from St. Paul, Minnesota under date of July 23 say that the grasshoppers have already destroyed 1,500,000 bushels of wheat, and are liable to destroy another half million of bushels. On account of the grasshoppers the whole crop will not be as good as last year. In the Northern part of the State the weather has been favorable with plenty of rain. In the Southern part moisture has been scarce, while intense heat has been the rule. Potatoes are abundant with no complaint of potato bugs. The season has been excellent for haying in the northern part of the State.

—From the New York Tribune we have the following reference to the condition of the wheat crops in the Southern States:

"In all parts of the United States lieing the Atlantic, the Spring was cold and late, but after the middle of May came warm, growing weather with seasonable showers, lasting until early in June, when several weeks of dry, extremely hot weather followed, causing great alarm. In July local showers were reported, and before the 10th heavy and protracted rain fell over a wide extent of country. Meanwhile the wheat crop had been gathered through the South and largely up to the centre of such States as Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. By all accounts the quantity is above the average, and the quality is unexcelled, as well it might be, for it is all winter wheat, and the dry weather was in every way favorable for harvesting. We may therefore say quite positively that the grade of the best qualities of flour will be high, and unless Spring wheat shall hereafter be so damaged by wet weather as to make a heavy demand of white wheat for raising the grade, the price of choice flour will be reasonable."

—A very destructive flood occurred at Pittsburg and Allegheny City on the evening of July 26th. There was heavy showers through the day, but in the evening between 8 and 9 o'clock the rain fell in sheets which fairly glistened as the lightening shone upon them in quick succession. The water flowed through the streets with fearful velocity. The Union Depot was inundated to the depths of three or four feet, rendering it impassable for Western trains. In Allegheny city the flood was terrible. Houses were thrown together in heaps, and many that are not totally destroyed were seriously damaged. The water rising to the hight of fifteen feet, flooded the first floors of all the houses and in many places the second stories. Several houses were swept into the middle of the street and others carried off hundreds of yards and shattered to pices. The loss of life is said to be appalling and so far greater than at first supposed. It is now thought that the loss of life will fully reach 200 persons, and that the loss of property will be proportionately large. A gentleman who watched the storm from a point a few miles down the river where there was little rain, says that by the flashes of lightning he could see a huge, inky-black, funnel-shaped cloud, which overhung the city, the narrow end being the lowest, while the dark parts gave vent to almost continuous flashes of lightning.

GENERAL INTLLIGENCE.

ARRIVAL OF MENNONITE IMMIGRANTS.—On the 17th upward of four hundred Menoonite emigrants arrived at Castle Garden from the Crimea. The woman all wore blue calico gowns, whith a blue handkerchief thrown over their heads, and no signs of ribbons, or earrings, or brooches, or even wedding ring were visable, these things being all considered too worldly. The children were dressed like their mothers, with this exception, that some of their capes were surmounted with a kind of topknot or ornamental tassel. The men were all dressed like ordinary German peasants, but in spite of the seeming poorness of their apparel they had well filled wallets. One of them had a draft for $26,000 in gold, another had a draft for nearly the same amount, while many of the others had letters of credit for sumns varying form $1,000 to $2,000.

"We left Simpheropol, in the Crimea," said Daring Walter, "about the end of May, and traveled by rail across Europe to Hamburgh. We made halts at Berlin and Hamburgh. Three of our little ones has died on the road. Our forefathers have lived in the Crimea for upwards of one hundred years, and we were leaving Russia because they wanted to make us Greek Catholics and liable of military service. The law ordaining this does not take effect for years yet; but we are taking time by the forelock and leaving the country as fast as we can. It is possible that forty thousand more of our number will be here ere long from Russia. We are flying from that country because they want to rob us of our religion. We have some of our number here who lived in a community and have all worldly things in common. My son is their 'Father,' and he has been elected to that office for life. The brother hood is called the 'Hurtische Community.' We all work at agricultural pursuits; we don't smoke; if we drink too much we are publicly reproved in our religious meetings. We do not use wedding rings; we have no divorce; if man and wife separate neither is ever allowed to marry again. We had our own courts for small matters in Russia, but had to go before Russian courts in matters of appeal. We have a large number of families here, some of them being as large as eight or ten children. There are always some very old people among us, like great-grandmothers Hesterstahl, who is about eighty two years of age."

A party of nine wealthy Menonites are now exploring the country about Nashur Falls, Kansas, for the establishment of a colony of five hundred families. They arrived in this city last week by the German steamer Schiller. They will probably leave Castle Garden to-day for various points in the West. The Rev. C. P. Schaffer, assisted by the Rev. J. P. Lestrade, of the New York Bible society, gave each of the Mennonites a German Testament.—New York Observer.

—POULTRY IN ORCHARDS.—No orchard that I have seen surpasses one in which no live stock have been kept other than poultry—hens, geese, turkeys, guinea and pea fowl. Here is an extensive range, inclosed by a picket fence. The trees are mulched and manured every year—sometimes in the Fall, and sometimes in the Spring. Turkeys roost in the trees and so do other fowls. The geese have a pond fed by a brook in which to bathe. All the fowls kept in this orchard that can be with profit. The crop of fruit is bounteful and beautiful. The abundance is due to care in pruning and washing and feeding. Its beauty and perfectness is largely attributed by the owner to the vigilance of the fowls in hunting insects and destroying them. The profits from the fowls are large. It is claimed that they are the most productive and profitable live stock he has, in proportion to the investment. Eggs, chickens and turkeys always brings a good price; and the range he thus gives them, and the comparative freedom, diminish the amount of care required, and the per cent. of loss from disease that ordinarily obtains where fowls are closely confined. Really the orchard, with its fruit and poultry products, is regarded the most profitable portion of his investment in proportion to the expense involved in its care.—National Poultry Journal.

—The pocket book taken from the person of Major John Andre by his captors, September 23d, 1780, has been presented to the Connecticut Historical Society, by the Rev. A. L. Whitman, of Groton. This interesting relic was for many years, and until his death, in the possession of Mr. Joshua Barrell, of Bridgewater, Mass., a soldier of the Revolution, from whom it was passed, more than forty years ago, to his grandson, the Rev. Mr. Whitman. It will hereafter be preserved by the side of Arnold's watch, which has been for many years in the cabinet of the Historical Society."

Remington Sewing Machine.

AWARDED

THE "MEDAL FOR PROGRESS,"

AT VIENNA, 1873.

THE HIGHEST ORDER OF "MEDAL" AWARDED AT THE EXPOSITION.

NO SEWING MACHINE RECEIVED A HIGHER PRIZE.

A FEW GOOD REASONS:

1. A new invention thoroughly tested and secured by Letters Patent.
2. Makes a perfect LOCK STITCH alike on both sides, on all kinds of goods.
3. Runs Light, Smooth, Noiseless and rapid—the best combination of qualities.
4. Durable—Runs for years without repairs
5. Will do all varieties of work and fancy stitching in a superior manner.
6. It is the most easily managed by the operator. Length of stitch may be altered while running, and machine can be threaded without passing thread through holes.
7. Design simple, ingenious, elegant, forming the stitch without the use of Cog Wheel Gears, Rotary Cams or Lever arms. Has the Automatic Drop feed, which insures uniform length of stitch at any speed. Has our new thread controller, which allows easy movement of needle-bar and prevents injury to thread.
8. CONSTRUCTION most careful and finished. It is manufactured by the most skillful and experienced mechanics, at the celebrated REMINGTON ARMORY, ILION, N. Y. Philadelphia office, 819 Chestnut Street.

Historical Charts of Baptism.

A complete key to the history of Trine, and the Origin of Single Immersion. The most interesting reliable and comprehensive document ever published on the subject. This Chart exhibits the years of the birth and death of the Ancient Fathers, the length of their lives, who of them lived at the same period, and shows how easy it was for them to transmit to each succeeding generation, a correct understanding of the Apostolic method of baptizing. It is 22x28 inches in size, and extends over the first 400 years of the Christian era, exhibiting at a single glance the impossibility of single immersion ever having been the Apostolic method. Single copy, $0.50. Four copies, $1.50. Sent post-paid. Address

Going Home.

I'm a Pilgrim and a stranger,
While wandering through this world of woe;
But there's no sickness, death nor sorrow,
In that bright world to which I go.

CHORUS:

I' a going there to see my Father,
I'm a going there to see my Lord;
I'm just a going over Jordan—
I'm just a going home.

I feel my sins are all forgiven,
I feel I'm on my journey home;
I'm going away to that sweet Heaven.
Where Jesus smiles and bids me come

CHO.

I am going there to see my mother, & c.

I'm going away to life,s bright river,
I'm going there to see my Lord;
I'm going there to live forever,
According to His precious word.

CHO.

I'm a going there to see my brother, &c.

I'm going to a world of pleasure,
That's far beyond this world of strife;
For there's my heart and there's my treasure,
And ther's the blooming Tree of Life.

CHO

I'm a going there to see my sister, &c.

I'm going there to rest forever,
From all my labors and my toils;
Where kindred spirits never sever,
In that eternal world of joy.

CHO.

I'm a going there to see my children, &c.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

MINISTERIAL QUALIFICATIONS.

Paul, who declared he was an apostle, not of men, neither by men, but "of Jesus Christ by the will of God," in his epistle to the Collossians charges them thus: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world and not after Christ." Col. 11: 8. And, although nearly eighteen hundred years have elapsed since this caution was given to a christian Church, yet it seems adapted to the present day, for it is very manifest from the widely extended zeal displayed for the erection of establishments, that the rudiments of the world are, in a great degree, substituted for the wisdom which is above; so that school divinity really appears to be in a fair way of becoming to us what "Great Diana" of old was to the Ephesians. I will acknowledge however for my part, I cannot see what these things have to do, or wherein they correspond with the plain, simple, and only essential doctrines preached by Jesus Christ, and recorded in the New Testament. I do not find a single passage which authorizes me to believe that the utmost attainments in human science can, in the smallest degree, qualify a man for the office of a minister of the everlasting Gospel, nor do I discover any account of the Lord or his disciples, who were mostly poor and unlearned, as to the outward, having ever recommended people to go to schools and colleges, or the wise world, for inspiration in spiritual matters. Yet almost every denomination of professing Christians are ready to dispise and reject the preaching of the ministers, who, because they have experienced the all-sufficient qualification of being "called of God as Aaron," cannot, with enticing words cry peace, peace, when there ought to be spiritual war, but clothed in divine authority, are bold in reproving sin, fearless of the frowns of men, and regardless of their praise. We also see the multitude honoring and preferring such preachers only as are called learned; who having been educated at these schools can deliver flowery ingenious discourses, and amuse their hearers with vain speculations and subjects, which are far from building up in the most holy faith. Truly it is sorrowful to see how subservient people are in our enlightened day and country to these school-made ministers, and how willing they are to give their money for the support of institutions which are expressly designed to increase their numbers, to keep up a constant supply of them, whose end is gain, and whose preaching, while it fills their purses at their hearers expense, can do them no spiritual good, corresponding with the declaration, "I sent them not nor commended them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord." Jeremiah 23: 32.

And herein is a mark of those who divine for money. Like all other hirelings, if they do not please their employers they will lose their places, and their pay. Therefore do they beguile them with smooth words and the inventions of their own imaginations, well knowing they will not endure sound doctrine nor bear reproof. How different would be the characters of men taught in the school of Christ and prepared and sent by him to turn from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God. They would not spend their time at colleges or universities in the acquirement of superfluous and bewildering knowledge, nor would they, I believe, direct us to the study of theology or divinity so called, or to the teaching of men learned therein, in order to be wise unto salvation. But I am inclined to think they would give us something like the advice the eminent apostle, before quoted, gave in his first epistle to his beloved Timothy: "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babbling and opposition of science falsely so called, which some professing have erred concerning the faith." Col. 6: 20, 21.

Moreover, I believe we should observe of these true shepherds, that they would covet "no man's silver nor gold nor apparel," nor be bargaining for yearly salaries for preaching, but instead thereof, we should find them following some honest business and supplying their temporal wants by the labor of their own hands, not taking the oversight of the flock for the sake of filthy lucre, but as good stewards of the manifold grace of God ministering freely according to the ability which they receive.

To such as these, it is promised that "when the chief Shepherd shall appear they shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." I Peter 5: 4. But to the false prophet, this is the language of Holy Writ: "Have ye not seen a vain vision, and have ye not spoken a lying divination, whereas ye say the Lord saith it; albeit I have not spoken, therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore behold I am against you, saith the Lord God. Ez. 13: 7, 8.

"Who is My Brother?"

They who do the will of my Father in heaven. And who are they? They who have been born again, born into the family of God's people. They now have God for their Heavenly Father, and Jesus Christ receives them as his brethren, sisters, and mothers. This constitutes the family relations of God's children. This is now one family and one father.

But there are also other families around us. Among these are Freemasons, Odd Fellows, Grange, Mechanics, Knights of Pythis, &c., &c. And as many people believe that God's children are mixed and amalgamated among all other families, I desire to present one idea. These different families all recognize their members, as brethren and rightfully too, since they are all bound together by strong oaths. For instance, you find bound together in one of these families, many christian professors, the ministers of the gospel, with the infidel, the atheist, blasphemer, whoremongers, liars, thieves, and almost every other character, are fostered under the parental arm of those families.

Who do you suppose to be the father of such a family? God? No, for many of them do not believe in a God. Is Jesus their brother? No, he says, "swear not at all," while to become a member of these families is only by severe oaths. Perhaps you plead, that they are not all infidels, atheists, liars, &c., that some of our best citizens are among them. Well but there is no use in winking at the truth. They are all sworn members of their families, and consequently are children of the same father, and heirs of the same estate.

He that hath wisdom can understand.

J. Y. HECKLER.

What Harm.

It is often asked, what harm is it for a lady to wear a modest flower? The manner in which the question is put, implies that it is unanswerable. To oppose the practice now become general among professing Christians, is denounced as narrow-mindedness and bigotry. A secular paper furnishes us with one answer. It states that fifteen millions of dollars are expended in this country annually for artificial flowers. Is there no harm in expending this enormous sum every year, for that which can possibly answer no other purpose except to minister to vanity and pride?

What should a denomination, professing the self-denying religion of Jesus, think of their piety, when the men spend more money for tobacco, and the women for artificial flowers, than they can raise by every possible effort, for the conversion of the heathen? Is this a mark of spiritual life? "Where shall the line be drawn?" Where the Bible draws it. There can be no mistake. Pass over this line, and who shall say where to stop? "Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and wearing of gold or of putting on of apparel: but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible; even the ornament of meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God a great price." 1. Pet. iii. 3, 4.—Living Epistle.

GRANT PUT TO THE TEST.

TRINE IMMERSION.

There is published in Boston, Mass., an Advent weekly newspaper, known as the "World's Crisis," edited by Miles Grant and others. The issue of June 10th is now before me, and among other things is a remarkably curious article, headed "One Baptism." There is nothing strange about the heading, but the reading is something new, very new, something I never knew that anybody knew, before this new thing come out in black and white.

It seems that Grant has been puzzled about the origin of trine immersion, and says he has "taken considerable pains to find its begining." Had I been called upon to give him a difficult task to perform, this likely would have been the first to present itself. He is by no means the first man of learning, whose brains have been puzzled over this knotty question. Had Mr. Grant undertaken to find the origin of single immersion he would have had an easy task, but to find the origin of the three fold immersion, is certainly more than ought to be expected of the best of historians. But Grant thinks that he has lifted the veil, and lets the learned world see that which was never shown before since the world began, and of course my readers want to see it too. But, then, Grant is not quite so ignorant as a learned gentleman whom I met some years ago, and when asked for the origin of trine immersion, said it was introduced sometime in the seventeenth century: nor is he as ignorant as Eld. M. Ellison, the author of a little book entitled "Dunkerism Examined," who says Basil (who flourished in the fourth century) was the originator of the trine immersion of the Greeks. Nor does Grant even admit that it was introduced in the time of Tertullian, as do many of our modern single immersionists. But we will put the result of his researches down in his own words, that the wise may understand: "That trine baptism was observed by many from about A. D. 130, and onward for several centuries, is a historic fact." This leaves Tertullian, as the originator of trine immersion, entirely out of the question, as Grant admits that this method was used by many as early as A. D. 130, thirty years before Tertullian was born, and only thirty years after the close of the apostolic age.

Mr Grant, in his examination of this subject, did not dare assert that trine immersion was introduced in the time of Tertullian, as we have successfully traced it beyond that period, but he must go beyond this time, and did not dare to stop with Clement of Alexandria, near the middle of the second century, but steps back to the year A. D. 130, and selects MARCION, who was born about the year A. D. 100 and died A. D. 160, and accuses him of being the inventor of trine immersion, and though he has written an article not less than four feet long, he fails to produce the least particle of proof in defence of the assertion. That Marcion practiced trine immersion, he proves to a demonstration, but that he was the inventor of the practice is not sustained by the least particle of proof at all, it is simply his own assertion only. Though he makes quite a number of quotations from various writers, not one of them says anything about Marcion being the inventor of trine immersion.

It is true that Marcion is classed among the heretics of the second century, but his being a heretic would not prove him the originator of the three-fold immersion, unless it can be first proven that no man can be a heretic unless he is the inventor of trine immersion. Whenever this premise can be fully and legitimately established then I will accept the logical conclusion.

A few facts in the case will serve to show the fallacy of Mr. Grant's conclusion. Turtullian, who was born about the same time that Marcion died, regarded him as a heretic, and in all the accusations brought against him, has said not one word about him being the originator of trine immersion. Living so near the time of Marcion and the apostles, he certainly had all the necessary means of ascertaining what was practiced by both parties, and if Marcion had used a method of baptizing different from that practiced by the apostles, Turtullian would certainly have exposed his practice in the books which he wrote against him. It is not unjust upon our part, to let the gentle reader to decide the question as to who knows the most about Marcion's doctrine, Turtullian or Mr. Grant. Justine Martyr, who was born about the same time that Marcion came into the world, and was cotemporary with him has not left on record one word about Marcion being the inventor of trine immersion. But the difficulty with Mr. Grant is like it is with thousands of others: he practices backward single immersion, and thinks it to be the Bible mode, but in examining the records of antiquity, he finds the general practice in the early centuries of Christianity to have been trine immersion, of course this is either apostolic or it is a human invention, one of the two it is compelled to be. To say it was the apostolic method, would be to frankly deny the validity of single immersion, or else prove that there are two baptisms, when Paul declares there is but one. If he says it is a human invention, then duty requires him to give the inventor's name. The latter difficult part of the task he has undertaken to do. He did not dare select Turtullian who was himself dipped three times at his baptism. But he must go beyond this period, in search of the inventor of this practice; to go back to the commission of Christ to the apostles, is farther than would be safe for him to venture, without being in danger of losing faith in his own practice. He looks not among the faithful ones of the first century, as this would make trine immersion too old to suit his case. He dare not look for the inventor after A. D. 140, for Justin Martyr, as well as Clement of Alexandria, indirectly speak of trine immersion, between this period and A. D. 200. So that Mr. Grant is now hemmed in with trine immersion in the rear and the apostolic age in front, with but forty years between. He is compelled to either find the origin of trine immersion within the limits of these forty years, or else admit it to be the apostolic method. He dare not retreat or else a host of trine immersionists will confront him right in the middle of the second century. He dare not advance for fear of meeting a host of faithful Christians at the close of the apostolic age; with his practice it is now either life or death; he must either find the origin of trine immersion, or else single immersion is dead! dead!! dead!!! There is no possible chance of escape.

In this critical condition, Grant searches in vain for the origin of trine immersion, and how long he has been wandering among the ruins of these forty years, the Lord only knows. He finds a man by the name of Marcion, standing at the year A. D. 130. He learns that this Marcion practiced trine immersion. This only makes it so much the worse for Grant, as it takes ten years away from the forty left him, and now he is hemmed in closer than ever before, with but thirty years between trine immersion and the apostolic age. He has now but the small number of thirty years in which to work, and if he fails to find the origin of the practice here, then he must abandon the search. But Mr. Grant fails to find the inventor of trine immersion within the limits of these thirty years, but still he continues his search, and while doing so, let me talk to you a short time until he finishes his looking around.

Stand here by my side at the year A. D.130, and here is Marcion practicing trine immersion; now just look forward thirty years and you see the apostolic age, the age of purity and holiness. Now then, trine immersion was either the practice of those who lived in that age of holiness, or else it stops on this side. About its beginning we need not now concern ourselves, as Mr. Grant is searching diligently for that. Look over into the apostolic age, just twenty years at the year A. D. 80 and behold Polycarp: he is one of John's disciples, and he says that he served the Lord 80 and six years; this would bring him just 36 years to our rear, back into the period of trine immersion. Bear in mind that no change in the method of baptizing was ever made, till after the death of such faithful men as Polycarp, and lo, we have traced trine immersion 36 years beyond the death of this venerable bishop. If this don't connect trine immersion with the apostolic age then it is something strange to me.

But let us now see what Grant is doing: he has looked all over these 30 years, and cannot find the man who introduced trine immersion. What must be done? To return home to the nineteenth century with this sadness will never do, for that would be a death blow to the unlawful child —single immersion, it would prove that it was a bastard, and not the lawful heir. But a new idea strikes Grant's mind. He quickly runs back to the nineteenth century, picks up his pen, and writes a piece four feet in length, to tell the world that he has found the man who invented trine immersion—he tells the people he has found the father of the practice. He names Marcion as the man. And when asked for the proof, he fails to give it, and then goes to work to prove that Marcion was a heretic, and consequently the inventor of trine immersion, just as though a man could not be a heretic without being the inventor of trine immersion.

The gentle reader has the matter in full, and as Mr. Grant produced no evidence in defense of his position, there is really nothing to reply to, only what we have noticed above.

But now comes the test work for Mr. Grant. He frankly admits and affirms that trine immersion can be traced to within thirty years of the apostolic age, and in addition to this, in his paper of July 22nd, he says it was forward trine immersion. This much then is settled. Now then, I want Mr. Grant to find just one case of BACKWARD SINGLE IMMERSION before ONE THOUSAND YEARS after the close of the apostolic age. We want no dodging the question, but come right up to the work, and find just one case of your method of baptizing, or else, like a man, acknowledge that you are practicing a human invention in the room of a divine appointment. I know this is pressing things pretty closely, but the time has come that this thing must be settled, either the one way or the other. Either confess that your method of baptizing was invented by man, or else prove that it was ever used upon the face of the globe before more than a thousand years after the close of the apostolic age.

Men of learning and influence are practicing backward single immersion, and it is high time that they be called upon to either relinquish the practice or else prove it to have been the primitive method. If any of my readers have any doubts about single immersion being a human invention, let them read Quinter's Tract on the "Origin of Single Immersion."

Children, Sin Not.

"My little children these things I write unto you that ye sin not. &c. 1. John 2: 1.

"My little children" alludes to babes in Christ, and not to those on the mother's lap. Such who were previously elevated in their own estimation; but a divine power laid them low in their own eyes, and has begot ten them again, by the word of God. Being born and created anew, we find in ourselves quite a different construction to what we had prior to our transformation. Then we were big and strong, imagining ourselves notorious; but now we are little and weak, and in our own eyes hardly noteworthy; also very dependent and cannot help ourselves, looking daily to the great source of life, having acquired the spirit that prompts us to daily call, abba Father. These are the characters John the apostle admonishes, "not to sin." In this new state of life, it seems almost impossible for the disciple of Jesus to sin feeling the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost,—actual sins all gone—corruptedness all covered, just like it was to the Israelites when Pharaoh's host was drowned in the Red Sea. There is a hatred and animosity within the breasts of those little ones, against sin; but experience had taught the apostle that this state of things with those "little ones" will not always remain thus, and hence the admonition, "sin not."

According to John's language it is possible that in course of time, we may again commit things that are sinful before God and also in the sight of man, and even in our own eyes when we peruse the past of our tho'ts, words, or the conduct in all the different positions we filled, can we not detect some shortcomings even in our own thoughts, when they they should be set upon heavenly things? Yes, before we are aware of it sometimes they have wandered away from God, from Heaven, from duty and indulge in things obnoxious to God and the new life in Christ. Such is a fact, and many of these little ones, when made acquainted with themselves and their weakness in the flesh, almost despaired of salvation. Yes, we are not yet in Heaven brethren and sisters, but that is the home for which we have set out. The sins of mankind are not all actual sins. I am afraid many offend God and commit sins by omission, that is, when we should be on duty and decline to do so, we then wrong our Master's cause and injure the prosperity of the new creature, and the influence God can or should have among men by means of his children. We may omit a duty when sitting to the table, in not saying to God in the presence of all, the bread and the water is thine, and thou hast given the same to us, according to our wants; Thy name we bless for the same. If we do not know more of a prayer, that will do already; and if uttered in sincerity, and with a heart that feels what the mouth expresses, it will surely have the desired influence of religion.

Again, as a general thing, we, as ministers of the Gospel, preach up a family altar; and if there are any who do not, part of the faith of the ancient fathers is withheld from the audience, or the sheep and lambs we are commanded to feed. This will be sin to the speaker. Again, if we clear our skirts on the pulpit, and by our conduct deny that point of doctrine, we held forth, we, by the very act of ommission make ourselves sinners. As little children, let us look how we stand with regard to idle words of which we have to give an account one day. Did we always think before we spoke? Did we weigh the matter properly whether it was not too heavy or too light? Not too light, too long or too short? If not a little too much levity in the style of expression? Levity and mirth are like the fangs of a serpent, imparting a poison, destroying solemnity and seriousness thereby opening the door for evil spirits: which when admitted, for a while work in the dark, but eventually the fruits of the same ripen and can no more be hid on account of their heinousness.

Again, how is it in regard to patience, one of the Christion virtues we believe we should daily show forth in our deportment? Are we able to bear a little pain, a little scoffing, a little reproach? Can we pray for those individuals giving us offense, and all kinds of temptations? Can we do good to those who despitefully use us and say all manner of evil against us? These are means to try our patience, telling us how deep the waters of patience run with us. Trials are not necessary to inform God concerning our piety, for He knows all about us without them, since He is omniscient. They are calculated to tell how far we are advanced in the nature of Christ, who suffered and died, giving an example of patience in suffering. Now dear fellow disciples if we can balance in reality the patience of Christ, then we are perfect and like our Master in that point. But, for my part, I have not attained to perfection, though willing to learn of Christ, meekness and lowliness of heart, and rejoice that the apostle John remembers fallible men whose spirits are willing, but whose flesh is weak, and reminds them that if any one sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is the propitiation for our sin. But according to the apostles, own expression, in another place, we must acknowledge our sins, repent of them, and to avoid them by the grace of God. Then he is willing to propitiate for us and by so doing we grow in Christ and all the necessary virtues.

Faith.—What is It.

Faith is the assent of the understanding to any truth. Religious faith is the assent to the truth of Divine revelation, and of the events and doctrines contained in it. This may be merely historical, without producing any effect on our lives and conversation, and it is then a dead faith, such as even the devils have. But a living or saving faith not only believes the great doctrines of religion as true, but embraces them with the heart, and is thus the source of sincere obedience to the divine will exhibited in the life and conversation. Faith in Christ is a grace wrought in the heart by the Holy Spirit, whereby we receive Christ as our Savior, our prophet, priest and king, and love and obey Him as such. This living faith in Christ is the means of salvation, not meritoriously, but instrumentally. Without it there can be no forgiveness of sins, and no holiness of life; and they who are justified by faith, live and walk by faith. —Mark 16: 16. True faith is an essential grace and the main spring of Christian life. By it the Christian overcomes the world, the flesh and the devil, and receives the crown of righteousness. 1. Tim. 4: 7, 8. In virtue of it worthy men of old wro't great wonders. Heb. 11. 1. Cor. 13: 2. Being sustained by omnipotence in doing whatsoever God enjoined. Matt. 17: 20. In Rom. 1: 8, faith is put for the exhibition of faith in the practice of all the duties implied in a profession of faith.

But we read of one faith, one Lord and one baptism. This, we, the German Baptists hold forth and practice. We may meet brethren and sisters from all parts of the earth, and we need not ask them, how were you received into the Church, or how were you baptized? We have one faith. We all made the same confession before God and man. We are all baptized by trine immersion. One can not say to the other, "I believe in sprinkling," and the other, "I believe in once backwards into the water." No. Thank God, we all read the same word, we all believe the same way, but it seems sometimes we do not enjoy the religion of Christ as we ought. This is from lack of duty on our part. Jesus says, "Take my yoke upon you and learn from me." Then let us ever learn from Jesus and practice what we learn.

COME TO JESUS.

The Bible says, "God is angry with the wicked every day. He hateth all workers of iniquity." And has He not much cause to be angry with the sinner? He gave, and preserves your life, and bestows all your comforts, yet you forget him. He has told you his commands, and these are all intended to do you good, yet you do not regard them. You do not reverence God, but live almost as if there was no such being. What an ungrateful son you would be if you thus treated your parents,—if you avoided their company, disliked to think of them, and disregarded their wishes! Hear then what God says: "Hear O heavens, and be astonished, O earth! I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me." He is full of love to you, as a tender father; but by your sins you have grieved him, besides, he is your Creator, King and righteous Judge, and must and will punish all sinners. He must act, to those who rebel, not as a kind parent, but as an angry monarch. It is your own fault, however, that he is angry. You make him so, your sins separate between you and God, and as long as you live without repenting of sin, his anger must ever be hot against you, and you cannot escape or hide from him. Wheresoever you are, he is there, and he is angry. He "compasses your path and your lying down," and he is angry. It depends on him whether or not you draw your very breath, and he is angry. O sinner, better for all the world to be angry with you than God. What an awful life is yours! The "wrath of God abideth on you." How dreadful to feel when going to bed, "God is angry, and to stand before his judgment seat, and see that he is angry! Sinner he is angry only while you make him so; he is willing to be your friend; he sent his Son with this message, "Be ye reconciled to God." If you will give your heart to that messenger, and trust in him, all this anger will cease. Oh, then come to Jesus. Be no longer God's foe, but accept the offer to be his friend, but beware of rejecting Jesus, for he says, "He that believeth not," that is, does not come to the Son, "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

D. WAGAMAN.

THE FURNACE.

Somewhere on his path, be you sure, the man who will live godly in this world shall find a furnace heated for him. There will be times with every conscientious soul when fidelity to the right must pay a price. Such a crisis will face a young man's honesty in a business career, and if he fail to keep his honesty he must forfeit the favor on which he is dependent, or his reverence for the divine name will be outraged, and if he will protect his filial sensibilities he must walk the gauntlet of mocking lips and pointed finger of scorn. Or his regard for the sanctity of the Sabbath will be tested, and if he will do homage to the old, unrepealed statute, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," he must give up for his conscience his daily trade. He walks with young companions not in sympathy with his notions of purity, consistency, and good morals; if he will be true to these convictions he must forego the friendships of years. He is the only witness for God in a godless home; if he would screen the light and use the common worldly dialect in that circle, all would be peaceful and pleasant; but if he will obtrude his fealty to his Master, and make his devotion a working force in that sphere, contravening the currents of worldliness, he shall speedily and continuously find himself in rough waters. He is associated with his fellow-men for the prosecution of various interests pertaining to this life; if he will oppose unscrupulous measures and uncandid demonstrations, he must submit to social ostracism. He stands in the society of his peers on festive occasions; if he will breathe out around him the element which is the continual atmospere of his spirit, gathered upon him in the closet and in hours of converse with heavenly themes, he must become conscious of the constraint his presence carries about, and the "attraction of repulsion" which flows from his person.

How endlessly may these situations in life be multipled, and how surely in some of these manifold ways as a pious parent, or partner, or child, —as a pious friend, companion, and yokefellow,—as a pious man of business and man of society, will the furnace be encountered, its flaming mouth opening right in the path of sincerity, truehartedness and Christian fidelity.

But don't fear the furnace! Though it be heated seven times hotter than it is want, don't be afraid of it! It will not burn you,—no! not a hair of your head. It may purge away your dross, but you, yourself, your true life, your real treasure, it cannot consume. Let them bind you and cast you in; the flames have lost their power, and that which you dreaded will produce no smart. All those penalties for Christian faithfulness, loss of favor, and of patrons, and of income; the mocking and ridicule; banishment from place, from friendship, from good fellowship, and social popularity, will seem to you trifles light as air, compared with the great burden of conscious falshood which would have crushed you to the earth. And in your destitution and solitude a shining one will come to you. You are really plunged into the furnace, —you are alone, unbefriended and unprovided; and before you have learned the meaning of words you are no longer alone, unbefriended or uncared for. Christ is with you,—his friendship, never in longest life so palpable, so sweet, so assuring, his promised interventions and providential bestowments never so signal and rich.—Rev A. L. Stone.

A Changing World.

We are in a world that changes every moment. As the days which lay be ween the memorial day of our Lord's birth and that of His circumcision have passed away, so the months and years of our life pass like dreams. How many changes are behind us, and those changes not always from bad to good, but also—too often, alas! —from bad to worse! Some calculation which we thought could not fail, has failed, nevertheless; now some friendship, which was to last till death has proved shorter than the first year; some glad expectation, some castle we thought was built upon a rock, has disappeared like a cloud. O, world, world! How dost thou boil and foam like an ever moving sea, which sooner or later takes everything into its bottomless depths! Yet we fear thee not; nay, we rejoice with a joy full of glory, for we profess the name of Jesus. After the lapse of eighteen centuries, not one jot or tittle of the word spoken by the angel has fallen to the ground: He shall save his people from their sins." Everything is not perishable. Here lies before us that living and everlasting Word, which implicitly or explicitly bears on each page that beautiful name to which the words of the old poet may well be applied: "Thy name is as anointment poured forth!" Ye mourning ones, who, on the evening of the old year, nearly choked by your tears, sobbed, "Call me Mara, for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me!" have not lost everything. There is one Friend, one Helper and Savior. With the name of Jesus on their lips, our pious ones have gone in peace, and when we see our last hour approach we also will cling to that name though that which is dearest to us turn from us.—The Christian.

PLAYING TRICKS.—Some children and even some grown up people think it is very smart to deceive others, and even frighten them 'for fun.' Sometimes such fun turns out very seriously. Hear what the wise man Solomon says with reference to this matter: "As a madman who casteth fire-brands, arrows, and death; so is the man that deceiveth his neighbor, and saith, Am not I in sport?"—Prov. 26: 18, 19.

Hospitality is seed; and the husbandman does not become wealthy by saving, but by sowing his seed.

Liberality does not consist in good words but in good works.

If I Were an Editor.

Some of our readers occasionally take exceptions to our way of editing and say, If I were an editor I would do thus and so. One would admit only such articles as were orthodox and based upon purely theological principles, another would have it chuck full of the progressive spirit of the apostle Paul, another would clear his paper from all old fogyism, another would give it the impress of his own mind, and still another would run it according to his own pleasement. These may seem divergent ideas of editorial fitness, yet we are inclined to believe that it takes a compound of them all to make an editor of ordinary reputation. Of all professions in life, perhaps there are none more difficult to fill than that of editing a paper. A religious paper should be an exception, but it is not. If every member of the Church was wholly influenced by the spirit of oneness as exhibited in the teachings of Christ we would all be of the same mind and desire the same things, but unfortunately this is not so. There is too much assimilation between the world and the Church and as a result the flesh comes in for its say. Each one has an ideal of what a paper should be and cannot see but what everybody else ought to see things in the same light. Hence each one persists in the correctness of his position. We have given these divergent opinions our prayerful consideration and have endeavored to comprehend our whole field of labor. We have but one object in view and that is, to labor for the good and prosperity of the Church. We may, in some cases, have been a little too exacting with some and too indulgent with others, but our five years of exercising in editorial labor has been a good school of experience for us, and we believe that we have not altogether overlooked its advantages. "Be ye wise as serpents and harmless as doves" applies to none better than us and those in our position. We have but one leading object in view. To accomplish this we have "set to our seal." The work is a great one and for its accomplishment all others must, in part, be subservient. Not only must the diverse elements be grasped with an iron hand in their embryo state, but it is often necessary to sacrifice some of the smaller favorable elements in order to accomplish the object. This, by worldly financiers, is considered good policy and we are made to think that it will assume an equally good purpose in regard to things spiritual. The fact is, the expression, "wise as serpents" signifies just that much. The Christian Church is not composed of horses and oxen that can be forced along at the pleasure of the driver, hence we find that Christ, our Great Shepherd, went before his flock and took the position of a leader. To lead successfully, it is important that the flock be kept together. As soon as a flock gets divided into little groups some of them will lose sight of the leader, begin to graze by the way and finally get so far behind that they lose sight of him altogether. This will bear a spiritual application as well, and therefore impresses upon us the importance of laboring for peace and union in the Church. To do this there must be an exercising of a great deal of patience and Christian charity. The sword of the spirit must be handled with care and very judiciously. Some of our own brethren seem so zealous for the cause that at the least, digression they, Peter-like, ask, "shall we smite with the sword?" This is injudicious haste, it is striking at random, and we very much fear that sometimes "the man" is as much aimed at as "the sin." This is a sad mistake as it is not the man that we wish to destroy, but the sin. "The man" and "the sin are two quite different things and should never be smitten at when close together, so close as to endanger the life of the one while destroying the other. If we wish to keep the flock together we must pity the brother, the sister, but labor to drive out the sin that is working their destruction. Such as have been delivered from the power of sin and fall, are taken captive by satan and we should labor for their deliverance with the same care and earnestness as we would to deliver a friend or brother from the embrace of a ravenous beast, a hasty effort or undue excitement often defeats the end or design. We may sometimes see things in the Church that incites within us a holy horror, and if we were to act out our impulsive feelings, our first move would be, excommunicate, put them out. But after mature deliberation this is found not to be the better way as oftentimes, the sins or wrongs can be cast out and the members saved or left within. This impulsive spirit seems to largely predominate in some of those who say, If I were an Editor I would do thus and so.

Another important feature in leading is to have the proper kind of inducements to hold out. When a flock has been frightened and scattered away from the fold or field, if the leader exercises good judgment, he will first consult the taste of the flock and when that is determined he will fill his basket and go before, ever holding out the inducement towards them. In this way he can always succeed in leading them into the fold. Our Shepherd, Jesus Christ, found us lost in the mountains of sin and far away from the fold and came to bring us back. To get us back, he not only showed us our dangerous condition but set before us inducements that it seems strange indeed that any can refuse them. But in these inducements a proper discernment should be made. For a shepherd to tell a flock of sheep of heaven and of a spiritual existence in the world to come as an inducement to get them into a fold, would be no greater folly than for spiritual shepherds to offer wandering sinners salt and oats as an inducement to get them into the kingdom of God. Yet such inducements are held out by both ministers and editors every day, and thousands and millions of deluded souls will be stranded on this rock of deception, as every earthly inducement will lead right back from whence it came. As if heaven with all its glory, richness and fullness was insufficient to induce poor distressed and bleeding sinners to come to Christ, many of the professed ministers of the Gospel and religious periodicals are now offering them oats and salt, or in other words, worldly inducements, such as are of the world and only appeal to the carnal senses. If I were an editor, says one, I would so spice my paper with fine words and flowery sentences that everybody would want to read it. Such food might be relished by the worldling, but it cannot satisfy those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. Our duty is laid plainly before us and we have but one course to pursue, to deviate from it would be to sacrifice the truth and pamper with souls. Ask us to fear God and labor for the promotion of true Christianity in the world and you have our most solemn pledge. As our motto indicates, we are determined to stand by the "Ancient Landmarks" as set forth by Jesus Christ and his apostles and confirmed unto us by those that heard them, knowing that God will hold us responsible for that which we do and that we too shall be called upon to give an account of our stewardship. Then dear reader, seeing, as you must, the relation in which we stand to God and the Church we trust that after all, if you were an editor, and in our position you would do about as we do, that is, do the the very best you could or knew how.

BE IN EARNEST.

In looking around us we see much to cause us to be in earnest, and especially is this so, in reference to the great work,—the working out of our soul's salvation. The importance of this work should cause us to be in earnest. When the soul is lost all is lost. The means of reconciliation are then beyond our reach; the summer, the time for us to labor is past, the harvest is ended, and we are not saved. The thought of the condition of the unsaved should stir us up from our dull inactive state to greater diligence in the Master's service. Not very long ago a young man was suddenly prostrated on a bed of death, and as he saw the monster death approaching, he exclaimed, "Oh! that I had my time to live over again, how earnestly would I be engaged in God's service." This young man had united at one time with the church, but he was not in "earnest." He went back instead of forward in the great work, and for years had not been regarded by the people of God and the world as one of God's children. In this condition hundreds are called without a moments warning to try the realities of an untried world, and does not this fact, as well as the remorse of soul expressed by those whom death overtakes, in an unprepared state, call loudly to us to be in earnest? Yes, dear reader, the salvation of the soul is a matter of too much importance to be made a secondary matter. Fortune and fame are to many first and foremost, but what are these in comparison to the soul? They only last for a season, and then may prove a curse to us rather than a blessing.

The deception by which we are, in this day and age, surrounded should cause us to be in earnest. It requires effort to push one's craft against the current of rivalry, jealousy, deception and vice, and if we expect to triumph, our efforts must be constant. We must not be found sleeping. We must be diligent. The first qualification of a successful business man is, diligence, the second, is DILIGENCE, the third, DILIGENCE, and as it is in the great work of salvation. It requires earnest, and active service, in order to be successful. When we wish to accomplish any work in this life, and an enemy attempts to refute our efforts, either by open-faced rebellion, or by deceptive means, we are likely to become very much in earnest. And, so it should be in reference to the work that God has enjoined upon us. When we are employed in his service the enemy is opposing us, and many are the means he employs to deceive us. It is said he will even transform himself into an angel of light, and it is to be feared that there are many of these apparent angels of light amongst us to-day, advancing theories that are foreign to the teachings of the gospel, and having a form of godliness, thousands are led to accept them as being orthodox. Christian friends, let us be in earnest. There are battles to fight and it is high time that we become more active. The time evidently is here that many are coming in Christ's name saying, I am he, and how very many there are that are going after them! It is our duty not only to be concerned about our own salvation, but also for that of others, and woe be to those that are at ease in Zion. If we can sit still and suffer the enemy to go on in his destructive work without raising the cry of alarm, we are certainly not earnest laborers in Christ's vineyard. Let us then all prepare to meet the foe in open conflict, and that too, on his own grounds.

Above all things, Christian friends, let not our service in the Master's cause be a failure from lack of earnestness. Christ was "clad with zeal as with a cloak" and on one occasion he said, "the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." Let this zeal be in us and we will be enabled to overcome the many hindrances, and triumph over the enemy, and at last come out more than conquerors through him that hath loved us.

Instrumental Music in Churches.

After our late Conference our religious contemporaries generally hooted at the manner in which instrumental music was treated forgetting that almost every church that have now introduced them into the public worship, in their primitive simplicity, entered their solemn protest against them. There is nothing so beautiful, touching, and soul enrapturing as congregational singing, when every tongue and heart is engaged in speaking forth God's praises. Instrumental music in the church measurably destroys this kind of singing and thus turns praising God in hymns and psalms into a science understood only by the few who do it, we fear, more to be heard of men than of God. The following are the opinions of two Methodist divines, who for many other things said and done, were and are still held in high repute.

Dr Adam Clarke, in his comment on Amos, vi. 5. says: "I believe that David was not authorized by the Lord to introduce that multitude of musical instruments into the divine worship of which we read; and I am satisfied that his conduct in this respect is most solemnly reprehended by his prophet; and I rather believe that the use of such instruments of music, in the Christian church, is without the sanction and against the will of God; that they are subversive of the spirit of true devotion, and that they are sinful. If there was a woe to them who invented instruments of music, as did David under the law, is there no woe, no curse to them who invent them and introduce them into the worship of God in the Christian church? I am an old man, and an old minister, and I here declare that I never knew them productive of any good in the worship of God; and have had reason to believe they were productive of much evil. Music, as a science, I esteem and admire; but instruments of music in the house of God I abominate and abhor. This is abuse of music, and here I register my protest against all such corruptions in the worship of the Author of Christianity. The late venerable and most eminent divine, the Rev. John Wesley, who was a lover of music and an elegant poet, when asked his opinion of instruments of music being introduced into the chapels of the Methodists, said, in his terse and powerful manner, "I have no objection to instruments of music in our chapels, provided they are neither heard nor seen." I say the same, though I think the expenses of the purchase had better be spared."

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

JUST ONCE.

BY MARY P. HALE.

I never intended to smoke but one cigar. I began when a boy, just to see how it seemed," said a man who was suffering with a cancer, caused by the inveterate use of tobacco—"but one led to another, and at length I found it impossible to leave off. This habit seemed to bind me with fetters stronger than the cable of a ship, and took from me every particle of moral strength."

"I never meant to take but one glass of spirits. just to see how it tasted; but that one glass induced a desire for another, and now, I am the miserable object which you behold. O, if I had only accepted my fathers motto, 'Touch not; taste not; handle not,' I should have retained my honor and respectability."

These are the words of one once high in social position, and in the esteem of all who knew him.

There is danger in "just once," when posted at the entrance of a dubious path. There is no danger in "never;" but safety. The latter leans upwards to honor and virtue. The first leans downward, and often to irretrievable ruin.

A benevolent man, in visiting a prison, came suddenly upon a lad who, thinking himself unobserved, was bewailing himself in his cell—"O, that just once—that just once! It has been my ruin." Through the grated window of his cell, the gentleman spoke a few kind words to his youth, and gained his confidence. He then told him a desire to outshine his companions, and own the handsomest watch of the clique, was the means of his fall. "I could not accumulate money fast enough," said he, "and a fine opportunity offering to obtain a watch—five dollars being wanting—in an evil hour, I yielded to the temptations to abstract the sum from the money-drawer of my employer. I said, only once; this shall be the only time; but not being discovered or suspected, I felt emboded to try once more, was detected, and now am here. O, sir, do warn all boys whom you know, to beware of just once!"

Take warning, young reader. These are all incidents of truth. Make up your minds never to do a wrong thing, even for once. Never do even a small wrong, for it invariably leads to a greater. Be bold and courageous in resisting evil, whether the temptation be an indulgence of curiosity, or love of show, or a foolish and mistaken idea of being manly. Is there any true manliness in smoking, in drinking, in riding fast horses? Nay! true manliness is seen in resisting evil with firmness and constancy. Every such resistance adds to your moral strength; but every indulgence tends to weaken and to detract from the true manhood, and makes it easier to sin again.

Not long since, was carried to Blackwell's Island, a gentleman in appearance, a felon in reality; soon to exchange his fine broadcloth suit for the striped jean of the criminal; his palace for a grated cell. A desire for gain, and to outshine others was his ruin. He did not become a knave all at once. There was a time when he stepped aside from the path of innocence. Had he stopped at "just once," and said "never," he would have risen in true worth, and had a name among the good and honored in society.—School-day Magazine.

THE HISTORY OF JONAH.

JONAH, I, IV.

Nineveh was a large and wealthy city of Assyria. The inhabitants were a wicked and licentious people, so that they greatly displeased the Lord. He however did not wish to destroy them immediately, but sent the prophet Jonah to preach repentance to them. Jonah was anxious to avoid the performance of this duty, and embarked on a ship in order to fly to a distant city. But who can escape from the presence of the Lord, or hide himself so that God cannot find him? God sent so great a tempest immediatly after, that the vessel was in danger of being lost. The sailors, who were all heathen, cried to their God, and threw the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But all this was of no avail. Then the ship master awakened Jonah, who was asleep, and begged him, "to call upon his God, if so be that God will think of us that we perish not." But as the storm did not abate, they thought that there might be a wicked person on board, on whose account the tempest had arisen, and they cast lots in order to find out who the guilty person was. The lot fell upon Jonah. He immediately acknowledged his sin, that he had disobeyed God, and endeavored to flee from him. The men first hesitated to cast him into the sea; but, as he himself advised them to do it, they complied, after having prayed, "Lord! lay not innocent blood upon us." As soon as Jonas was cast in, the sea became calm. He was not however drowned. But the Lord sent a great fish which swallowed him, in which he was preserved three days and three nights alive. From this prison he cried to the Lord, And the Lord heard his prayers, which went up to him from the depths of the sea, and he commanded the fish to cast Jonah unhurt upon the shore. After this, God commanded Jonah the second time to go Nineveh and preach repentance This he did, and threatened the Ninevites in the name of the Lord that their city would be destroyed in forty days if they did not reform. When the inhabitants heard this, they repented, and turned to the Lord. Even the king laid aside his purple, and put on sackcloth and ashes in token of his repentance. Besides this, he issued a command that there should be a general fast, both of man and beast, so that men might be warned even by the lowing of their hungry cattle, to abandon their sins. When the Lord saw that they turned from their evil way, he forgave them. and Nineveh was not destroyed. But Jonah was displeased that his prophecy was not fulfilled, and he even wished himself dead. In his displeasure he went out of the city, and constructed a hut, till he might see what become of the city. Then the Lord prepared a gourd that it might be a shadow over the head of of the prophet; with this he was much pleased, but this joy did not endure long; for there came a worm that smote the gourd, so that it withered. When the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, he was again displeased, and again wished himself dead. But the Lord said unto him, "Thou hast had pity on the gourd which thou didst not plant, and should I not spare Nineveh that great city?"—Selected.

A Blind Girl and Her Bible.

Would you know the value of the Bible? Let me introduce you to a scene of deep and thrilling interest as related by a minister, an eye witness. A young woman completely blind and deaf, was brought before a number of eminent surgeons to see if anything could be done for her. Her sad condition had been produced by a violent pain in the head. The only method of communicating with her was by tapping her hand, which signified no, and by squeezing it, which signified yes. The surgeons concluded that her case was incurable, and in reply to her earnest inquiries, she received the unwelcome tap.

She immediately burst into tears and wept aloud in all the bitterness of anguish. "What" said she, 'shall I never see the light of day, or hear a human voice? Must I remain shut up in darkness and silence as long as I live?" A friend who was present took up the Bible and placed to her breast. It was a touching and beautiful act. She placed her hands on it, and asked: "Is this the Bible?" Her hand was squeezed in reply. She immediately clasped the Bible in her hand, and held it up to her bosom, and exclaimed, "This is the only comfort I have left; I shall never more be able to look upon its blessed pages, but I can think of the blessed promises I have learned from it," and then began to repeat some of its promises: "Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he will sustain thee." "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee.," "My grace is sufficient for thee." etc. She dried her tears, became submissive to the will of God, and was happy.—Children's Friend.

NOT ABOVE IT.

"Where is Bob—I thought he was going?" asked one boy of the other as they went towards the water.

"Bob! he is washing his mother's dishes," said the other boy. "Bob is nothing but a kitchen girl half of the time, Bob is. I would—" but I dare not write what Augustus said he would do if he were in Bob's place.

Pretty soon Bob's steps were heard behind them. "Not going without me, are you?" he cried in a gay tone.

"I thought you had your stint washing dishes," said Augustus. "It seems to me pretty mean business your mother puts you to. I did not know it was boys' work to do such things."

"It is boys' work to do anything to help at home," cried Bob, with an angry flush upon his cheek; "and if I can help mother by washing up her dishes, I am glad and thankful to do it. One good turn deserves another; and when I think of all she does for us, I like to lend a helping hand to do for her."

"But washing dishes!" said Augustus, scornfully.

"Cleaning up is not the worst business in the world," cried Bob, good-naturedly. "I know plenty of worse things."

"You have got the right of it," said Tom, "I only wish I had a mother to wait on."

Yes, Bob is in the right of it. A boy who trains himself, or who is trained to notice things about home, and to bear a hand in the little matters which need help here or need help there, is growing up to be something more than a selfish, noisy, whistling, teasing member of the household, who expects to be waited on from morning till night. Active sympathy with another's burdens makes household burdens all the lighter. And Bob, I am sure, will make a husband whose wife can never complain of a want of interest in things at home.—Child's Paper.

"THE OLD WOMAN."—This is what a big boy called his mother, the other day.

Young man, speak kindly to your mother, and very courteously, tenderly, of her. But a little time and you shall see her no more forever. Her eyes are dim, her form is bent, and her shadow falls graveward. Others may love you when she has passed away—kind hearted sisters perhaps, or she whom of all the world you choose as a partner—she may love you warmly, passionately; children may love you fondly, but never again, never while time is yours, shall the love of woman be to you as that of your old trembling mother has been.

—A HAPPY FACE.—Solomon says "A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance," and it is certain there is no pleasanter sight to see. We are apt to look upon a cheerful countenance as an indication of perfect health, or, at least of comparative freedom from disease, when, in nine cases out of ten, the greatest sufferers wear the sweetest smiles.

Church News.
JULY 24th, 1874.

Dear Pilgrim :—

By request of many brethren and sisters we will give your readers a report of the visit we made among the scattered members, and the young churches, in north-western Kansas and south-western Nebraska.

Brother Samuel C. Stump and the writer, left the Falls City Church on the 9th of June for Dickinson County, Kan. We met with the members of Abilene Church on the 11th, at the house of brother John Humbarger, in church council. Stayed four days in this church. Had one communion and four other meetings. One addition by baptism. Brother John Humbargor was ordained from the second degree to the full ministry. Michael Fornoy elected to the first degree of the ministry; Abram Bear to the office of Deacon.

On the morning of the 15th we started for Mitchell County, a distance over one hundred miles. Landed at Cawker City, the county-seat, at the house of brother Peter Wolf. On the 16th we had one meeting here, in the town school house. We visited members west of this in Osborn County, by the name of Shuck.

On the 18th, went to Jewell County to brother Daniel Gish's; meeting in the evening at the Iona school house, on Limestone Creek. Here we met with sixteen members. We met at the house of brother Baily, on the 19th, in the White Rock church, near Salem, near the Smith county line. Here we met some sixty members assembled for communion, and it was a love feast indeed. I must confess I never saw more tears of love flown in the same time than was witnessed here; also, the best of order by the spectators during the three days of meeting. Here the church by mutual agreement, divided the district—cut off Osborn and Smith Counties in an organization called Solomon Valley church.

David O. Brumbaugh is the minister in charge of the new district. They also had a choice for Deacon—Henry Landis was chosen. Lewis Lerew, deacon, fell into that district. They also had a choice and ordination in the old district. Allen Ives, their oldest minister in the second degree; by unanimous consent was ordained to the full ministry, and I. Garman and Lawrence Garman were chosen deacons. Brethren James Switzer, Baily and Paul Porter, are the helpers in the ministry in said district.

S. C. Stump left in the forenoon of the second day after the service of ordination and instalation were over, in company with some of the brethren, to fill the appointments eastward, in Jewell and Republic counties.

On the 20th we had preaching twice at the same place, and once at Garman's. Also on Sunday 21st, at the same place, in the forenoon while brother Stump preached at Burr Oak, at 10 a. m. and in the night at Crab school house. I went north, Sunday evening, to Webster county, Nebraska, to B. Wagner's. Meeting at night.

On the 22nd, brother Stump had morning services at the Meyers, school house, north of White Rock City. Here were seven applicants for baptism, which was administered in the Republican river. I went to Red Cloud, in company with brother Baily, to visit a sister in her isolated state, who had about made up her mind she could not live an humble Christian enough, in that town, to remain in the church, and had determined to go to the Methodists church, where they have a wider gate and a broader road to go on than the one Christ taught; but after reasoning with her on the subject, she wished time to consider the subject more seriously. I hope and pray, if she is honest, that God may grant her grace to pass through the struggle and to come out conqueror.

We resumed our journey back to Jewell county, to the house of brother Bailey, and on the 23rd came to Burr Oak; had meeting at night, while brother Stump had meeting at Cuba school house, in Milcreek church, Republic county Kansas. On the 24th Elder Stump met with the brethren and sisters from three different counties, at the house of brother Amos Reed, for church council, where the Elder declined to serve for some cause better known to him than to me; so he appointed a council on the 2nd day of July, at the same place, where they again assembled at the appointed hour, when the writer assumed the labor of that day in settling the difficult.

Brother Stump spent his time pleasantly in exhortation and prayer, which is preferable, if we were allowed to choose when sent by the church, as we were. On the evening of 24th brother Stump had meeting again at the Cuba school house, while brother Ives and myself were on the Limestone, Jewell county, at Iona school house. Here we met twenty members. From here brother Ives went home, while brother David Dale took me to Glen Elder to visit two old sisters by the name of Teeder, where we had meeting on the evening of the 25th, in the town school house, in Mitchell county, while brother Stump had his last night meeting near Daniel Smith's, in a school house, from whence Stump left for Brown school house to the lovefeast, while I returned on the 26th to Jewell county, to brother Daniel Gish's.

Night meeting in the Sod school house on Ash creek. Congregation could not near all get in the house. On the 27th came back to brother Ives. He brought me on to brother James Switzer's house where we had meeting at night and next day, Sunday 28th, at 10 a. m. One admission by baptism; at night, meeting at Crab school house. On the 29th, Ives brought me along on his way going to Fairberry for a reaper. We came the same day to friend Joseph Hegle's for night meeting; could not near all get in the house.

On the 30th, brother Ives went on to Nebraska, while I had meeting at 10 a. m, at Highland school house. Three admissions by baptism—one an old lady in the seventy-fifth year of her age, and who, since May 9th weighed about 300 pounds, yet she went through the ordinance seemingly with as much calmness and ease, as any other one. She lived for a number of years in the Methodist church, where she could no longer satisfy herself, as she could not have the right to live out the ordinances of the gospel as she understood them from the reading of the Scriptures, and she says she wishes to live them all out in her old days. Meeting again at brother Hegle's house at night; he and his wife were both added. She is the daughter of the above named; all had belonged to the Methodists.

On the 1st of July, I went to Millcreek, meeting at night in the Union school house July 2nd, met at 9 a. m. for church council. Three admissions to the church; after baptism we returned again from Millcreek to the house of brother Amos Reed for council, where the church was pretty generally represented. The council came off with the best expressions of love and brotherly affection for one another of all those present, for those not present we cannot speak.

The church was also united to have their ministers advanced from the first to the second degree, and as they had no one in their district authorized to baptize we saw proper to serve them also in this, and it was done. Some may ask the question Is there not a brother in the second degree, in that county, that moved there? I will answer yes; there is a man there, whom I will not name now, that does not alone withhold his letter of membership from the church like some other ones do, but he has acted contrary to the advise of Annual Meeting; some because they esteem themselves above their brother, and some for one cause and some for another. I have even met with one who recalled his letter from the brother holding it, after it was read before the church, and said he will have nothing to do with the church, nor will he come to the council to be reconciled. Annual Meeting advises us not to receive any without giving their letters to the church; and I say any brother withholding his letter over one council meeting, when in the bounds of an organized church, should not be received without an acknowledgement. Had meeting again at night at the Union school house; attendance good.

On July 3rd we went to Elk Creek school house in Cloud county, also on the 4th at night, meeting at the same school house. On the 5th, preaching at the same place, at 10 a. m. In the evening at the Ingrim school house, near Dan'l Smith's, Republic county. On the 6th went to Jefferson county, Nebraska, on Rock Creek; preaching at night in Matthews school house, near brother McCraig's. Here are four members.

On the 7th I went to Carleton, Thayer county, on the Denver and St. Joe Railroad, to Andrew Griffith's and where the Holsinger's live. Seven members here. I gave them three meetings at this place. Methinks there should be a church organized here before long. In this place, as well as in many other place where I have been, they should have one to preach for them. Now, why is it that the church is so slow in sending her ministers to those places, where not alone brethren and sisters are in want of the bread of life, but the brethren's children, and hundreds of honest souls that would embrace the truth if it was only preached to them.

Brethren, you need not be afraid to go out among the poor homesteaders. I know I can enjoy their society and their meals much better than I could enjoy myself in a King's court; or with the high and fashionable. And I must confess with thankfulness to God, and to my brethren and sisters and many friends, where ever I was with them I have shared their good things far above my deservings. May the good Lord bless them and reward them for their deeds of love, is my prayer. I enjoyed the best of health all the time.

On the 11th of July I arrived safely at home and found all well for which I thank God.

Yours in Christian love.

AN INQUIRY.

An explanation of the Word of God is desired, as we believe, when we have the word, we have the spirit of the word, seeing the word is spirit and it is life. The Gospel reads like this: Moreover if thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault, between thee and him alone. If he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother, but if he will not hear thee, take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church, but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen and a publican. Now the question is, whether it is a private trespass, or whether it is a private interview only, and the trespass to be established to the one that done the trespass. Some say that the two members taken is to establish what they see and hear when they are taken with the parties to the church, knowing nothing about the trespass. Does a trespass ever turn to be a transgression, and if so, where is the turning point? We know there are transgressions but we find them farther back in the book. Now we want an answer to this from as many as can give us light. If more light can be given than the Gospel gives, show us the connecting link.

S. HARSHMAN.

Dear Pilgrim:—

Out of sympathy for suffering humanity, and from a sense of duty toward my fellow-beings, I have thought to give, through this medium, the following recipe, an easy and cheap remedy for that dread malady, Dropsy.

Take one ounce of rhubarb, one ounce of Eastern Chamomile flowers, one ounce of Columbo root, one-fourth ounce of aloes, one half ounce of cinnamon drops. Put together in a bottle and add one quart of the best Holland gin. Of this tincture take a table-spoon full three times a day, or just enough to move the bowels to operate three or four times a day.

When one quart is taken, add to the old dregs one-half the former quantity of all the ingredients except the gin, of this add the same (one quart) as before. Rise early wash hands and face in cold water, and bathe the feet in warm watey at night. Take exercise in a rocking chair, or on horse-back, or in a carriage, freely. Diet should be simple and light, but yet nutritious; but positively no swine flesh, nor coffee, nor vinegar.

I know of four cases that were cured permanently by using the above, that had been given up as incurable by all physicians that had the cases in hand, one of which cases was my own son. I know of but one case of which it was said to have entirely failed.

On cash Creek near brother and sister Hartman's 4 miles west of Woodland, Yolo Co., Cal., Oct., 15th.

At the Brethren's Meeting-house 1½ miles north of Plattsburg, in the South York congregation, Clinton county Mo. September 26 and 27.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Please announce to the readers of your worthy paper, that the Brethren of the Buck Creek church, Henry Co., Ind., will hold a communion meeting at their meeting-house, 2½ miles west of Blountville, on October 20th and 21. A cordial invitation is given to all, especially ministering brethren.

By order of the church.

LEVI HIMES.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Please announce in the PILGRIM that we, the brethren and sisters composing the church of Clarion county, Pa., intend holding our Lovefeast, the Lord willing, on the 26th and 27th of September. A general invitation is extended, especially to ministering brethren. Meeting commences at 10 o'clock. By order of the church.

CATHARINE KLINE.

Brother Brumbaugh:—

Please announce through the PILGRIM that our Communion Meeting in the Desmoins Valley Church, Polk, Co. Iowa will be held on the 26 and 27 of September next near Altoona Iowa, at Bro. Michael Garbers. The usual invitation is extended especially to laboring brethren.

G. R. BAKER.

Altoona Iowa.

DIED.

HUDDLESTON—July 24th 1874, little Jakie, infant son, and only child of friend Job Huddleston, aged 9 months and 11 days.

N. CROUSE.

FREDERICK.—Near Woodbury Bedford county Pa., on July 26th 1874, Esther infant daughter of brother Adam and sister Annie Frederick, aged 3 years, 6 mos. and 14 days. Disease, spinal affection. Occasion improved by the Brethren.

LEONARD FORRY.

STONER.—In the Beaver Dam church, Frederick county, Md., July 19th, 1874, after an illness of 14 weeks with heart disease and dropsy, David Stoner, aged 72 years and 16 days.

He was, for many years, a deacon in the Beaver Dam church. He being my father, it does not become me to speak of his qualifications or faithfulness, farther than that we believe he has gone from labor to his reward. We have hope in his death

STONER.—Also, in the same congregation, March 21st, brother John Stoner, brother of the above, in the 79th year of his age. They both entered the service of the Lord in their youth, and were faithful to the end.

EPH. W. SOTNER.

(Companion please copy.)

BROWER.—In the Barren Ridge congregation, Augusta county, Va., June 23nd, 1874, Jacob H. Brower, aged 15 years. Funeral occasion improved by brother Levi Garber and others, to an attentive congregation.

The subject of this notice was a son of brother Enoch and sister Annie Brower. The disease was rather a strange one; he first felt a pain in his leg. They called in a doctor, but he could not check the disease and it went on so rapidly that in the short space of 8 or 9 days it had done its work. This should be another warning to the young to prepare to meet their God.

S. J. G.

COFFMAN—In the Manor Church, Md., on the 20th of July, 1874, after an illness of six weeks, sister Lizzie Coffman, wife of brother Peter Coffman, aged 31 years, 7 months and 7 days.

On the 22nd her remains were followed by a large concourse of relatives and friends to the Manor church graveyard and there deposited to remain until the morning of the resurrection. She leaves a husband and five little children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by our brethren, D. Long and D. Wolf.

JACOB REICHARD.

(Companion please copy.)

MILLER.—Near Millersburg, Rock Run district, Ind., March 22nd, 1874, brother Abraham Miller, aged 75 years, 5 months and 12 days.

The subject of this notice was confined to his bed for 14 weeks, and suffered much but bore it with christian fortitude. He was annointed a few months before his death, and longed for his time of departure to come so that he could be present with his Lord. He was the father of 12 children, (9 living) 69 grand children, and 12 great grand children. He leaves a wife, a sister in the Church, children and many friends to mourn their loss.

ANNA LANTZ.

HESS.—On July 10th, in the Antietam church, Franklin county, Pa sister Lorina Hess, daughter of sister Lena Hess, aged 16 years, 11 months and 27 days.

She became a member of the church when quite young, in her 14th year, and lived a faithful member until death, her death came very unexpectedly; and may this be a warning to all. Funeral occasion improved by elders Henry Koontz and Jacob Price.

JACOB SNOWBERGER.

VANDILL—Departed this life in Fayette Co., W. Va., near Miller's Ferry, July 2nd, 1874, Nancy D., daughter of Joseph Vandill, aged 13 years, and 20 days.

The subject of this notice is truly one of the deepest sympathy. It is supposed she came to her death by falling into the river and was drowned.

The mother was at the river engaged in washing her clothes, while her daughter was fishing, The mother finished her work and started for home, only a short distance, and told her daughter to come with her to the house. She said she would come soon. The mother went home. Nannie did not come as soon as she ought, and her mother ran back to the river where she had left her, but, alas! she could not find her dear one, and they did not find her until the next day, when they found her dead floating on the water. Her dress had caught on a limb in the water a short distance down the river from where her mother had left her fishing. Dear reader, just imagine the feelings of that dear mother when she ran back in search of little Nannie, and could not find her. What a distressing night it must have been to the parents and the rest of the family. I have no acquaintance with the family as they live some distance away, I gather these few particulars from the brethren who attended the funeral.

I have no doubt from all accounts the mother is almost heart-broken for they who were acquainted with Nannie say she was a very interesting little girl. Then I would say to the parents and friends lift up your heads and weep no longer, for Nannie, but weep for yourselves, for we hope Nannie is gone to that just and true God who gave her; and dear parents I hope you will strive the more earnestly to meet her in a better world, where parting is no more, and where God shall wipe all tears away.

Funeral services by the brethren, Joseph Hutchison, and G. W. Crouse.

NANCY CROUSE

MISCELLANEOUS.

Bro. Jacob Eshleman of Polk Co. Iowa says the wheat crop is remarkable good. The corn crop promises well. We are having plenty of rain.

Sister Nancy Crouse of Oak Hill W. Va. says: We had a very distressing drouth here for three or four months. The prospects for a crop are very gloomy. But the Lord is helping us now with a good rain which I think will make some corn yet.

The following we clip from one of our letters:

Dear Pilgrim:—

I have long been watching your columns to see some more of the good advice of "Uncle Henry" for the young, but so far my watching has been in vain. Tell him not to forget to write and the young will not forget to read. Cheer up Uncle Henry and let us hear from you again.

We suppose Uncle Henry has been spending his time in the hay and harvest field and has not had time to write, but as the evenings are now getting longer you may expect to hear from him soon.

From J. S. Flory we have the following: "We are all well, thank the Lord, have had fine rains during the last week,—crops are doing fine. Stock are doing unusually well. Emigration into the territory still continues in a continuous stream. There are many reports of Indian troubles in remote parts of the territory, and adjoining territories. In this valley all is quiet now, and no great apprehension of trouble with the red men, or comet either.

A young sister wishing a situation in the office can be accommodated by making application at once. We desire only such applicants as have a good standing in the Church and are persevering and willing to work. The necessary qualifications are, good spelling, reading and writing. None should apply unless they can remain several years. Address, PILGRIM Office, Box 172, Huntingdon, Pa.

On the eve of the 6th inst. being delayed a few hours in Altoona, we concluded to call on McFarland who resides near the Church lately purchased there. He informs us that they have had preaching every alternate Sunday and are now making arrangements to have services every Sunday. The meetings are well attended and the field is hopeful if carefully occupied. They have also organized a small school which is growing in numbers and may be the means of accomplishing great good if judiciously managed. On the last Sunday they had raised their number to seventy scholars.

IS JUDAISM DECLINING?—The Jewish Messenger replies to this question in the negative and says:

"Let it not be said that we are hoping against hope; that for centuries we have prayed for a return to our golden age, or for the coming of a Messiah, and that our petitions have been unproductive; that our faith must decline, seeing that we are as yet dispised throughout every land, and no signs appear in the Orient that the prophecies are about being fulfilled. The very fact of our dispersion affords strength to the wavering Jew. Do we not remain a constant miracle to demonstrate the truth of the prophecies? What would be the state of the religious world in our day, agitated as it is by the votaries of infidelity and scepticism, where the Israelite not to support the truth of revelation? Our religion is not declining. We do not hesitate in saying that at no period in our modern history have we maintained a better condition before the world than we do now, and this assertion can be confirmed by the most substantial evidence. Let us hope that the waverer and the nonconformist will swell the ranks of the God-fearing, so that those who come after us may, through our example, continue to strengthen the cause of our faith, so that the Messianic period may take place, and general happiness prevail throughout the world."

—DISASTERS BY FLOOD.—There has been a perfect epidemic of sad disasters by storm and flood during the present summer. First came the Mill River calamity in which by the bursting of a reservoire one hundred and forty-five persons were swept into eternaty, an immense amount of property destroyed and hundreds of families left destitute. Then occurred several minor calamities from a similar cause, until it seemed that our reservoirs generally were about to break away. Then came the Salisbury disaster, by which another valley was devastated, and which which was accompanied by storms anp floods in various parts of the country. A fortnight since we had an account of the bursting of a waterspout in Nevada, which swept through the town of Eureka, killing twenty persons and causing great destruction of property. Last week, the fearful storm at Pittsburg, by which portions of that city and of Allegany city were inundated and from one to two hundred lives lost. The number of bodies of the dead which had been recovered at the last account, was one hundred and thirty-three, and many persons were still missing. The Atlantic cable now brings the intelligence that the damage done by the recent storms in Moravia, of which we had previous accounts, far exceeds the first estimates. Eleven villages and two towns were devastated. Numerous storms and floods, only less destructive to life and property, have occurred during the present summer, making an unusual record, and one full of sad particulars.

Some of these calamities might have been prevented, and would have been by an honest construction of the works which gave way, and so far they are attributable to human negligence. But others may be regarded as a direct visitation from God, who holds the winds in his fists, and the waters in the hollow of his hand. And they are not to be regarded merely as casualties, as accidental occurrences. They should be looked upon as solemn lessons to our whole people not to set their hearts upon uncertain possessions which may be swept away in an hour—not to be too confident of the continuance of life, when there are so many perils surrounding us whether we wake or sleep.

But there is one lesson connected with most of these calamities that ought not to pass unheeded. In the hurry and bustle and excitment that is coming over the world in the transaction of business, and especially in the pursuit of riches, there is a constantly growing disregard of human life, and an inattention to the precautions necessary to its preservation. This is shown everywhere. Too many are ready to risk lives by the wholesale if they can only shift the responsibility one degree from themselves. Money is too often the great, the object; the lives and safety of others only secondary considerations. The sacredness of human life is fast passing away from the minds of the people, as shown not only by the events that are occurring, but by the frivolous decisions of those who are called to hold solemn inquest when such disasters occur. How to arrest the evil and rekindle in the mindes of the people the sacred regard for that which is the direct gift of God, breathed into the body from his spirit, is a problem that is difficult of solution, but it is a subject that ought to command more general attention. If it should be enforced upon the public mind by disastrous occurrences which have been the result of criminal neglect, it will be well, but we fear it will not.—N. Y. Observer.

The baptists of the south-west have decided to locate their denominational university at Jackson, Tenn., that place having offered the largest sum ($150,000) to secure it. Murfreesboro' bid $139 500, and Chattanooga and McMinnville $100,000 each.

There are five Protestant Episcopal parishes in New York in which the confessional is isued, and penance taught as one of the sacraments.

LITERATURE.

Popular Science Monthly. Conducted by Prof. E. L. Youmans. July and August 1874. 127 pages $5.00 a year, 50 cents a number. D. Appleton & Co., N. Y.

To those who would investigate the scientific theories of our age and time, without being obliged to take a course of professional training enabling them to understand and comprehend the technicalities of scientific treatises, this monthly is of the greatest value. It aims to present science fresh, as it is today, clothed in language but is comprehensive and plain, and teaches how to apply its teachings to our every day wants and thus enable us to utilize them. These numbers contain articles of more than ordinary interest. Our space forbids detail.

J. B. Lippincot & Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., are not sparing in their efforts that tend to make their Magazine the finest of its kind, in illustrations, paper, typography and interest of its contents. The July and August numbers, the first of the new volume, the 14th—give evidence of increased attractions. The Sunday Magazine published in this country by the same house, is always filled with the kind of articles that would not fail to prevent a person in the country or elsewhere from spending the hours of the Sabbath idly, or to little purpose.

Old and New for July devotes its introduction, which is always fresh, and upon the issues of the day, to the subject of education, or more especially to the deficiencies in our system of education in colleges, and high schools. In these strictures good suggestions are offered. Dr Martineau continues his Protestant Theory of Authority, and in the August number gives a striking exposition of the contrast between the Gospel of John and the preceeding three. In contrasting the language and mystic features of the Fourth Gospel with the peculiarly Hebrew traits of the Revelation, he concludes with great force of reasoning, that the two books were not written by the same person, and that the Gospel of John was written much later than is usually supposed.—Roberts Bro's. Boston.

Oliver Optic's Magazine "for young and old" continues as bright, fresh and attractive as ever. It is much admired by those who have been accustomed to its entertainment. Since "St. Nicholas" has been swallowing up several of the choice periodicals for the young, some of the readers of "Oliver Optic's" have feared that it would share a similar fate, but so far it has been able to paddle its canoe without fear of being engulphed by the "coming wave."—Lee and Shepherd, Boston.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SUMMER COMPLAINTS.—This is the season when diarrhœa, dysentery, and cholera infantum are induced by wrong living. Over-eating and eating improper substances are prolific causes of summer complaints. Impure air or living in ill ventilated rooms is another; an unclean skin, another. Instead of a daily bath, many go from Saturday night to Saturday night without putting on a clean skin, or freeing themselves from those bad odors arising from the oily exudations of the skin, which, becoming rancid, give off those "horrid smells from filthy feet, arm-pits, and other parts. A daily hand-bath in a quart or more of clean soft water—cold tepid or warm, according to circumstances—would keep the body clean and sweet.

Swill milk—taken from sick cows, fed on the slops of distilleries—kill thousands of children in the city every year. Oh, the wickedness of these poisoning, swindling murderers!

Pure, sweet milk, from healthy cows, with fresh, well cooked oatmeal, crushed wheat, farina, white corn, rice, barley, and Graham bread, peas and beans, fresh ripe fruits, etc., would not only be delicious, but healthful, and prevent those summer complaints which bring anxiety to every mother's mind.

Stop dosing, no matter what's the matter; it always makes a bad matter worse to dose. "The let alone policy" is much the best. Bring the patient into fresh air—mind that—keep the pores of the skin open and free by proper bathing; give him a little, not too much plain and proper food. Let his sleep be abundant, and his rest perfect. If there be any mend in him he will rally. In many cases doctors and other meddlers do the killing, while, if let alone, nature would do the curing.—Science of Health.

—The Women's temperance movement in Chicago is being in a quiet, but effective way. Certain streets are chosen and districted and the ladies, two by two visit every saloon, even the lowest. A small sheet has been printed both in English and German—upon one page is printed an appeal to licensed saloon-keepers, on the other a number of statistics concerning the liquor traffic. Sometimes they simply ask the proprietors to read the sheet carefully. If there is an opportunity they talk to them in a kind, quiet way. The effect of this work is sometimes remarkable. One of the ladies, a teacher of some celebrity, thus relates an instance: "We had in our meeting, a few days ago, a saloon-keeper who has given up his business. He was visited by two Quaker ladies. After handing him the leaflet, one of them felt moved to say something to him, and asked him this question, 'Friend, dost thou know what thou art doing?' He said, after they left, their words came to him with still greater meaning, and every one who came to the Saloon brought up the question, 'Dost thou know that thou art destroying souls!' He closed his saloon and went home early in the afternoon, and during the night was so troubled that he could not sleep. The result was that he closed his saloon not to open it again, and says, by the help of God he will never engage in this unholy traffic.

—CURIOSITIES OF GRAFTING.—There are many curious facts about vegetable life, says the Massachusetts Ploughman. We can, for example, graft the apricot on the plum, and the peach on the apricot, and thus we may produce a tree with plum roots and almond leaves. The wood, however, of the stem will consist of four different varieties, though formed from one continuous layer. Below the almond wood and the bark we shall have a perfect peach wood and bark, then perfect apricot wood and bark, and at the bottom perfect plum wood and bark. In this curious instance we see the intimate correspondence between the bark and the leaf, for if we should remove the almond branches, we might cause the several sorts of wood to develop buds and leafy twigs, each of its own kind. Each section of the compound stem has its seat of life in the cambium layer, and the cambium of each reproduces cells of its own species out of a common nutrient fluid.—Evening at Home.

THE NEW IMPROVED

Remington Sewing Machine.

AWARDED

THE "MEDAL FOR PROGRESS,"

AT VIENNA, 1873.

THE HIGHEST ORDER OF "MEDAL" AWARDED AT THE EXPOSITION.

NO SEWING MACHINE RECEIVED A HIGHER PRIZE.

A FEW GOOD REASONS:

1. A new invention thoroughly tested and secured by Letters Patent.
2. Makes a perfect LOCK STITCH alike on both sides, on all kinds of goods.
3. Runs Light, Smooth, Noiseless and rapid—the best combination of qualities.
4. Durable—Runs for years without repairs. Will do all varieties of work and fancy stitching in a superior manner.
6. It is the most easily managed by the operator. Length of stitch may be altered while running, and machine can be threaded without passing thread through holes.
7. Design simple, ingenious, elegant, forming the stitch without the use of Cog Wheel Gears, Rotary Cams or Lever arms. Has the Automatic Drop feed, which insures uniform length of stitch at any speed. Has our new thread controller, which allows easy movement of needle-bar and prevents injury to thread.
8. CONSTRUCTION most careful and finished. It is manufactured by the most skillful and experienced mechanics, at the celebrated REMINGTON ARMORY, ILION, N. Y. Philadelphia office, 816 Chestnut Street.

EDUCATION.

As the subject of education has been somewhat agitated of late in our papers, I thought I would cast in a mite also.

Education, properly speaking is what we learn from the cradle to the grave. Human beings come upon the stage of existence as ignorant and helpless as the animals, for even the animals know how to provide for their own wants without being taught. But man, made in the image of his Creator, endowed with an immortal soul, and only a little lower than the angels, gifted with intellectual and reasoning powers, above all of God's creatures must learn all that he wishes to know. He must be educated, or he is little better than the animals.

The animal part must first be properly nourished in order to form a foundation for a good, healthy and sound constitution, and then it is absolutely necessary to our well-being, comfort and happiness, in this world and that which is to come to educate ourselves. By education is meant the cultivation of the different faculties of the mind. It then becomes our duty to get all the education which lies within our power, and the more and better it is, the more useful we can be to ourselves and those around us. In gaining knowledge we increase our power either for good or evil; so it is very necessary while we are being educated to endeavor to acquire correct ideas of what we wish to learn, as it is harder to unlearn error than to learn the truth in the first place. It seems we never get too old learn, but as youth is the Spring-time of life, the seeds of knowledge should be planted before the mind has become burdened with the cares of the world. Our education should be useful, practical and benevolent; it should not be laid away to rust as the miser does his gold; the use of it will enable us better to combat with error and vice.

As the question, "Do we need a School?" is before the brethren now, it should set us to thinking on the subject of education. It is plain to be seen that there is a great deal of improper education in use at the present time among the popular churches. We find that much of their doctrines are disseminated through their theological schools and colleges, and as learning gives power and influence their pupils imbibe their ideas and, go out into the world teaching for doctrines the commandments of men and find many who are ready to receive them. In conversing with a brother on this subject, he related the the circumstance of a brother of his, who is also a member of the church, having a son, whom he sent away to school. The teacher being an infidel, the father found upon the son's return that he had imbibed many of the teacher's ideas and principles of infidelity. The father said he would not have believed that a teacher would have so much influence over a pupil. So true it is as a poet has said:

"Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

With these facts in view, and with the Bible in our hands, and guided by the truth we can safely trust that God will stand by us. I do not see why we should hesitate to place the means of education within the reach of our rising generation.

While we are zealous for the pure simplicity and doctrines of Christ does it not become our doty to do all, in our power to disseminate those doctrines; and if the institutions of learning which are already in the world have so much influence in spreading heir doctrines, it is not right that we should be idle while others are so busy. We should encourage schools governed by the truth. Our young people who have inquiring minds begin to feel the force of education, and they will have it too, and if there were well established schools among the brethren, they would be likely to go there, but if not they will go elsewhere and thereby may stray from the nurture and admonition which they received in early childhood. As the world grows older it grows wiser, at least in its eyes.

It seems that learning is more necessary in this age of the world than it used to be, and as error spreads so easily, it sometimes seems to require the truth clothed with the power of learning to crush its influence. I believe that some of our ministers many times feel their need of this. They feel and know that they have truth on their side, but for lack of the medium of education they are not able to cope with those who fling out untruths brazen-faced before the world. I do not say this is so with all of them, for I know we have mighty men among us, who, if they did not receive a collegiate education have learned the art of thinking and have cultivated and trained their minds to the task of promulgating the truth, and thereby gained more talents than they naturally possessed. And are we not commanded to improve our talents? And, if we have but one, that does not excuse us from cultivating it. We can read what became of the servant who hid his Lord's money.

I believe there has been much good done by the brethren through the publication of our periodicals and and tracts, even Moore's tract on "Trine Immersion" has pretty effectually silenced the enemy in some instances, even when he did not want to be convinced of the the truth, and has also been a source of information to many brethren and sisters who did not have the opportunity of gaining as much information on the subject as they desired, and which will serve to strengthen their faith also.

I was once talking with a minister of the United Brethren Church on the subject of secret societies. He was inquiring how we stood in regard to such societies. I told him that we did not receive members that belonged to any order if we knew it, and in the course of the conversation I had occasion to refer to an article in the PILGRIM, upon which he said he thought the Dunkards did not publish anything. I told him that we published several papers. He said he thought they were opposed to publishing anything at all; when in reply, I said, that for many years there was but one magazine printed, but of late years there were several papers, and we were being roused up to the necessity of education and such things. He said he was glad to hear it, it would make them more aggressive, and they would wield a power which they would not otherwise have.

So we see that thinking people understand the power of education. But it is like wealth, it can be used for good or evil, and there are not many, even among the brethren, who hesitate to accumulate wealth through the fear that it may become a snare to them, notwithstanding it is pretty soundly denounced by our Savior who has said that a rich man could hardly enter the kingdom of heaven. Poverty need not keep us out of heaven but ignorance may, for are we not exhorted to add to our faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge? It has been said that education would tend to increase pride in the church, but I cannot see why it should have any greater tendency to pride than wealth has. Wealth gives us the power of possessing many of the fine things of this world which might, in a spiritual point of view, be better to do without. A person that will be lifted up through learning would be apt to have a little pride sticking in him anyhow, for do we not often see ignorance and pride go together? I have sometimes seen persons, who, if they had been a little better educated would not have been quite so self-conceited. We need the Spirit of Christ and the grace of God to keep us humble, and a proper education need not prevent us from having it, neither ought a knowledge of the sciences and arts make us proud. Should a knowledge of astronomy, botany or physiology, the structure of our own bodies, which are fearfully and wonderfully made, and of which we cannot make one hair white nor black, and many other things of which I, with my limited education know nothing about make us proud? The more we learn the more we find there is to learn, and the more capable we become of realizing and appreciating the knowledge, power and wisdom of the Creator of all things; and instead of making us proud it ought to make us more humble, when we remember that we are dependent upon him for everything we have, even for the air we breathe, and also indebted to Him for our capabilities of learning, and talents which He has commanded us to cultivate and improve, for our own good and His honor and glory. There could be much more said on this subject but let this suffice for the present, as I fear I intrude on the columns of the PILGRIM and the patience of its readers.

LUCINDA WEAVER.

PASSION FOR GETTING RICH.—A gentleman holding a position of trust made use of money not belonging to him, and was tempted to act so by unsuccessful speculation and extravagance in living. The judge in passing sentence, took advantages of the opportunity to read a wholesome lesson to the community. He said: "You are the self-made victim of a passion which seems to be seizing on society at large, and which, like disease, spares neither age nor sex, the single or the married, the rich or the poor—the passion for getting rich by one or more strokes of luck; by a process which is as much open to the fool as the wise man, to the knave is to the honest man. It appears as if in these times men had but one faith, one hope, one object in life—wealth. Respectability, contentment with what we have, the happiness of our families, honor, all are sacrificed to this one god of the age we live in. Every one is to be sacrificed—not only our own prospects, but the prospects of those dearest to us, the prospects of our wives and children—to the great mania of getting rich, and this wealth is not that which is the result of patient industry, uprightness in dealings, and legitimate trade, but the wealth of the gaming table."

To be bodily tranquil, to speak little and to digest without effort, are absolutely necessary to grandeur of mind or of presence, or to proper development of genious.—Balzac.

THE MODEL CHURCH.

Dear wife, I've found the model church! I worshipped there to-day;
It made me think of good old times before my hair was gray;
The meetin'-house was fixed up more than they were years ago.
But then, I felt when I went in, it wasn't built for show.

The sexton didn't seat me 'way back by the door;
He knew that I was old and deaf, as well as old and poor;
He must have been a Christian, for he led me boldly through
The long isle of the crowded church, to find a pleasant pew.

I wish you'd a heard the singin'—it had an old time ring;
The preacher said with trumpet voice, "Let all the people sing!"
The tune was "Coronation," and the music upward rolled,
Till I thought I heard the angels striking all their harps of gold.

My deafness seemed to melt away, my spirit caught the fire,
I joined my feeble, trembling voice with that melodious choir,
And sung, as if in youthful days, "Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem, and crown
Him Lord of all."

I tell you, wife, it did me good to sing that hymn once more;
I felt like some wrecked mariner who gets a glimpse of shore;
I almost want to lay aside this weather-
beaten form,
And anchor in the blessed port forever from the storm.

The preachin'! Well I can't just tell all the preacher said;
I know it wasn't written, I know it wasn't read.
He had'nt time to read it, for the lightin' of his eye
Went passing along from pew to pew, nor passed a sinner by.

The sermon wasn't flowery, 'twas simple gospel truth;
It fitted poor old men like me, it fitted hopeful youth;
'Twas full of consolation to weary hearts that bleed;
'Twas full of invitations to Christ, and not to creed.

How swift the golden moments fled within that holy place!
How brightly beamed the light of heaven from every happy face!
Again I longed for that sweet time when friend shall meet with friend,
"Where congregations ne'er break up and Sabbaths have no end."

I hope to meet that minister—the congregation too,—
In the dear home beyond the skies that shone from heaven's blue;
I doubt not I'll remember, beyond life's evening gray,
The happy hour of worship in that model church to-day.

Dear wife, the fight will soon be fought, the victory be won;
The shinin' goal is just ahead, the race is nearly won.
O'er the river we are nearin' they are throngin' to the shore,
To shout our safe arrival where the weary weep no more!

Remarks on 1st Peter 1: 3 4.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."

In the first place I am going to talk something about the apostle Peter. You who are bible readers, are aware that Peter was one of the twelve disciples, and it is often said that he was a backslider, which I deny, although he was permitted to see the Lord and do some miracles that the rest were not. John and Peter were bolder than the rest of the twelve. Peter was not a thoroughly converted man until on the day of Pentecost, notwithstanding he had the keys of the kingdom. "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed on heaven." Matt. 16: 19. But perhaps my readers would like to have "thus saith the Lord" for it. Well, before the Savior was crucified we hear him say unto Peter, "Simon, Simon, behold satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat. But I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not, and when thou art converted strengthen thy brethren." Luke 22: 30, 31. Now we plainly see that if Peter had been a thoroughly converted man the Savior would not have made use of any such language, and this was just before he was condemned to death. But Peter said unto the Lord, "I am ready to go with thee, both unto prison and to death." Luke 22: 33. But the Lord said, "the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me." And it is evident that he did deny him, but he wept bitterly and repented.

By the Jews condemning the Savior and the Gentiles crucifying him, Peter lost that hope that he had. But after the resurrection we hear him say, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again." Now mark, a thing must be begotten before it can be born, and the word again, implies more than once; so he was begotten unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Now notice, "When thou art converted strengthen thy brethren." "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come they were all of one accord in one place.", What takes place? The Holy Ghost was poured upon them, and there were Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven, and they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this? Others mocking said these men are full of new wine, but Peter standing up with the eleven lifted up his voice and said, we are not drunk as ye suppose seeing this is but the third hour of the day, but this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel and it shall come to pass saith Joel in the last days I will pour out of my spirit upon all flesh. You now begin to see Peter strengthening his brethren as the Lord had told him to do, and he spake as the Spirit gave him utterance.

Brethren, can we not say with Peter, "Blessed be God for his abundant mercy." If it had not been for the mercy of God, where, O where would we be? Many days past if God in his wrath had cut off the string of mercy while we were in our wickedness, where would we have fallen? No other place than in the dark region of eternal night. And does it not make us who are Christians shudder when we look back upon the past? Then dear fellow laborers in Christ, work while it is called to-day, and be as a city that is set upon a hill that cannot be hid, that the sinners that are around you may see your good works and be constrained to covenant with God to live faithful until death.

No wonder the apostle exclaimed, "Blessed," when he knew that Christ was put to death, and had risen again triumphant over death, hell and the grave. No doubt he was often studying of the past while Christ lay in the tomb, and such glorious, yea, welcome news coming to him, would have constrained him even by the power of God to make use of the language that stands at the head of this article. That hope that he had been begotten unto again, began to grow brighter; he begin to get stronger in his Master's cause. It seems to me that I can imagine the feelings that the apostle had when he could see his Savior again face to face and converse with him, as he had in former days that was now gone by. And was it not a glorious thing to those who saw the Son of God slain and put into the tomb, to be assured that he had risen triumphant, and gained the victory. Do we not suppose that angels were glad and even rejoiced at the idea of his resurrection. Did it not cause a wonderful excitement among those bloody tyrants that had him put to death, to hear that he again was living and had appeared to many before his ascension to heaven, where angels, authorites, and powers were made subject unto him. He is now our advocate with the Father to plead for poor dying mortals here on earth. But soon we must pass away, prepared or unprepared, yea, even to stand before the judgment seat of Christ to hear the welcome plaudit, "Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you, or depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you." If not in a state of readiness when death comes, we will be banished from the peaceful presence of God, and from the glory of his power. Which will we do? serve God or Mammon?

The apostle says, "to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you." Now what do we understand by an inheritance? It is something that is valuable even in a temporal point of view. Now suppose, reader, that you would receive a message that your father was deceased, and that he had a large estate of this world's goods, and that you was the only heir or even one of his heirs, and that he lived in the State of Virginia and you in the State of Missouri, would you not make preparations to start and prove or claim your share or the portion that fell to you? Suppose the inheritance to amount to a half million dollars, and that in gold coin. You knowing that if you never make any effort to prove your inheritance you would loose it, you would start at once for fear you would not obtain it. You prove now that you are the legal heir and there is no law to cut you out.

Just so in a spiritual point of view. If you prove that inheritance which is in heaven by the proper witnesses, there is no divine law that will cut you out and it is incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away. Peter says it is reserved in heaven for you.

But perhaps it will be necessary to say something about the witnesses that you need in order to prove your inheritance. Faith is one of your witnesses, for it is one of the first principles of religion. It is impossible to please God without it, and in order to receive it you must hear something. And what must we hear? The word of God, for Paul says, "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." I am aware that no one denies that we cannot please God without faith, and says one, this is sufficient to save us, for I heard a preacher say that faith alone would save us, But let us see. The same one that said "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," said "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Is his words more binding in one instance than another? No. Well then faith is a good witness, and repentance is another that we need in order to prove the inheritance. I would say here that it is as possible for a camel to go through the eye of a needle as a man to enter the kingdom of heaven without repentance, and when I say camel, I mean an animal, and when I say needle, I mean a common sewing needle, which we all know is impossible. Just so, except we repent we can never obtain that inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away. But perhaps if there was more preaching on repentance so many persons would not die without this witness. Oh! the necessity of repentance. What is repentance? It is godly sorrow, says one. I answer no. Why not? Because Paul says, "For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of." 2 Cor. 7: 10. So if godly sorrow was repentance itself, it would not work repentance. Webster's definition of repent is, to be reformed. So repentance is a reformation, to cease doing evil and turn to the Lord, and learn to do well. And if you repent not, the men of Ninevah will rise in judgement and condemn this sign seeking and unrepenting generation. The Savior says, "And the men of Ninevah shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it, because they repented at the preaching of Jonas, and behold a greater than Jonas is here." Mat. 12: 41. He does not even stop here with this multitude of men condemning you, but reduces it to a very small number. "The queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and behold a greater than Solomon is here." Matt. 12: 42 Can any of us bear the idea of this woman rising in the judgment and condemning us? Then let us take the proper witnesses to prove our inheritance. Another witness is baptism, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John 3: 5. Is this language of the Savior not binding? He says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Then we see at once that the word of God is not to be trifled with. I might say a great deal about this command, but my article has grown too long already. But I claim, and that from a Bible standpoint, that you must have this witness also. Then it is that you are in covenant relation with God, and then you have the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost. Then Peter said unto them, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38.

Now by obeying his word you have a right to that inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you. Now the powers of the world cannot hinder you from obtaining your crown of glory which is brighter than the noonday sun, or pearls of gold.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us choose that good part which Mary of old chose, that shall not be taken away from us. Then we can shout glory to the great Creator, and walk the gold paved streets of the New Jerusalem with palms of victory in our hands. Then may God help us to live the life of the righteous, and die the death of the saint.

Those who do right because it is "Policy" to do so, build their life on a very doubtful moral basis.

Respectable selfishness, is nothing more than a species of the meanest snobbery, a gangrene in society, secular and religious.

Jesus A Rock.

"The Lord is my rock." In many ways is the Lord said to be like unto a rock to those who trust in him. (Ps. 18: 2.)

He is a foundation rock. There are many materials to use for foundations on which to build, that will not endure the raging of the elements. Sand, and earth will wash away; wood will burn; metals will corrode; but a massive rock stands sure amid the swelling floods, the pelting storm, the sweeping blast, or the raging fire.

A rock, then, is a sure foundation. And so is Christ to those who rest their present and future well-being in him. No storms can move this foundation. 'Mid all the terrible onslaughts of opposing elements, Christ still abides. He is a fixed foundation. Men may build upon him. And while they remain fixed upon the rock, they will stand. Yet it is needful that men take heed how they build. To rest safely at all times, amid the changing scenes of moral strife, and still abide unmoved and content, one must be firmly fixed to the rock Christ Jesus, and must be also of the same materiel at the rock.

We read that the Eddystone lighthouse, a structure reared on one of the most dangerous parts of the coast of England, was built, and rebuilt, of various models and materials, but it invariably fell a prey to the pitiless elements, until one was built which was firmly bedded in the rock, and held by strong rods running from the solid rock beneath to the topmost stone, binding all as one solid piece. So built in Christ, bedded in him and bound by strong love to him, the Christian can "endure all things."

Christ is a clean rock on which the pilgrim is to travel to glory. Says the Psalmist, "He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings." (Ps. 40: 2.) He who walks in Christ walks in a clean way. "So walk ye in him," (Col. 2: 6.) There is no impurity in that way. No mire, no clay in which to slip, and plunge, and fall. In him our "goings" are "established." Here we may tread firmly and confidently, knowing that the way is sure and clean.

Too many are satisfied if they can but travel on amid mire and filth, seeking a path among the ruts that men have trod before them, or making a new track of their own. But the only true and clean path is made already in Christ. The "highway or holiness" is a clean way, and "the unclean shall not pass over it."

Christ is the rock of refuge When Moses saw the glory of the Lord pass by, he was first placed in the "cleft of the rock" on which he stood. There he was covered with God's hand. No man could see God's face and live.

So, he who is on the rock Christ Jesus, when the power that causes all to tremble shall pass by, shall find himself in the "rifted rock," resting secure amid the terrors around.

Christ is like the "shadow of a great rock in a weary land." When the soul is wearied and toil worn, and all around is a barren and desolate waste, then Christ our rock bids us rest beneath his shade, and be refreshed. And how inexpressibly soothing is his presence then! How sweet to repose "under the shadow of the Almighty." Only those who have felt this rest can know its blessedness.

Christ is a smitten rock. When the Hebrews were faint and thirsting in the wilderness, and there was no water near, then Moses smote the rock before them, and the water gushed forth a copious stream. And that rock followed them in all the way that God led them, and by it they were continually supplied.

For the soul that "thirsteth for the living God," there is a stream of life that flows from Christ, the smitten rock. His sufferings and death open for us a heavenly outgushing, whereby we may partake of life immortal. "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." What precious words! Who can tell the satisfaction of the soul that drinks the water of life? No longer dry and parched with thirst, and longing for that fullness of which it is deprived, but drinking satisfying draughts continually, and having every past longing fully supplied from Christ, the smitten rock.

Christ our rock! Here the thirsty soul may drink. Here the weary soul may sweetly rest in shadowy coolness from the heated way. Here the persecuted soul may find complete refuge. Here the traveller to glory's heights finds a sure path, and free from sin and uncleanness. And here the "home of the soul" may be built as a sure foundation, to abide all the time forever.—F. Burr, in Bible Banner.

The Power of the Spirit.

And if Christ be in you the body is dead because of sin. But the spirit is life because of righteousness. Rom. 8: 10.

The apostle Paul in writing to the Roman brethren, was very particular about the frame work of their progression, fearing some things of a carnal nature might still be lurking in the heart, which might have a tendency to destroy the dwelling place of Christ. Paul was not slow in reminding them of the great danger of death, not a temporal death, but a spiritual death. He presents the point in the form of a question, so that each member could examine his own temple, and see through the glass of God's word, that everything is in good order in or about the temple of their body and if Christ be in you, and his spirit planting in you a likeness of himself, we assuming the same nature, and the same desire to do the whole will of God then it will be, that the body is dead because of sin, dead to everything of a carnal nature, for they that are after the flesh, do mind things of the flesh,—are dead in sin again, for to be carnally minded is death, because carnal mind is enmighty against God, for it is not subject to the law of God neither indeed can be.

Let us consider what the works of the flesh are. Hear Paul on this mather. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witheraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath; sedition, heresies, envying, murders, drunkendess, revelings and such like. Gal. 5: 19, 20, 21.

Dear brethren and sisters are we using any of the above meterial in the erection of our building? If so, it will not stand the fire of God's word, but will be consumed at the last day. Let us be very particular to have a good foundation in the first place to build upon, as it is a very important undertaking to frame a character to stand through all eternity. Let us measure everything that we need to complete our building, by the rule of God's word, and dig deep, and lay our foundation on Jesus Christ. Let him be the center of our faith, the word our guide, to the end of our journey.

The last clause of our text shows us the power of the spirit. The holy spirit is the title of that divine being, the comforter, the Holy Ghost, plainly distinguished from the Father, and the son. Through his influence the truth is received, understood, believed, and obeyed. He quickens those who are dead in trespass and sin. All that become obedient to the word of God, he purifies and sanctifies them and prepares them to glorify God and enjoy Christ's presence forever. In conclusion let me entreat the reader to be encouraged, to compare our profession and progression with the word of God, so in the last we may stand clothed in righteousness because we are conformed in heart to the character and will of God wrought in and through the holy spirit through faith in Christ. This will give us a right to the tree of life, and admit us in through the gates in to the holy city. Brethren and sisters let us not forget that it is the holy spirit that leads us into all truth, lest satan should get an advantage of us, for we are not ignorant of his device, and let us ever bare in mind, that the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law. Gal. 5: 22 and 23. And if Christ makes us free through the spirit of his word, we shall be free indeed. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us all.

A WARNING.

A warning to all not to stifle the convicting influences of God's spirit, for God has declared that his spirit shall not always strive with man; and when his spirit departs who can tell what the end will be. Witness the sad ending in the suicide of Miss Mary E. daughter of Solomon Zepp, residing about six miles from Westminister, Carroll County Md. who was well known by many of our brethren. She committed suicide by hanging herself with a strap, in her father's garret, in April last. She was in her 25th year was amiable and highly respected by all who knew her. She left a note in in her room which explains the cause of her sad end and is as follows:

"Farewell dear parents and kind brothers for I feel this morning that my time has come and that I can't survive this earth another day. It is so hard to part with you all, but such must be the fact. Last night was to me a night of terror. I have been thus afflicted for over three years with these spells, but they have grown worse upon me, so that I can't stand it. If you read our Dr's. book under the head of insanity you will find my case exactly described to you called "Melancholly Insanity,"—for which you will find there is no other remedy but this. At times I have felt all right and would determine to try and do better, but it has all been of no use. I have been in this way ever since I was convinced of sin and did not yield to that spirit which strove so hard with me and which at last I grieved away. Mother may God bless every one of you, and may he comfort you all in this sad home of bereavement. I hope that my case may be a warning to every body."

Here dear readers you have the begining of grieving away the spirit of God, the end of which is not yet seen. The funeral of this importunate young woman took place the M. P. church in Westminster. And looking at that stately edifice with its towerings steeple, its stained glass windows and highly ornamented interior, it is very manifest it was not the religion taught within its walls, the spirit she grieved away and strove so hard for her to accept and live. It must have been of some humble germ, perhaps it was that which the New Testament Scriptures teach and the bretnren preach.

D. P. Sayler.

Every Day Religion.

Again I remark: We must bring the religion of Christ into our every day employments. "Oh," you say, "that is very well if a man handle large sums of money, or if he has an extensive traffic; it is very well for the importer of silks, for the bankers and shippers, for the Rothchilds and the Barings; but in my thread and needle store, in my trimming establishment, in the humble work in life that I am called to do, the sphere is too small for the action of such grand, heavenly principles." Who told you so? Do you not know that God watches the faded leaf on the brook's surface as certainly as he does the path of a blazing sun? And the moss that creeps up the side of the rock makes as much impression upon God's mind as the waving top of Oregon pine and Lebanon cedar; and the alder, crackling under the cow's hoof, sounds as loud in God's ear as the snap of a world's conflagration. When you have anything to do in life, however humble it may seem to be, God is always there to help you do it. If your work is that of a fisherman, then God will help you as he helped Simon when he dragged Gennesaret. If your work is that of drawing water, then he will help you as when he talked at the well-curb to the Samaritan woman. If you are engaged in the Custom House, he will lead you as he led Matthew sitting at the receipt of customs. A religion that is not good in one place is not worth anything in another place. The man who has only a day's wages in his pocket, as certainly needs the guidance of religion, as he who rattles the the keys of a bank and could abscond with a hundred thousand hard dollars.—Dr. Talmage, (Presbyterian.)

SCRIPTURE ILLUSTRATIONS.

In the sermon on the mount our Lord says, "Whosoever shall compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him twain." We can all of us easily understand the other part of this command, that when struck on one cheek, we should in humility offer the other; because, unfortunately, we know what striking is. But many must have wondered what can have given rise to the command of going a second mile with a violent man who has already compelled you to go one mile. Nobody now, in this country, is ever injured by such treatment. But we learn from coins and inscriptions that couriers in the service of the Roman government had the privilege of traveling through the provinces free of expense, and of calling upon the villagers to forward their baggage to the next town. Under a despotic government, this became a cruel grievance. Every Roman of high rank claimed the same privelege; the horses were unyoked from the plough to be harnessed to the rich man's carriage. It was the most gallant injustice which the provinces suffered. We have an in-cription on the frontier towns of Egypt and Nubia, mentioned a petition for a redress of this grievance; and a coin of Nerva's reign records its abolition in Italy. Our lord could give no stronger exhortation to humility than by advising his Syrian hearers, instead of resenting the demand for one stage's "vehiculation," to go willingly a second stage.—Sil.

The Issue.

There are times during the year that important issues, to the government,—of the world—are to be decided, and as one of those times is now approaching, the political campaigning man, it will be well for our brethren to be on their guard and carefully consider their moral and spiritual obligations, or rather, to which kingdom they belong, and to whom they shall render service. No matter how indifferent we may think we feel, yet we have more or less of political preferences. These political preferences are known to the candidates for political honors, and are worked up to the best possible advantage, and it is truly surprising to see how willingly even some of our brethren allow themselves to be worked into tools adapted to their purpose; especially is this surprising when the thing is so evident that a way-faring man though a fool should not err therein. These political leeches so completely unmask themselves that it can be determined by an ordinary observer just as soon as an office is desired:

First, in the hypocritical smile, the peculiar Mr. so and so, and then the shaking of the hands warm and affectionately. To the uninterested and observing observer the meeting of these office seekers and their dupes is a scene extremely ludicrous. There seems to be such unbounded love and esteem manifested, that, did we not know better, we would suppose they would be held under everlasting obligations, but how sadly vain are human expectations! When the last favor is received and the coveted position obtained, there follows a miraculous slip of memory and the known are known no more, we mean by those who make use of this method of working themselves into public favor. Brother, do not suffer your judgment to be overbalanced by such worldly flatteries, but with a firm determination, take a stand for the right, sail clear of the breakers and put your chief trust in God. He careth for you and will hold you in everlasting remembrance.

Signs of the Times.

We do not approve of idle prophesying but there are things now transpiring in the world to which we cannot be altogether indifferent. When we see the buds swollen and ready to burst we cannot help but think that the summer is approaching. The signs of the times are ominous and call loudly upon us to lift up our eyes and see. "When ye see all these things, know that the end is nigh." What have we not seen and how many prophecies are yet unfulfilled. The present years seems to be an open book delineating in the most simple and plain terms the fulfilling of these things which are plainly set before us for our instruction and warning. Line upon line is being almost daily added so that really we have but little more to look for prior to the coming or ushering in of the New Dispensation and the great consumation of all things terrestrial. Wickedness has taken its seat in the high places and is casting its seed of desolation broad cast over the world. The untempered mortar and slime is being daubed over the sores and pollutions of sin to be a fearful extent. The outside is made to look clean but within there is nothing but rottenness and putrefying sores. Step into the costly edifices styled sanctuaries and inquire for the "good old way" or the humble worshiper and the glittering walls, the golden draped pulpit, the man made and honor worshipping ministers and the silk and satin rustling congregation will answer, not here. Dear brethren and sisters, let us awaken to a true sense of our position and observe the signs of the times.

MISREPRESENTATIONS.

Under the above heading our Bro. Kinsey, of the Vindicator, claims that we misrepresented him, and to render satisfaction, asks us to make correction. This we are always willing to do as it is very unpleasant to be misrepresented. The following is what he claims to be the first misrepresentation: In speaking of those who could not be present to hear the proceedings of A. M. we said: "Why should they be robbed of this privilege," (of reading the proceedings.) Because the brethren and sisters want it—want the same thing that Bro. Kinsey and five thousand other brethren and sisters wanted."

We were told that it was estimated that there were about five thousand members at the meeting. We thought it was fair to presume that they came there for the express purpose of hearing the proceedings of A. M. Among this number was our respected brother Kinsey. Now if he will admit that he did not go there for that purpose—did not want to hear what was said and know who said it, then we acknowledge the charge to be proper and ask his pardon. But if he, with the rest of the brethren and sisters, went there for the purpose of hearing the proceedings of A. M. then there was no misrepresentation, and we were justifiable in saying that they (those who could not go there,) wanted the same thing that Bro. Kinsey and five thousand other brethren and sisters wanted (who were there.) This is just what we meant and what the language fully conveys, and we cannot see how our brother got such a misunderstanding. We do not suppose that you, being there and hearing and seeing all, cared to read the report, neither did we care about it, and had we not been compelled to proof it, it is doubtful whether we would have read it all, not because we did not feel interested but because we heard it, just like you did, dear brother. The only difference that there seems to be between us is, we think those who could not be there should have the liberty of learning the same as we who were there, while you think they should not have this liberty. As soon as A. M. says there shall be no report we will cease publishing it, but until then we shall assent to the wishes of our readers. Had we consulted our own feelings we would not have published this last report, and would now say if there are any more to be published, we would prefer to have them published in pamphlet style and send them only to such as order.

The other misrepresentation was, that we said "ancient or old order of the brethren" instead of the "ancient order of the church" According to the general acceptation of the terms we see no difference. When we say "the Church" we mean "the Brethren" and when we say Brethren we mean Church, but of ancient or modern orders of the Church or Brethren, save that of the New Testament, we prefer to know nothing about. Herein is contained the "ancient landmarks," "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

We hope that after this explanation our dear brother will examine more carefully our writings before he prefers charges against us. We are laboring, with the ability God gives us, for the welfare and upbuilding of the Church, and have no desire to misrepresent anybody, or in any way do anything that may injure our common cause. There are a number of other ungrounded insinuations in the article referred to that seems to demand some attention but we forbear and throw over it the mantle of charity, hoping that in the future there will be no more occasion for these little unpleasantries.

Christ's Manner of Refuting Error.

The manner in which Christ refuted error frequently offended the Jews and had it not been for the fear of the people they would have laid hands upon him; and when we consider the severity of the rebukes, and the pointed and positive manner in which he declares their final destruction, we are not surprised that they became enraged and sought to destroy him. But this was Christ's manner of refuting error. In the temple, right among the most renowned of the Jews did he unsparingly send forth red-hot shots at their high-handed wickedness.

In view of this we observe first, that his manner exhibited boldness. That memorable occasion when he rode into Jerusalem on an ass, entered the temple and cast out those that sold and bought, overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves, is a striking example of this characteristic. The temple must be reformed and notwithstanding the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders had sanctioned and permitted these things, he unhesitatingly cast them all out. What boldness! He knew that these mighty men would become enraged at his, to them, unwarrented authority. But here is sin and it must be refuted regardless of the opposing power. Throughout the Scriptures we see this trait manifested, and as Christ is our example in all things, should we not in our efforts to refute error, endeavor to imitate him? It is likely there is too much timidity among the soldiers of the cross. We perhaps have put on the uniform and have taken the sword of the spirit in hand, but when we see the enemy approaching, and there is apparent danger, we prove to be cowards. We are afraid to combat with the enemy on his own grounds, but this is not following Jesus the captain of our salvation. While sojourning on earth he did not confine his labors to the rural districts; he went from city to city and in the midst of his most powerful enemies did he proclaim his doctrine freely and fearlessly Brethren how does this correspond with our manner of christian effort? Is this boldness manifested among us? Do we go into the towns and cities among the most renowned and mighty men of the age and proclaim the doctrine of Christ? When we think of the comparative small effort, that we as a church, have made, and are now making in our larger towns and cities, we are fearful that we lack christian fortitude. Brethren this ought not so to be. We profess to be learners of Christ, to imitate him in our intercourse with the world, and if we are consistent, we must not confine our labors alone to the country. He did not do so, and neither must we. This timidity indicates that we are not largely influenced by the Holy Spirit. This gives courage and fortitude. The little Jewish damsel almost frightened Peter out of his wits when she asked him whether he was not also with Jesus of Galilee, but after the day of Pentecost, being filled with the Holy Ghost, there was no more fear. He could then fearlessly go up into the temple, right among the rulers of the Jews and restore the lame and teach the people. With his first sermon they were very much offended, and when they inquired by what power, or by what name he did these things, he, being filled with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, "Ye rulers of the people of Israel, be it known unto you ALL, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth whom YE crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand up before you here whole." Peter was not afraid now to acknowledge Jesus as the Christ, neither was he afraid to tell them plainly that they had crucified him. This was a very bold and severe charge upon the rulers and elders of Israel, and so indignant did they become that they commanded him and John to preach no more in the name of Jesus. But notwithstanding their threatenings they chose rather to hearken unto God than man, and when the rulers found that their efforts were futile they let them go. Then Peter and John went to their own company and the church went to prayer. The Lord heard their prayer and confirmed them with the gift of the Holy Ghost. Brethren if we lack courage and fortitude let us go to prayer, let us ask him for grace and the influence of his spirit and then we will he able to go forth boldly and fearlessly in the discharge of our duties.

We observe secondly that Christ's manner exhibited wisdom. When teaching the people he always brought the subject before the mind in such a way as to make the deepest impressions. Of this we have many striking illustrations. When he had renovated the temple by casting out those that did not properly belong there, and when he the next morning again entered the temple, and the chief priests and elders inquired by whose authority he did these things, he did not answer their question directly. The manner in which he evaded the question and the purpose he had in view exhibits his supernatural wisdom. In order to at once reprove the impropriety of the question, and in effect, return an unexceptional though oblique answer, he said in reply to them, "I will also ask you a question, which if you answer, I will tell you by what authority I do these things: The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven or of men?" This unexpected question put them in a great dilemma. They feared the people to say of men, and if they would say from heaven, Christ would at once interrogate them as to why they did not believe on him, and for this they could not possibly give any reason. Their design was completely refuted, and, no doubt, deeply impressed with the wise and crafty manner in which their inquiry was evaded they reply, "We can not tell."

From this illustration we may learn a very useful lesson. We should exhibit wisdom in our manner of refuting error. This thought we think should be emphasized. The result of the great contest with the enemy of souls is of too much importance to be entered into without a knowledge of how to wield the sword, therefore Christ when sending out his disciples to preach gave them the following significant charge: "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves." The charge is applicable to Christ's ministers to-day, yet it is likely that many, very many, have not that simplicity and innocence as seen in the sheep, nor the wisdom as exhibited in the serpent. Some, perhaps, teach because they are called by the church to that position, without considering who they are to teach, their capacity for receiving instruction, the subject matter best adapted to their hearers, and the manner of presenting it so as to be the most effectual. Others again, perhaps, teach with a view to pecuniary benefit or to be seen and heard of men. Recently we went to hear a professional minister of the Gospel preach. He made some very fine points in Mental Philosophy, and to illustrate an idea referred to a problem in Geometry. This might do well enough in some localities, but to go out into a rural district where two-thirds of the congregation never saw a Mental Philosophy or Geometry, is simply ridiculous. This minister would have done wisely, being a stranger, had he made some inquiry in reference to the nature of the congregation, and then adapted his discourse to it. The wise and judicious teacher will study to present truth in a manner that will make the deepest impressions, and the more intelligibly truth can be presented to the mind, the more successfully this can be accomplished. The Savior used such things as were best understood by those whom he addressed to illustrate truth, and indeed even when addressing the most learned he illustrated by referring to the most common things in life. The true and devoted minister will try to imitate Christ's manner of teaching. He is the great teacher, the model teacher, the source from which we should derive all our ideas of teaching. And now the exhortation of the apostle Paul to Timothy is in place, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." It requires some study, some forethought to rightly divide the word of truth, and those who would be wise and efficient teachers must study, and then if any man lack wisdom, let him ask God.

We observe in the third place that Christ's manner exibited severity. The Scribes and Pharisees received keen and sharp rebukes. On one occasion they came unto him and inquired why his deciples transgressed the tradition of the elders, for they did not wash their hands when they eat. He soon informed them that they transgressed the law of God by their tradition, and then he gives them the appellation of hypocrites. To call persons of their standing in life, hypocrites, would certainly grate very harshly upon their feelings, but they were deceivers, they made great pretentions to religion, and were very strict in compliance with all the outward forms of piety, but the Savior knew their hearts and employed the proper term to express their deception. On another occasion he told them that the publicans and harlots would go into the kingdom of heaven before them. This to the haughty Pharisee would certainly be a very humiliating and severe rebuke. The Publicans here referred to where the deputies or under collectors of the revenue of an empire, and were regarded by the Pharisees as so many thieves and pickpockets, and for Christ to compare them with this class of persons, and even say that they would go into the kingdom of God before them, exhibits the most severe manner of exposing their hyporisy. Jesus did not apparently have much regard for the feelings of those whom he addressed. He sought not to please men but God, and in this should Christ's ministers at the present day imitate him. It is to be feared that there are many, very many at this time who preach nearly to please men. The ministry has become an occupation like all others, and of course the hireling must do his work so as to please his employers. But this was not Christ's, neither was it the apostle's, who had learned of him, manner of preaching. They rebuked sin at all times, and under all circumstances regardless of the feelings of others, and the effects it might have. We have heard ministers say that they feared to preach on some doctrinal points for fear it would give offence, but this should not be. There are some scribes and Pharisees among us to-day, and their hypocrisy should be rebuked severely as it was in the days of Christ and the apostles. Shun not therefore to declare the whole counsel of God, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and show the people their transgressions.

Christian friends, let us be up and doing; the hosts of Satan are pressing upon us; the grossest deception surrounds us, and into our hands is committed the sword of the spirit. Let us use it boldly, wisely and severely.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

Some Bears Who Kept House.

In the beautiful garden in the Regent's Park, the Royal Zoological Society entertains a crowd of distinguished guests, trying with true hospitality, to make them all feel at their ease, and to give each one, as nearly as possible, what he has been used to at home.

All the world is represented here. Hot countries and cold; the arctic regions and the tropics; African deserts and polar snows; Indian jungles and South American forests, and our own Temperate Zone, all sends their strange inhabitants to the gardens of the Royal Zoological Society.

A flight of steps at the end of the broad walk leads up to a wide stone terrace, and at the top of the steps you look down on your right into a square, paved court, with a high pole in the middle and little sleeping-rooms on each side. Three or four fat, clumsy bears are tumbling about on the pavement in rough, good-natured play, keeping each an eye on the parapet above to see if there is any chance for buns; and the minute they spy a visitor, it is a race which shall get to the pole first, and then the lucky one climbs up, and drawing his four feet together, plants himself on the ball at the top, and stretches his head out as far as possible with wide open mouth, ready to catch the bun or cake which somebody holds out temptingly over the railing. It looks as if he could jump off the pole into the midst of the visitors and gobble them up, buns and all, if he chose; but this kind of bear can't jump; he can only climb, so it is really quite safe, and he is obliged to wait till the bun is thrown to him, and if the aim isn't good the coveted morsel falls down and is eagerly snatched up by the bears who sit on their hind legs round the foot of the pole, casting comical, imploring glances at the people above. And then how disappointed the poor fellow on the top looks; but he waits patiently for better luck, and presently somebody puts a cake on the end of a long stick, which is always at hand, and pokes it safely across into a great red cavern of a mouth. Bears are excessively fond of sweets of all sorts, and in their native woods like to steal the honey the wild bees have stored up in hollow trees, though sometimes they get well stung for their pains.

A pretty, winding path through the shrubbery at the left of the terrace brings us down a slope to the place where the pair of white bears live. They have a beautiful stone house, covered with flowering vines, and in front a pond with a flagged path round it, on which as we approach, the huge creatures are pacing up and down, waiting for dinner, growling savagely every now and then at the visitors who stand in tantalizing nearness, just out of their reach. Their whole domain, —house, garden and pond,— is not only fenced in, but roofed over with the thickest iron bars. Once, they say it was only fenced; but though the top of the fence was made of pointed spikes, turned inward, one of the bears got out early one morning and nearly killed a blacksmith who happened to cross his path; and after that they were roofed in. The white bear and his wife once had two little ones,—soft, pinky creatures,—but the unnatural mother actually killed her own children, much to everybody's disappointment. The mother bear's fur is a purer, softer white than the father's whose hair looks rather yellowish when he stands close to his great snow-ball of a wife, and she seems to be generally in a fit of the sulks, while he tramps about in a chronic state of active fury. They suffer terribly from the heat of an English summer, and great blocks of ice are constantly kept in the pond, to make the water cool enough for their bath.—From "A Garden Party of Wild Animals," by Elizabeth Lawrence, in St. Nicholas for August.

MAGGIE'S FAULT.

I have a little girl whose great fault is forgetting. She forgets to hang up her dresses; she forgets to put buttons on her shoes; she forgets where she left her mittens, or the hammer, or her thimble; she forgets to do her errands; she forgets to come home when she is told to. Yet she always seems sorry when I talk to her, and means, I think to improve, but she does not. Every week, if it finds her no worse, does not find her better. I often wonder how it happens. In other respects Maggie is a good girl. She is an industrious little girl and speaks the truth. But all these fine qualities are almost spoiled by forgetfulness. It leads to much disorder, as you may suppose. I should not like you to see her room; and I cannot depend, of course, that what I tell her will be done. I could not for a long time think how she could forget so. I have found it out now; the Bible told me. God says in it; "My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments." Whatever is done from the heart is done quickly, and done well. Poor Maggie, alas! has no heart in it, therefore she forgets and disobeys. And many a mother is grieving over this same fault in her dear child; and perhaps many a poor child is grieving for it too. "How shall I remember what mother says? "How came I to forget?"—feeling ashamed, and sorry, and mortified as can be. My dear child, I can only tell you to fall down on your knees before God, and beg him to give you that "new heart" which the Bible tells of, filled with the spirit of humble, faithful love. That will remember; that will try hard, and will assuredly succeed, you may depend upon it.—Christian Union.

STRIKE THE KNOT.

"Strike the knot!" said a gentleman one day to his son, who, tired and weary, was leaning on his axe over a log which he had been trying to cleave. Then looking at the log, the gentleman saw how the boy had hacked and chipped around the knot without hitting it. Taking the axe, he struck a few sharp blows on the knot and split the log without difficulty. Smiling, he returned the axe to his son saying:

"Always strike the knot!"

That was good advice. It is good for you, my children, as it was for the boy to whom it was first given. It is a capital maxim to follow when in trouble. Have you a hard sum to do at school? Have you to face a difficulty? Are you leaving home to live for the first time among strangers? Strike the knot! Look your trouble in the eye, as the bold lion-hunter looks in the face of the lion. Never shrink from a painful duty, but step right up to it and do it. Yes, strike the knot! boys and girls, and you will always conquer your difficulty.

OBEDIENCE.

Little boys and girls, unless you have the mind of Christ you cannot be obedient. This you say is strange. I certainly can be if I want to. Can you? God says, "Your heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." With such a heart can you be obedient? No, you must have a new heart. This Christ gives to all who believe in him. With the heart that he gives, you have him; and if you think of him, if you are occupied with him, you can have no mind of your own, but the mind of Christ; no will of your own, but like that blessed Jesus it will be said, "He pleased not himself."

A great many boys and girls have wills of their own. They like to do as they please. They are not obedient. They promise to do better next time, but their sinful hearts desire to do their own will. As long as you let them do as they please they are happy, but let papa or mamma speak to them to try to have them do their will, and how soon trouble comes. They have a will of their own; they have a mind, but it is not the mind of Christ. With brothers and sisters they must have their own will; with playmates, no will but their own. They must have a great deal of mind, but not the mind of Christ. I was talking with a friend, the other day, when a young girl came up and spoke to her. As she turned away my friend said to me: She has but little mind, but she knows the dear Jesus, always talking of him. She does a great deal for him. O, I thought, here is no mind, but a heart full of Christ. O that we each had less minds of our own and more the mind of Christ, occupied not with ourselves, but with Christ!—Selected.

Blessed is the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child, for there is no saying when and where it may bloom forth.

There are things in human form that through fortuitous circumstances alone it becomes necessary to class with humanity. Such are those covetous, envious, selfish wretches, who live and labor only for themselves.

A KIND LETTER.—NO 2.

We again give to our readers, another letter from our unknown friend who seems desirous to learn of Jesus.

After some business items, ordering papers to her friends and good wishes for the PILGRIM and its success, she says:

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

WORTHY FRIEND:

After paying the expenses of the papers, if any money remains you may keep it, as even a mite in its place can do good. I also enclose you a pretty piece of poetry that I copied, and some clippings from the Foreign Mission Journal which may be of use to your columns. On the brown slip of paper, I have given you a lot of Bible verses for your examination, as well as some brief words in connection. When I propound Scripture queries, it is purely from a hankering and thirsting after truths as they are in God's Holy Word; and while I have a certain share of understanding, I am desirous to hear from the old and longer experienced ones. I am highly pleased and thankful to have had such a medium as your paper, providentially directed to my reach. I am delighted with it thus far because it closely accords with the tone and tenor of the teachings of the Bible. I like all the pieces, but was especially pleased—yes delighted with the piece, "Christian Perfection." I hope we may hear from Mattie Lear again, for that is certainly one of the kinds of expressions for these times, and for all times. Her piece was so perfectly expressed that it surely could be said unto her, "well done thou good and faithful servant." I wish it could be read from our pulpits as well as in every private circle. "Judging by the Fruit," pleased me also. I read the book, "Man and Woman," and was pleased with its views and advice. Such things are much needed to revolutionize and christianize the sad state of affairs; and to begin, we should set ourselves right first, then teach daily and hourly in the nurseries as well as in our parlors, then by the help of God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, our faithful labors will sooner or later be blest.

I send you other questions to be answered at your own time, as follows:

As regards the parable of the sower: First, do you think where the seed "fell into good ground" and brought forth fruit, some a hundred fold, some sixty-fold and some thirty-fold," that the larger the increase of fruit, the higher the degree of happiness given to them in heaven as well as on earth? "And he said unto them: Verily I say unto you: There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the Kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come, life everlasting."

Second. Do you think that God sometimes lengthens or shortens man's days on earth? From various passages and circumstances noticed in different parts of the Bible, I think it is sometimes done, under circumstances, and for wise and merciful purposes. I do not precisely know this thing, therefore I ask for the truth.

Third. Do you think the elect are those of the most exalted piety of this earth?

Fourth. Do you think the residue of Christians which are more inferior in wisdom and goodness, may yet gain a place in heaven? "In a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth, and some to honor and some to dishonor." I understand this to mean that there are different grades of honor and piety as Christians.

Fifth. Is it Scriptural to have pictures taken of ourselves?

I had not the least expectation of seeing my letter in print, but as I believe you desired it for some kind of good, I am glad to have been of any service in the right place. Your answers to my questions have given me satisfaction, and I have been handing them around to my friends. Two of our neighbors have some of my PILGRIMS now and I am soliciting subscribers. I would like much to get them widely circulated throughout this section, for in their way, they may with probability serve as a pioneer for light and truth—repentance, as John the Baptist did before Jesus Christ. As regards my questions and your answers, I would simply add that I had feared it was unlawful to eat swines' flesh because it is so positively forbidden in the Old Testament. I notice in the New Testament that when Jesus commanded the legion of devils to come out of the man, He consented for them to enter a herd of two thousand swine; however, this herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea and were choked in the sea. * * * * I have not connected myself with any church yet, but hope to do so as soon as Jehovah-Jirah—Providence opens and shows me a way and place. For my every good and guidance I ask and need the fervent prayers of all God's people. "The faithful fervent prayers of the righteous availeth much." "Again I say unto you that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." "Trust in Him at all times; ye people, pour out your heart before Him: God is a refuge for us."

Since reflecting upon the matter some, I have concluded to add a few more lines. I expressed so much desire for the wider circulation of your paper amongst the people of this section, that it might seem that I meant we had no Christians amongst us. Yes, there are some good ones in the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopal churches of my acquaintance. But this much I do say, that many fail to act out these proverbs: "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding." "My son keep my words, and lay up my commandments and live, and my law as the apple of thine eye." Many persons, even members of different churches, seem to act and speak as if they do not worship God in spirit and in truth. God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting. "And let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." Some express sounding words—they "having a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof." As Paul says: "Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." I do wish that there was more of the Spirit about the people. Some are barely "lukewarm;" the way of peace they know not; and there is no judgement in their goings, they have made them crooked paths; whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace. Therefore is judgement far from us neither doth justice overtake us: we wait for light, but behold obscurity for brightness; but we walk in darkness. We grope for the wall like the blind, and grope as if we had no eyes; we stumble at nothing as in the night; we are in desolate places as dead men. May God's word have free course and be glorified. "The wise man's eyes are in his head, but the fool walketh in darkness."

My business and messages being ended, I close with many good wishes for your good work; an earnest request for the prayers of all you godly people. Truly your friend,

JULIA A. WOOD.

Sunday With the Dunkards.

The following written by J. Wendell Cole, correspondent to the New Yrok Observer we give to our readers thinking that it may be of interest to know what other people have to say relative to our mode of worship when prejudice and a disposition to misrepresent is ruled out. We care not what people say about us or our mode of worship when they have respect for the truth and represent things just as they occur. This our friend seems to have done and was compelled to acknowledge that he was pleasantly disappointed as every honest and candid mind must be when they honor us enough to come and see for themselves instead of describing us from what others say of us who perhaps never heard a sermon preached by the Brethren or, give a willful misrepresentation.

Feeling that a quiet Sabbath among the mountains would fit one more for the duties of the ensuing week than the same time as a stranger in a Wheeling Hotel, we left the train last evening at this cool retreat.

As the morning proved rainy, and we were informed that the only religious service was that held by the Dunkards (or more correctly, we believe, the Tunkers,) we at first regretted stopping. Walking to the little church early for service, we were agreeably surprised to find ourselves in time for Sunday school, of which we had not been informed, and this reminds us of that which we have frequently noticed—i. e., the pleasures of the world are far better advertised than religious services. We believe from our own experience during business travel in our country, that were the hours of Sunday school service and week day evening meetings generally advertised at all hotels, many Christian travelers would be refreshed and strengthened during their journeyings by the opportunity thus brought to their notice of meeting with Christian brethren.

After Sunday school was closed, a hymn was sung by the congregation, that had now assembled to the full capacity of the little church. The minister (not a resident) announced that he was to preach the funeral sermon of Mrs. Miller, who died last May, and that a hymn would be sung appropriate to the occasion. This was read, then sung, each two lines being read before singing. As the preacher was not a man to impress by his personal appearance, and we had not a favorable impression of the sect when we decided to attend the service, we feared the infliction of an ignorant harangue. But our views were soon changed. Truly "by their fruits ye shall know them;" and the prayer that followed the hymn showed an earnest heart desiring a fresh baptism of the Spirit for the services of the day: "Thou callest, not the righteous, but sinners to repentance, and we come to thee truly repenting of our sins, O! Lord," was an index to a soul yearning for a closer communion with a loving Savior.

"The portion of the Scriptore which we have selected as the foundation of our discourse is the 13th verse of the 14th chapter of the book written by John the Divine, usually called Revelations: 'And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write blessed are the dead which die in the Lord henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.' We do not preach at funerals to benefit the dead—no! Their fate is unalterably fixed at death, either for eternal joys or endless woe. But we do preach that we, the living, may learn and escape the just condemnation of our sins by coming to Jesus."

The manner and language of the preacher showed the lack of much intelleetual culture, save that obtained from the pure fountain of the Holy Scriptures. The quotations from the Bible, however, were frequent and appropriate; the illustrations apt and drawn from the daily life of his hearers, and the rapid, earnest utterance of the speaker had a magnetic effect. The belief in the divinity of Christ was strongly shown throughout the discourse, the 1st verse of the Gospel of John being quoted to show that Christ was co-equal with God.

At the close of the sermon an opportunity was offered for those who wished to "put on Christ and be regenerated," to come to the front seats —the men on one side and the women on the other. A patriarchal preacher of the sect led a hymn (two lines at a time), and three young men and one young woman presented themselves. After questioning them, the minister mentioned that it was their desire to be baptized and admitted to their church. He then called the members to meet in council and decide upon the admission of these persons, which they did in the church vestibule. The council having arrived at a favorable decision, the preacher announced that "as they claimed to be simple minded Bible disciples, without any form of discipline except that found in the Gospel, he would read in Matthew the 18th chapter, from the 10th to the 22nd, verses, inclusive: "That they believe if a brother offend, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more (not three or four), and if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church." The candidates were then asked individually if they were willing to abide by this mode of discipline.

He then explained that they did not believe in taking an oath, even before a justice of the peace, because Christ had said, "Swear not at all" —Matthew 5: 34–37, being quoted in confirmation of their belief. The candidates were again individually asked to assent.

He also stated their belief in plainness of manner and dress, as an act of nonconformity with the world, quoting 1. Timothy 11: 9, and stating he considered the exhortation just as binding on the men, and that also from his own views he should believe it wrong. If any ask why? let me say unnecessary and occupying time, and using money that would do more good if used in other ways. The candidates each assented to these remarks. He stated their belief that baptism was the initiatory rite to the Christian Church, and as they believed in immersion, if the brethren would mention a convenient place, they would go there and immerse these new members. He said he was advised that the most convenient place was in the saw-mill pond, to which place they would go and resume the service.

A large portion of the congregation having adjourned to the saw-mill (about a half mile distant), through a pouring rain, the candidates for baptism came together, and the preacher led in an appropriate hymn. Then, kneeling in the old mill, while the rolling thunder reverberated from the surrounding hills, he poured forth an earnest petition that these young converts might truly be baptized with the Spirit and keep firm and steadfast until the end. Then passing out to the water, each, before being immersed, was questioned on their belief in God and Christ, of their willingness to renounce Satan and his works, of their desire to leave the world and follow Christ, and by this baptism profess Christ before God and man. They were then immersed, being placed under the water three times each, once in the name of each person of the Trinity. As they left the water the minister and two brethren saluted each young man, and the young woman was saluted with a kiss by a sister, who stepped to the water's edge for the purpose.

Before leaving the water, and after immersion, each remained standing for a short prayer. The preacher then mentioned that he wished to kindly thank the audience for their presence; that they endeavored to strictly follow the Bible, not judging others who loved the Lord, but that their own consciences might be clear.

Walking back to the hotel, wet but not weary, we thought time had passed quickly, as we found it near two o'clock, and believed it a pleasant privilege to meet with this peculiar people, who thus, in the simplicity of their hearts, may be offering purer and more acceptable service than those who are using thousands in costly cathedrals, robes and forms. In the words of this morning's prayer, "May God bless all his great congregation gathered before him this day to worship.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

I know you like to hear from all the churches how they do, &c. Our arm of the church has a steady aim. Its march is onward. The additions are not so numerous but the church seems to be steadfast in the faith once delivered to the saints. The brethren and sisters rejoice, when the lost sheep of the house of Isreal come flocking home. O, I hope that the time is not far distant when the church will sing her songs of redeeming love from shore to shore, and all may know the Lord from the least to the greatest, and men and women become obedient to the royal declaration, and walk the narrow path which leads to heaven, where we may sing God's praises forever together.

J. S. Rush.

Preston, Minn. Aug. 6th, 1874.
Dear Brother:—

The PILGRIM is making its regular visits to our home which pleases me very much. There are pieces in some of them that are worth the price of the paper for a whole year. The PILGRIM is just the paper for me. It knows no east, west, north nor south, but contends for one indisolvable union. In it we have no old brethren's order nor young brethren's order, but God in Christ Jesus redeeming the world unto himself. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the old order that we must follow after to be saved. Your's in Christ.

Wm. C. Hipes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We have received from brother J. M. Zuck, a programme of the commencement exercises of the National Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, held on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week. From a perusal of the order of the exercises we would suppose them to be interesting. Brother Zuck graduated at the State Normal School at Millersville some years ago and is now taking the scientific course at Lebanon. We understand that he intends, after completing this course, to remain and take the colegiate course. We wish him success, and while we believe education may be a power for good, we earnestly hope he may employ it all in the service of God.

—A correspondent from Dewitt Co. Neb. says: "On last Saturday, July 30th, the weather was very warm, the thermometer ranging above 100 all day. The next day the grasshoppers commenced coming in great swarms and have been coming ever since. The wind is from the south, which will keep them here until it changes. Our prospects were promising. From thirty acres of corn we expected from 800 to 1,000 bushels, but our prospects are now sadly changed as we will now get nothing. In 24 hours it was all gone, there was nothing left but the naked stalks, spindles, leaves and ears are all gone, in fact, every available green thing in the shape of trees of vegetables have been stripped and eaten. Large groves of young maples have been eaten off close to the ground and are hopelessly lost. There can be no correct idea formed of the number, it is grass hoppers by the millions. They fly in the air almost as thick as a snow storm and sound like hail. They have eaten the netting from the outside of our windows so that we are obliged to keep them shut. You may think that I am exaggerating when I tell you that I was afraid to go outside of the door, this afternoon. The porch, overhead and beneath, was covered so thick with them that they formed a perfect mass. I am informed that they extend eastward to Ohio, and some 200 miles westward. What the result of it may be is hard to tell but it will certainly prove a very great disadvantage to those especially who depend largely upon their spring and summer crops."

An attempt was made recently to assassinate Prince Bismarck Germany's greatest statesman. The attempt was made on July 13th at about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. The Prince had just left his house for a carriage ride in the park. A crowd of persons, chiefly ladies, had gathered to see the prince and as the carriage started he was loudly cheered. He replied by bowing, at the same time raising his hand to his hat. At this moment the report of a pistol was heard, and the prince was seen to fall back in his carriage as if struck or startled. A young man who stood near the carriage immediately broke through the crowd, and attempted to run away. An eye-witness, suspecting this must be the man who fired, collared him, and after a severe struggle he was secured and taken to prison. The shot was well aimed. The ball entered the fleshy part of the thumb making a glancing wound. But for the motion of the hand, which changed the direction of the ball, the Prince would probably have been struck full in the face. The wound though troublesome was not dangerous, and the Prince appeared in public in the evening.

At present there is a fearful persecution of the Christians in China. Thousands are being literally butchered. The mode of torture and death is horrible.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The ladies of one of the Boston churches have undertaken the work of removing worthless books from Sunday-school libraries. It is said that out of 4,000 examined, only 1,000 have been accepted. Other churches had better follow this example. An immense amount of worthless trash is to be found in many of our Sunday-school libraries, and more harm than can be estimated is done thereby. The sensational novel is just as harmful, whether it comes from the Sunday-school or the news-stand, and yet our young people, and sometimes the parents, are apt to justify the reading of such books on the grounds that nothing hurtful can come from such a good institution.

—There are about 470 churches, chapels and mission-houses in this city, N. Y. If all who are old and well enough were to go to church tomorrow, it is estimated that about 150,000 persons would not find seats, and would be forced to stand in the aisles or stay out-side the doors.

—Mr. Shreve, a clergyman of Locus Bottom, Va., was lately about to engage in family worship during a thunder storm, when himself and wife were struck with lightning and instantly killed. Others in the room were uninjured.

TOMATOES.—This is the season for stomach disorders among adults as well as cholera among children. To meet this condition nature and art (for tomatoes were classed poisonous before cultivation,) have contributed a safe remedy. Chemists say the tomato possesses a substance analogous to calomel, and call it vegetable calomel; and prescribe its use for a stagnant liver. It excites the glandular system of that organ, opening up its sluices and urging the elimination of bile; as it has been found a larger quantity of bile secreted and worked into the food in process of digestion insures a better state of health. For this reason they advise a free use of the tomato.

Seasonable Hints.

It will not be too late except in certain localities, to plow up a poor pasture field or meadow after the grass is removed and sow corn for fodder. There are thousands of acres covered with daisies chilly (six daisies to one grass.) which would yield a bountiful crop of excellent corn-fodder if the seed were not put in sooner than the middle of July. If not wanted for fodder, let the crop be plowed in for green manure. Last season the writer sowed four bushels of corn and four bushels of oats (eight bushels per acre) on the 15th of July, and plowed the heavy crp under about October 1st.

Do not neglect to furnish domestic animals of all sorts with a constant supply of pure water. Cows cannot yield a full flow of milk when they do not have access to water when they are thirsty. The writer's cow drinks more than a half a barrel of water a day. When a cow is thirsty she needs all the clean water she can drink. A pailful of pure water is quite as refreshing to a cow, and a horse also, as a cup of cold water to a person when he longs for a draught from the cool mountain spring. Water should be kept constantly in the metallic fountain in our poultry yard, where every foul, even the smallest chickens can drink without difficulty. It is surprising to note how frequantly fowls want water during the hot days, when their wings droop and their tongues are extended.

Do not fail to wage an incessant warfare against the horde of noxious insects that are making fearful ravages in the fields, gardens, and fruit-orchards. Crush every tent caterpillar before a clump of eggs are deposited for a brood next season.

If your cabbages are infested with any of the seventeen species of worms and which prey upon the cabbages in New Jersey, spend a few minutes now and then to crush the pests.

Pinch back the long canes of the raspberry and blackberry bushes, or they will injure their hardiness and vitality by overgrowth. By pinching off half an inch of the terminal buds, the canes or twigs of any sort, they will cease to grow longer for a few days, and will grow stalky and more hardy. Let the buds of all luxuriant grapevines also be pinched off. There can be nothing gained by allowing vines to grow to an undue length.

Pinch off two-thirds of the fruit on young trees. Many small fruit-trees are ruined by being allowed to overbear. The growth of young fruit-trees is of far more value than a few specimens of fruit.

If ornamental trees or fruit-trees of any sort have nearly ceased to grow for want of moisture in the soil, pile grass, weeds, straw, coarse manure, coal-ashes, or saw-dust around them a few inches deep and over an area of six or ten feet in diameter, then apply a few pails, of water and the fading trees will revive and grow.

If you wish to produce large and hard cabbage-heads, place a box or board on a bench, fill it with rich stable manure, then pour on water until a high liquid begins to leak out. At evening pour a pint of this liquid fertilizer around each growing plant. During hot and dry weather the soil should be drawn back from the plant to the depth of about an inch, and the liquid applied and covered with the mellow dirt.—N. Y. Observer.

THE BENEFIT OF WORK.—Some good people (says Rev. Henry Ward Beecher) try to bring up their children so exquisitely that when they go out for themselves they have no self-control, and are immediately bankrupt. Let children make mistakes, and learn by their mistakes. Just in proportion as a child is worth anything, he is full of force and it must have an outlet. The ruin of thousands of young men is in bringing the full, fresh power of youth to the city, with no work for an outlet. They soon find something to do. O, the slaughter of young men! My heart is sick and heavy. Occupation—work that uses you, that fills you, is your salvation. There is nothing more dangerous than an educated community with nothing to do. There are thousands of educated women who do not work. No doubt God intended that men and women should marry. But in the inequalities of the present condition of society many women cannot be married. If these women are in feble health, or have little force, there is not much trouble; but I dont wonder that the bold eagle-like natures fret in their limits and detest life, or that the great hearts dash themselves out in waste. There must be an let for these immence forces, or society will go on getting worse and worse to the end.

The sun should never be allowed to shine on butter, or a package containng butter. Much butter is injured in taking it from the farm-house to the store.

THE NEW IMPROVED

Remington Sewing Machine.

AWARDED

THE "MEDAL FOR PROGRESS,"

AT VIENNA, 1873.

THE HIGHEST ORDER OF "MEDAL" AWARDED AT THE EXPOSITION.

NO SEWING MACHINE RECEIVED A HIGHER PRIZE.

A FEW GOOD REASONS:

1. A new invention thoroughly tested and secured by Letters Patent.
2. Makes a perfect LOCK STITCH alike on both sides, on all kinds of goods.
3. Runs Light, Smooth, Noiseless and rapid—the best combination of qualities.
4. Durable—Runs for years without repairs
Will do all varieties of work and fancy stitching in a superior manner.
6. It is the most easily managed by the operator. Length of stitch may be altered while running, and machine can be threaded without passing thread through holes.
7. Design simple, ingenious, elegant, forming the stitch without the use of Cog Wheel Gears, Rotary Cams or Lever arms. Has the Automatic Drop feed, which insures uniform length of stitch at any speed. Has our new thread controller, which allows easy movement of needle-bar and prevents injury to thread.
8. CONSTRUCTION most careful and finished. It is manufactured by the most skillful and experienced mechanics, at the celebrated REMINGTON ARMORY, ILION, N. Y. Philadelphia office, 810 Chestnut Street.

POETRY.

Speak no Ill.

BY LOW. WORKMAN.

Nay, speak no ill, a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind,
And Oh, to breathe each tale we've heard,
Is far beneath a noble mind.
For oft a better seed is sown
By choosing thus a better plan.
For if but little good we've known,
Let's speak of all the good we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide,
Would fain another's faults efface.
How can it please our human pride,
To prove humanity but base?
No, let it reach a higher mode,
A nobler estimate of man.
Be earnest in the search of good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Then speak no ill, but lenient be
To others feelings as your own.
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known,
For life is but a passing flood.
No lip can tell how brief the stay.
Be earnest in the search of good,
And speak of all the best we may.

The Unknown World.

SELECTED BY J. D. LAIR

Oh by that glimering light we view
That unknown world we're hastening to!
God hath locked up the mystic page,
And curtained darkness 'round the stage.

We talk of heaven, we talk of hell,
But what they mean no tougne can tell.
Heaven is the realm where angels are
And hell the chaos of dispair.

But what these awful words imply
None of us know before we die;
Whether we will or not we must Take the succeeding word on trust.

Swift flies the soul—perhaps 'tis gone
Ten thousand tougnes beyond the sun,
Or twice ten thousand more thrice told
Ere the forsaken clay is cold.

But oh! no notice they give,
Nor tell us where nor how they live
Though conscience while with us below
How much themselves desired to know.

As if bound up by Solems fate,
To keep the secret of their state,
To tell their joys or pains to none,
That man might live by faith alone.

Well!—let our sovereign if he please
Lock up his marvelous decree;
Why should we wish him to reveal
What he thinks proper to conceal?

It is enough that we believe
Heaven's brighter far than we concieve
And O! may God our souls prepare
To meet and bless and praise him there.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THOUGHTS THAT CONCERN US.

The written word is that from which we receive a knowledge of our being, our condition, and standing in this life. Knowledge is of God and the only way we know our being, is by the knowledge we have of God's word. God has given us a talent and has required us to put it to good use, not bury it as the unprofitable servant did. No man can worship God according to his law without a knowledge of it. No sinner can be converted unless convinced of sin, and when man reads the word of God it is God talking to him, and when man does not understand the scripture it is his fault and not the "word." When our natural mind is our dictator we are very apt to go contrary to the law of Christ. I contend that every man could come to the knowledge of the truth if he would subdue the carnal mind, and partake of the divine nature and accept Christ according to his word. Why are so many out of Christ? Is it because they never heard or learned of him, or because they have never seen the Scripture? No; it is because they are not subject to the law of Christ. The apostle James, says, "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God, who giveth to all men."

A subject referred to in our periodicals some time ago concerning the condition of a portion of the children of men which was, "Will those people be lost who never heard the truth preached?" This is a subject that has engaged my mind a great deal. I have read the scripture in order to find some promise extended to those who never heard the truth preached and I have failed to find it yet, although many may differ from me, and perhaps some of my dear brethren or sisters. I have heard the subject argued according to man's reason, but we should recollect that our reasoning faculties are not at all times led by the spirit of truth. Man is apt to throw all the light in his own pathway; man wants to be saved, but does not want to comply with God's way of saving souls.

I have already stated in the commencement of the article that man must have a knowledge of a law before he can comply with the requirements of the law. For instance, when Paul was at Athens and perceived the ignorance of those people and beheld their inscription "to the unknow God," whom they ignorantly worship, when Paul declared unto them Christ and the resurrection of the dead, some mocked, others desired to hear him again, and some believed Pauls preaching. Here we have a fact plain to our minds, that those people was ignorantly worshiping a God that was unknow to them. When Paul declared "Him" unto them, the minds of some were changed and received a knowledge of Christ. Now was not these people that heard Paul preach and beleived not, lost, or will they at the day of receiving plead ignorant and find favor with God? If they will, then ignorance is religion. If all the people who read the scriptures and never heard them preached will at the day of judgment plead ignorance, and find favor with God's elect, just because they did not understand the will of our heavenly Father, then ignorance is a saving institution. Read the history of Baal's prophets. What was there doom for trusting to ignorance? "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in unto him and will sup with him, and he with me." Then when man reads the word of Christ, he hears the voice of Christ, if he will only open the door and let him in to give comfort to the soul, and remove that ignorance from him that his heart might be illuminated and receive that wisdom that is from above, which is pure and easily entreated. Oh, that men would turn to God and be filled with love and have the cheering thought of being an heir of heaven, a happy guest of immortal glory. There are two kinds of wisdom. One is of the world, the other of God. Look at the wisdom of this world, the art of man, and what he has invented. Almost all over the world news fly at the speed of lightning, men traveling over and under ground at a rapid rate. When we view all these powerful works, we declare man a powerful being, though he is nothing compared to the power of God, is not a drop in a bucket, he is nearly nothing in the sight of God. Then how foolish it is for man to dictate for God, to suit his corrupt design. If man was as wise and as powerful in the noble work that God has given him to do as he is in the things that pertain to this world the devil would have a poor show. What a happy people we would be. There would not be so much envy, strife, vain glory, self exultation, as there is; there would be more love and union, more Charity, more active servants, more gospel preaching, and not so many drones. Man is a curious creature; he has so much ingenuity and is so puffed up with popular religion, that he is too delicate to sing spiritual songs to God in the house of worship without man's great invention, the organ. What a religion man has invented; he can go to the theatre, pleasure parties, dancing dens, and picnics in order to receive money for the Lord. From such I pray God to deliver his people.

The great mass of the people need a religion, a pure and undefiled religion, but, O how few worship God according to his law when compared to the population of the world! What an awful disappointment it will be to those false teachers that deceive so many! What pleading, "have we not prophecied in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works?" A sad disappointment indeed! "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I never knew you."

Then what will become of those that these false teachers have deceived? "If the blind lead the blind they both shall fall into the ditch," says Christ. Don't we suppose that one blind man will lead another into a ditch, though he make him believe he could take him over safe. Just so it will be with those blind leaders of the blind that Christ has reference to. Then will this great multitude that have been deceived, come up at the day of judgement and declare their ignorance to God, pleading, that their educated ministers told them that feet washing was not necessary; that the bread and wine was the Lord's supper, and the supper that Christ ate with his disciples was an old Jewish passover; that the salutation of the kiss was too old for Christians in this age to observe; that the anointing oil was an idea of old fogies; that we could be saved without being so particular, that we could dress in all the fashion of the world, shout, sing and pray, join secret societies and now we are deceived. They have destroyed our poor souls. O, if I had my time in yonder world that I once had, I would shun this awful condemnation.

But now I am ruined forever, such pleadings may occur at the day of judgment and awful will be the end of those that disobey the gospel. Cursed is man that trusteth in man or that makes flesh his arm. If such ignorance will excuse them at the day of accounts, then ignorance is a saving institution. But says one, Paul said, how can they hear without a preacher? In the days of Paul the scriptures was not in such a form as we have them. In that day and time the disciples only preached what they saw and heard and in order to convince the people that Christ was the son of God, God gave them power to perform miracles that they might believe, and when the nations believed that Christ was the son of God and that he was the end of the law for righteousness to all them that believed miracles were no longer needed as a witness.

Nearly all enlightened people believe that God sent his Son into the world to die for the sin of the world But all this will not excuse them. Unless they obey the whole gospel they will be unworthy servants. The time will come when judgment will begin at the house of God and if the righteous scarcely be saved where will the ungodly and sinner appear? Brethren, what a fearful passage of Scripture this is. We ought all to awaken to our great interest, be up and doing, warning the children of men of the great danger of trusting to conscience alone for salvation. Yes, brethren we should stand firm and unitedly, march against the fort of the enemy with the word of of God, which is the sword of the spirit, in hand and wield it with the ability that God giveth, and when we strike not forget to give pride a hard blow. Pride is taking the churches along with the current of evil. It seems the more we preach against this great evil the more we see of it, church of the brethren not excepted, she is keeping a short distance behind the other churches. Many of our brethren and sisters are not as careful as they ought to be. It is not because they are not warned of these things for I know that the Brethren always admonish and persuade the members not to be conformed to the world. Sometimes when we tell them that they ought not to wear this, and so, they tell us it is none of our concern. This is the rebuke we get for doing our duty. The idea that the Church must advance in pride as the world does is wrong, is fatal to the cause of religion. But one will say, look at such and such Brethren's children, see how they dress! I don't want my children made fun of, I want them to look like other children. Just look at that preacher; hear how he preaches against pride, but look at his children, how they are dressed! Had not such brethren better put their own house in order before they tell others how to keep house? This is the way some brethren and sisters plead and want to justify themselves by following others, then whose fault is it? The fault is some where, and a great one. I believe parents will have a share of this fault to bare. Remember that judgment begins at the house of God. The kingdom of Heaven is like a net cast in the sea that caught many fishes, the good were preserved, but the bad thrown away. So will it be in the end of time. God's great net will be cast out and draw all nations to him; the good will be preserved but the bad cast away.

May God grant that we may be among the good number that have feasted upon his good word, been partakers of the hidden manna that came down from Heaven, of which if any man partake he shall never hunger. Humility and plainness of dress is no disgrace. If the popular Christian does make sport of us, one consolation we have, that after a while we will go home where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. There to rest from our labors, to enjoy that blessed home of the sanctified and redeemed of God, to sing the songs of Moses and the Lamb.

BENJAMIN BASHOR.

Whitesville, Mo.

To the Fraternity.

Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Eph. 5: 10.

Brethren and sisters, we are truly living in an age of utmost importance. Carnal security is taking the upper hand in the world, and sensual pleasure is the order of the day, and we are sorry that the malignant, venomous poison infects the Brotherhood still more and more. Do we not see the spirit of speculation rising higher and higher every day? And while thus indulging, idleness will be on the increase with its consequent fruits, which are foolish talking and jesting, if not the greater evils of backbitings, slander, or becoming busy bodies in other men's matters.

The too frequent absence in the evening from the family circle, where in consequence prayer is neglected, is an evil that no father and even children should be guilty of. The gatherings in counting-rooms eating-saloons, of our loving youth is an infectious, dangerous evil, and the result, the legitimate fruit thereof is an alienation from God, and willing ensiavement to satan. O, brethren keep aloof from lounging there. If you have business there do it, and return to your fireside, and if possible have your children there while invoking God's blessing upon you and your family. Let not custom and vicious habits enslave you while the gossiping world indulge in such places, filthy luere, nasty smoking and chewing, surfeiting and drunkeness, evil surmising with gambling and rioting, all these vices are the baneful destructive consequences of such evening society. Brethren, no sooner will you be found there than this infection, taints, contaminates, corrupts, and finally poisons you before you are aware of it. The first result is carelessness, then brotherly love waxing cold, non-attendance to the house of worship, and then sickening and dying. O, the dreadful death! The Christian once enlightened, tasted that the Lord is gracious, has partaken of his divine nature, and tasted of the power of the world to come; but now falls away, sins presumptuously and puts Christ to open shame. O, the horror! the dreadful agony that soul will have to endure when banished from the presence of his God forever. Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade you to be strong in the Lord.

There is another, no less evil, like in infectious, and is making rapid progress in our fraternity, which is pride. A speculative spirit fosters pride. The accumulation of wealth is the embryo in which pride is germinated, and brought into development. Rich parents are sure of raising a proud family. True there are some exceptions. But nine cases out of ten are sure to exalt, at least some, in the family of wealthy parents. Brother, sister, be careful, if you are blessed with this world's goods, use it lawfully. Do not employ it in stiffening up your children in pride; learn them to labor with their own hands, and do not indulge them in idleness and folly nor putting on costly apparel and jewelry. Train them up for heaven and not for hell. Give them a good, liberal, honest, and Scripture like education; but do not send them all their time, and especially not to such schools, where picnics strawberry festivals, nonsensical celebrations and theatrical exhibiting are held; for if you do you are sure of making daudies and stuck up fools out of them, filling their souls with malignant, poisonous matter, which you may rest assured will drag them down to everlasting ruin. And by all this brethren and sisters, be careful, that baneful virus matter may effect your precious soul's—Salvation. You may be proud having a daughter accomplished in scholarship and musical science, becoming thereby a queen of flirtation, but your glory in your shame, having nourished a daughter for the lower region. Again you may feel exalted from having educated a son, for the Bar in order to make right wrong, and wrong right, that he may wring the last mite out from his poor client, or educated one, by a seven year collegiate course, to be a popular money-called minister, to confute the plain tenor of the Scriptures, and by a false theoretical reasoning make nonessential the plain commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in lieu thereof teach humnan traditions, thereby decieving numbers to be with him the associates of the spirit chained in the dark prison of dispair to utter the lamentable cry.! Wo, Wo, is me, for I have erred from the right way and taught many the wrong way. Therefore I have not only to suffer for my sins, but being also made partaker of others sins. O where shall my torment end. Of what have we then to be proud?

There is another danger to which I call your attention, dear brethren—such a stealthy energy creeping into your heart almost without observation and may God protect us from that monster sin of covetousness. Not only the rich is here in danger, but that dragon seeking to creep into the poorest hovel. It is a mistaken idea that only the rich are, can, or may be covetous. No, NO, it is a sin of the heart, a desire of the mind and disposition of the soul, and is only indulged in when the warning voice of conscience is hushed, yea drowned and becoming seared with a hot iron. Hence the soul becomes so impure that the devlish lusts for other men's goods cannot be resisted." Hence in order to get what does not belong to us, unjust means are restored to.

But covetousness may be practiced in a milder form, and of this we as brethren are the most in danger. When we do not dispose of what God has entrusted to us in giving to the Lord his just dues. Withholding from God, that is, keeping what actually belongs to him is robbery and idolatry, consequently we may just as well worship the sun which God has made for our benefit, as the almighty dollar we receive through his blessings. Covetousness is in the unjustly getting from our fellow men what does not belong to us, and herein the poor are more frequently guilty than the rich.

Various means are resorted to to accomplish that task. Viz: Lying cheating, overcharging, false entries, forging property, obtaining under false pretense, begging with the intention never to pay: robbing, stealing and often murder is committed, and arson to cover the crime. Such is the human heart when dead to the voice of conscience, and void of the power of God. O, brethren let not the first thought of covetousness take possession of your heart.

Viewing these things from a Christian standpoint and noticing some here, and others there falling through the influence of the soul destroyer; may we not admonish. "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." Let the sentinel on the watch-tower, lift up his voice and blow the trumpet day and night. Let the warning voice of the ministry be heard all over the land. Let the laity respond by a Godly walk and a holy conversation. Let the unconverted shrink back with terror, let him with bold defiance burst the bonds of the devil.

Forsake the camp of the eomy and turn to the service of the Lord and help fight the camp of Israel in order to slay all the giant Goliaths by the strength and might of the Lord God of Sabaoth. O that the Philestine may stand abashed, humbled, and brought low, yea, very low, so low that the never may rise again, in order that Israel may rejoice,—Mount Zion stand as a polished stone wall cemented together and garnished with all manner of precious stones, protected by a tower built by the chief architect Jesus Christ, and with God Almighty for the steeple. Now brethren and sisters, be vigilant, be sober, be prayerful, for the "devil is going about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. Be steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against the ruler of the darkness of the world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Thus you see our conflict is a mighty one, against a powerful combined enemy, hence no wavering, no cowardice, no compromises with the world, no devotee to fashion, no God of this world, no idolatrous shrine, and no shrinking from duty in anything whatever as regards our Christian principles will aid or abet one iota in this important warfare. But Christ's blood for the cleansing of our sins, and an unreserved obedience to God's word, and a steadfastness of faith to the end of the conflict, will secure us a free passport to heaven, a diploma will not be required by the great I AM, the judge of the quick and the dead. Wherefore brethren and sisters let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

"Soon, soon we'll quit this mornful vale
Relieved from sin and sorrow here,
And meet with Jesus, O all hail
To God in yonder happy sphere."

"Finally be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."

LEONARD FURRY.

A High School among the Brethren.

Sometime ago we commenced an essay on the above subject, but for want of time it was not completed. Since we have received renewed impressions of the necessity of us doing so, hence we renew the work, feeling a deep sense of its relative importance. The time has been when we gave the enterprise of a high school among the Brethren, our public sanction; but since, our views have been materially changed, resulting from a careful investigation and close observation of the subject in its several bearings. We therefore withhold our influence from the enterprise and file our name on the opposite list.

Our reasons for the above shall constitute the matter of this essay.

The Scriptures nowhere authorize such measures. The Psalmist tells us, that "out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God has ordained strength." The "babes and sucklings" alluded to in the text, are babes in point of worldly wisdom, education, &c., yet amidst this weakness they are provided with strength. Again "God hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise," and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." The "foolish and weak things" here spoken of by the apostle it is true have a broad application, but it is evident that we may safely apply them to the illiterate and unlearned advocates of Christianity in the Saviour's time and their successors up to this day. Now if we raise the standard of our education to a level with the education of the world, then we will have passed out of that chosen class. Paul, it is true, "was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the laws of our fathers; no doubt but he understood the sciences as they were then taught; but hear his testimony; "I come not with excellency of speech or of man's wisdom;" besides "my speech and my preaching was not with inticing words of man's wisdom," &c.

We are aware that we have wisdom highly recommended to us in various places in the Scriptures; this same class of wisdom we think the apostle James alludes to, as coming from above, which he says is first pure, then gentle, easily entreated, &c. He then spake of another class which is from beneath. Now that which comes down upon us will naturally tend to depress and humble us, which is significant of the wisdom from above; while that which meets us from beneath, naturally tends to raise and exalt us, which sets forth the effects of the second class of wisdom. Now for the application. At an institution of learning, knowledge and wisdom are given out, is put in circulation. Those churches which have gone into the enterprise of high schools for years (as some of our brethren wish now to do) what has been the effect? Have they become more humble, or have they become more exalted? It is evident that pride, emulation and exaltation has been the invariable fruits of a high school enterprise, with every church that has given the work their sanction as a body.

Not wishing to protract this argument, nor multiply testimonies of the above character as we might do, we close this argument, with the simple statement, that the enterprise of a high school is no where sanctioned in the Scriptures. Neither do its advocates as we can observe, maintain that there is, but their arguments are chiefly arguments of circumstance, which we shall notice as our second argument.

The fact that the brethren are sending their sons and their daughters to high schools, under the direct influence of their corrupt religious doctrine, is an argument of considerable weight with the patrons of the above enterprise. We frankly admit that it contains some truth; but we would have it observed here, that there are many other gaps through which vast numbers of dear brethren's children slip out into the open barren commons of a ruined world, ere they reach the one admitted at the head of this argument. The lack of parents early impressing their children with the importance of pious lives; fostering pride in the heart by ornamenting their bodies with the giddy fashions of a haughty world; failing to restrain children from the influence of corrupt society; the want of exemplary lives on the part of the parents themselves, all from openings through which many, very many, dear brethren's children pass into a hopeless state of ruined life. It then becomes our duty not only to guard one, but each of the avenues named and alluded to above.

We would have the reader to know that we do not at all oppose a good common education, such that would qualify us for any business in life, suitable for a Christian, but are favorable to it; our parents before us were; took an early interest in education of their children, patronizing Oberlin, Berea and several minor institutions in our native state. And we are happy to say that our parents were never grieved with the ill fate admitted at the head of this argument; but on the other hand had the joy of witnessing two out of four of their sons coming to the church while at home during vacation of their attendance at school. We conceive the following to be a truthful, hence, unyielding statement which note with care. A child nurtured up under the influence of the church; fully imbued with her holy doctrine; "instructed perfectly in the way of the Lord," it is very difficult to remodel such a one. This was the mind of a certain Roman Priest, who said let me have a child from 7 to 11 and you may have him the remainder of his life. Also of him who said "train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it," (Solomon.) But on the other hand the heart of that child that is already poisoned with pride, saturated with the popular religious doctrine of the day and leaves home to attend school three, five or eight years, under a foreign religious influence; we have only to say that their case is a serious one even before they leave home.

Instead of being weakened by the cloud of opposition with which we met while attending and teaching school in different places, we are thankful to say that our experience is that we were strengthened in our vindications of plain truth, for which we praise our blessed Master. But we are asked, would you patronize literary institutions in other churches and in the meantime, oppose setting one up in our own church!" A fair question and hence is deserving of a fair answer. We patronize the official capacity, migistrates and justices, but we oppose them in the church; we patronize lawyers, but we oppose them in the church; we patronize bankers, railroad incorporations, &c., but we oppose them in the church; thus there are many enterprises to which we give patronage by common consent, but we oppose their being in the church; in like manner do we favor a liberal patronage of the high schools of the country, but we are much opposed to erecting them in the church.

Our third argument is drawn from the effect that an institution of learning has upon the oganization that constitute its founders. For instance, Oberlin College has educated her thousands, among them have been many brethren's children, but none are willing to decide that that institution of learning ever influenced our brotherhood; but had the efforts at New Vienna, Bourbon or Warsaw proved a success, or if the present effort at Berlin proves a success, mark the effect. It will constitute a head quarters, for the resort of all her patrons. And shall see the report of her visitors, and the applause of all connected with the institution, &c.

There is a science of medicine, which teaches that by taking a drug into the system in very small quantities, we get the desired effect without the drug effect. The church heretofore has been getting her necessary education here and there, as it were in small quanties under the care of the respective parents thus not influencing the church by their organization; but when we get an institution of learning in the brotherhood, I then shall fear, shall greatly fear the poisonous drug effect, pride, exaltation.

The subject of high schools was up at our District Conference some time since; an elder who formerly held membership with the Menonites in Germany, related the following: The Menonites were a plain humble and a united people, until they got a college among them, since, they have become proud, divided and sub-divided. Are not our dear brethren fearful that our experience will be parallel with the above? The writer is, and that in each particular. We see this same truth clearly illustrated in every instance with which we have met in investigations of the subject. How the brethren expect to set up a school under the influence of the church and keep pride out, when it has in every instance been the means of introducing pride into the church, is a point we humbly confess, we cannot explain. A certain brother favoring the enterprize says "we do not want to see a school established among us if it would promote pride." We have only to say to that dear brother, how can it be otherwise? What are the grounds of your hope?

We introduce our fourth argument by stating that our fraternity are not fully united upon the principles of humility, as they should be; there being those who think we ought to wear "modest apparel," not being "conformed to this world," thus being able "to disown the Lord's body," that it "is a shame for a woman to pray with her head uncovered," thus holding forth the doctrine that "we are all pilgrims and strangers as our fathers were," while there are those who do not believe in the above external manifestations of humility, and hence are drifting with the world. Now the point of our present argument lies in the fact, that the latter class unanimously favor the enterprise of a high school. We are however frank to admit that there are some plain humble brethren, who favor a high school, the lamentable truth in this is, that their presence is what gives the enterprise a show in the eyes of the church. Were our humble brethren all united against the enterprise, it would never have gained the footing in our conference halls that it has. An old brother once told me when young that unless I became plain and humble that I would never have much influence in the church.

To unfold and give further light to our present argument we ask leave to relate the following: Sometime since a brother, upon whom there was not an external mark of our fraternity stopped and preached some "telling sermons" for us; when in conversation with him on external humility, he discarded the whole idea. This brother stood connected with the enterprise of the Brethren's school. A committee of Brethren sometime since was sent to settle a difficulty in a congregation; one of the troubles urged was "too much pride in the ministry." The committeemen in turn urged measures against the growing evil; while one of the committee arose and stated that he endorsed the plainness of the church, but acknowledged that he was not an example of her plainness. Not an example. Paul tells Timothy "be thou an example of the believers in word and conversation" &c. Peter tells us "being ensample to the flock." Again "ye have us for an ensample," hence it becomes our duty to be examples of what we preach and profess. This brother is also engaged in the interests of the Brethren's school. Another, last Autumn we met a brother with whom we used to associate in our young days; we found him a husband and a father, and living in a locality of the Brotherhood, that gave the Brethren's school their sanction and support; he had been raised by humble parents in a plain church. Mark his views. He said that he was going to sell and leave there for the Brethren where he lived were too proud, he could not raise his children as plain as he wanted to. The above instances clearly illustrate the nature of the support by a man of the Brethren's school, hence I sincerely ask how can a school result favorably to the interests of the church, under the above influence with which it will be inevitably surrounded?

An institution of learning in the church would have a magnetic influence, would draw, collect and concentrate all the elements of pride in the church. My experience is that pride is very difficult to control when it lies in fragments scattered over our vast Brotherhood, but when the enemy gets the element of pride collected with the power of an institution of learning at the head, how can the tyrant be controlled? I ever fear and quake, but then I shall tremble. As a goat now it is difficult to control, but as a lion then it will be uncontrollable.

Our fifth argument is based upon the fact that the early advice of our brethren in conference advises brethren not to give colleges their support. In Vol. 3. P. 238 of the G. V. we have the following as the decision of the A. M. held at Bever Dam Md. in 1853.

Considered that we deem colleges a very unsafe place for a simple follower of Christ, inasmuch as they are calculated to lead us astray from the faith and obedience of the Gospel. Also in 1857 a query respecting a school then contemplated. Answer. It is conforming to the world; while Paul would tell us "not to be conformed to this world." According to the above the measures of a high school are opposed to the Gospel.

But more recent decisions have assumed a milder form. It is now decided that the church has no right to interfere with an individual enterprise so long as there is no departure from gospel principles. This latter is a very grave departure from the former decision as the reader will observe; this departure we shall explain by a quotation from the Chicago Journal and the Cincinatti Times. "The peculiar sect of Christians known as Dunkards which have heretofore been opposed to all higher education have given away the pressure of the times and the more progressive ones are about to establish a classical school and book concern for which the amount of a hundred thousand dollars is to be raised!" "The pressure of the times" caused the above variation in the decision of our brethren. "The pressure of the times," is a great enemy to Christianity hence greatly to be feared. A subject was up this year at A. M. which but a few years ago our old brethren on the standing committee were united upon. A brother now testifies that he has opposed it as long as he could, and can oppose the measure no longer. Why not? We answer because of "the pressure of the times." What caused Aaron to erect a moulten calf in the camp of Isreal? "The pressure of the times." "The pressure of the times," also caused Saul to spare Agag by which he lost his kingdom. Dear readers we sincerely warn you against this lurking foe; "the pressure of the times"

Brethren, are now permitted to engage in the work of high school upon the premises of "individual enterprise." We cannot help regarding the above premises as simply a pontoon upon and over which the enemy will march a very powerful division of his force into "the camp of Isreal," and when the enemy once lands his forces, plants his batteries, it is very difficult to drive him back and regain the territory. John Wesly sorely laments ill spent time in keeping the church humble. "He sees what he might have done once, but what he can do now he cannot tell." Says Wesley, the brethren we fear who are sanctioning a high school in the church will certainly in future years meet with Wesly's experience. You will, we greatly fear, look back and see what you might have done once in keeping the church humble but now it is too late. You laid the pontoon of "individual enterprise" and over that the enemy ushered a distressing foe into the church. But we are asked do we not need educated men in the church? We do, and thank the Lord we have them

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINODON, PA., AUOUST 25, 1874.

☞ How to send money.--All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

Items of News.

As the news department seems to be growing in interest among our readers, we hereby invite all to assist us in making it more complete. There is not a congregation in the brotherhood but what could give us weekly items of news that would be of general interest to our readers. With every letter you send us, enclose in it a report of the condition of the crops, how the church is progressing, the election of deacons and ministers, the baptisms, whether you have a Sunday school, its attendance and the interest manifested. All these things we would gladly learn and make room for in our space devoted to that purpose. Let us see what can be done in this direction.

TO THOSE IN ARREARS.

It has always been an unpleasant duty for us to call upon our readers for money but circumstances seem to make it necessary that we should do so. To publish a paper we must have money and that money we expect from our readers. We do not feel to press the matter too hardly but ask every brother and sister and all those who may yet be in the arrears, to pay us as soon as they possibly can. Harvest is now over and we believe there are but few who could not raise the small amount of $1.50. Please try it and thus very much oblige those who have been laboring for your spiritual good.

A VISIT.

On Saturday evening, Aug. 15, we had the pleasure of a visit from Eld. James Quinter, of the Companion office. On Sunday morning we took him out to the James Creek Church, where he preached for us to general acceptance. In the evening he filled the pulpit of Rev. Zahnizer, of the Presbyterian Church in this place. Monday was spent in consultation relative to our business and future plans of operation. Although we did not get accomplished what we could have wished and desired yet we made a step which we think to be in the right direction and hope that the Lord may so direct us that whatsoever may be for the good of the church and the cause may yet be accomplished. We are brethren and are laboring with the same object in view, yet it seems, under existing circumstances, difficult to unite our efforts and thus cut off occasions of temptations to which both publishers and contributors are subjected to when our labor is divided. Perhaps if we would consult the flesh and our own convenience a little less and the great work of converting souls to Christ and the heavy responsibilities resting upon us more, we might come to different conclusions.

Of late we looked forward with unusual interest with the hope that we would be enabled to unite our efforts and thus give to the brotherhood a larger and better paper, but however much we may be disappointed in accomplishing this very desirable end, yet we assure our readers that, on our part, there shall nothing be left undone to give to the brotherhood a larger and better paper even if it should cut us down to a bare living profit.

Our meeting and being together was an occasion of much pleasure to us and we fondly hope that the christian regard we have for each other's temporal and spiritual interests may result in good to our common cause.

The Time Appointed.

We are the recipients of a periodical bearing the above title, published by W. C. Thurman devoted to making plain the vision of Daniel which was "closed up and sealed till the time of the end." In it we notice the following request and answer headed "More Light."

Brother Thurman:—We know that it is a certain rule among "the wise," or those "who are of the household of faith;" the more light the more faith. But can those who have not the light you have, have the faith you have? I mean with regard to definite time.

Though we may feel to assent to all you have said, it would make our faith much stronger if we knew how to calculate eclipses, which seem to be the main foundation for the truthfulness of chronology. Therefore, could you not teach us how to make those calculations? I for one would regard it as a great advantage if I could have some one to teach me this.

Again, those three eclipses of the moon, spoken of in the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," (p. 79,) which are made to correspond to the year B. C. 682, and the two others to the year B. C. 681. But in your work entitled "Three Important Questions Considered" are they not made to correspond to the year B. C. 721 and 720, or are they different eclipses? Please give us some more light on this subject.

Your brother, waiting for the coming of the Lord Jesus.

PETER DEARDOFF.

Brother Deardoff is correct in supposing astronomy "to be the main foundation for the truthfulness of chronology," and if the advent body had employed some good astronomic tables our Bible chronology could have been settled.

In regard to the eclipses of the moon alluded to those of B. C. 982 were made some 15 or 20 years ago when I had access to but few books. But with the much valuable information received since that time, I discovered that these were not the eclipses to which Ptolemy referred; but in the "Three Important Questions," which is a revision of the "Book of Daniel Opened" they are given correct, and fixed to the years 721 and 720.

Without manifesting a disposition of disregarding the "Signs of the Times" or undervaluing the labor of those who diligently search the Scriptures, we cannot help but think it was a pity that Mr. Thurman did not have a few more books a little sooner and thus in a measure, saved his reputation as a prophet. Even now, we are inclined to believe that it would have been better for him to have waited still a little longer and procured a few more before appointing "the time of the end." If his information relative to this important subject has been changed so materially by the reading of a few books how many more "times of the end" may we not except by the time he reads the thousands of volumes to which he has not yet had access?

In the paper we see the time is appointed for 1875 but nothing more definite by the editor but by the character of the correspondents it would seem that the day is also specified. One says: "Bless his dear name, we shall all expect to see you and Jesus and all the saints on the 19th day of April." (1875.) How near he may be correct in his computation God only knows. It may happen at that time and it may happen sooner but we hesitate not in saying that Mr. Thurman nor no other man knows the "appointed time."

Almanac for 1875.

As the time has now arrived that we should commence to make preperations for our next Almanac, we now call upon our readers to give us such aid as will enable us to put out one that will be worthy of the patronage of the Church and therefore call the attention of our friends to the following divisions of the subject upon which we desire information and help:

1. A correction of any errors that may have been found in any of the addresses of the ministers.

2. The names and addresses of any of our ministers that were omitted in our list of last year.

3. The names and addresses of brethren that have have been put into the ministry within the present year.

4. The names and addresses of any that have been in the ministry but who are no longer in.

5. Memoirs of prominent ministering brethren who have died.

6. Any customs among our ancient brethren illustrative of any of our principles or peculiarities.

7. The time for holding the District Meeting in the various Districts comprising the brotherhood.

8. Miscellaneous subjects. Under which head we would have included any thing suitable to the Brethren's Almanac.

We will also accept a number of good and responsible advertisements that will be in harmony with the nature of our work. In our late consultation with Bro., Quinter of the Companion, we have agreed to unite in publishing our Almanac which will greatly enlarge its circulation. We intend to publish 8000 copies thus affording rare opportunities to advertisers.

We also state that correction &c., can be sent to either office, but should not be sent to both. As we wish to publish the Almanac as soon as possible, we ask those concerned to act at once so that there may be no delay.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

ONE AND ONE.

Two little girls are better than one,
Two little boys can double the fun,
Two little birds can build a fine nest,
Two little arms can love mother best.
Two little ponies must go to a span;
Two little pockets has my little man,
Two little eyes the open and close,
Two little ears and one little nose,
Two little elbows, dimpled and sweet,
Two little shoes, on two little feet,
Two little lips and one little chin,
Two little cheeks with a rose shut in;
Two little shoulders, chubby and strong,
Two little legs running all day long,
Two little prayers does my darling say,
Twice does he kneel by my side each day—
Two little folded hands, soft and brown,
Two little eyelids cast meekly down—
And two little angels guard him in bed,
"One at his foot, and one at his head."

TO MY YOUNG READERS.

I notice in a late number of the PILGRIM that Uncle Henry is called for. This I am glad to know as it has been sometime since I had the pleasure of talking to my young readers and I often wondered if you missed me. It is always a pleasant thought to know that we are remembered and especially so by children. It may seem strange to your young minds why I love young persons more than those who have grown up to be men and women, but I will try to tell you.

Uncle Henry was once the father of a bright eyed little daughter. All that was lovely and good seemed to be embodied in this little girl. To please Ma, and Pa, was the delight of her life and labor. With hearts filled with gratitude to God for the precious gift, many were the prayers made in her behalf, that she might be blest with the good and protected from the evil. At six years of age she seemed fully to understand the nature of her Savior's redeeming love and often would enquire why it was that everybody did not love Jesus. She thought it very strange that all little boys and girls should not love such a dear Savior who had done so much for them. But it seemed that her soul was too pure for this world of sin and Jesus thought it good to take her to himself.

One morning she took sick, and though everything was done for her that love and parental affection could suggest, yet human skill could not avail, the impress of death was stamped upon her brow and no earthly physician could remove it. But Oh, how resigned, how submissive was our little Ella. Though burning fever unhinged her mind at times yet every expression of her little parched tongue was love for her parents and her dear Savior. Death to her had no terrors—it was a passing from pain and sickness to happiness and life eternal.

At last the sad hour came, the last kiss was planted upon the burning lips, the last lisping of dear papa and dear mamma fell upon our bruised souls and the spirit took its flight.

The little body was tenderly placed in its last resting place and the sorrow stricken parents returned to their house to find it empty, yea, more than empty. Since then Uncle Henry has no little Ella to cheer his lonely hours, but in every good little boy and girl he thinks he can still see the angel-like spirit of his little daughter, and he feels like calling them all, his own dear children, and because he cannot travel around and see them all, he feels like talking to them occasionally through the PILGRIM.

Having now told you the cause of my sorrows, will you not give me your sympathies and when you are loving and making happy your dear parents, think of those who have no children to love and comfort them in their hours of trouble.

UNCLE HENRY.

RUBBED OUT.

Tom was not a bad boy—indeed, his teacher classed him among the pretty good boys. He had his faults but I am not going to tell them to you. One day he got all "twisted up," as he called it. Things went wrong, and he disobeyed his teacher. I cannot tell tales out of school, so you shall not know just what he did, but it was something very wrong.

The next morning, instead of a pleasant smile and cheery greeting, Miss Hall, his teacher, only saw a hurried glance and a troubled downward look. After devotions Tom was sent to a recitation room, that he might think and decide what to do. He was not to recite until he decided. Tom thought. He knew that he had done wrong. He was sorry, for he loved his teacher, and seldom had been punished; but Miss Hall felt that his offense could not be overlooked. At recess she said, "Well, my boy, what shall we do?"

"I don't know, teacher," he replied. "I did very wrong, and am sorry."

"I know you are sorry," said the teacher, "and I dislike to punish you, but I do not see how I can help it; do you?"

"No ma'am. I know I ought to be punished."

"What shall it be, my boy?"

"Just what you say, teacher."

"Are you willing in some way to tell the boys what you told me?"

"I am willing," Tom eagerly answered.

"Will you write it on the board, or say it?"

"I had rather write it, teacher."

So together Tom and his teacher went back to the school-room, and on the blackboard back of the teacher's table, Tom wrote:

"I disobeyed my teacher yesterday: I am sorry, and will try to do as she wishes in future. THOMAS CARR."

You may be sure the room was very still while Tom was writing. You could hear the clock tick. Tom felt rather flustered by the unusual silence, and could not remember to spell as well as usual. He stopped at the word sorry, and looking up to his teacher, said in a low voice, "How do you spell sorry, Miss Hall with two 'r's' or one?" He will never forget how to spell that word, I know.

When his confession was written he slipped back into the recitation room, and let the blackboard tell its own story, the teacher only adding, "I know you all will be generous enough to say nothing of this to the one who has so nobly confessed his wrong." Then she wrote Res—meaning Reserve—above the words, and there they stood all day. Tom saw them every time he looked up, and often when he didn't too, and he thought, "Oh, dear, if I had not done wrong, if I could only take it back, and rub out those hateful words."

The next morning Tom dreaded to go to school, thinking of the handwriting on the wall. He did not even look at the blackboard till the bell rang and the teacher said, "I have rubbed out the words that were written here yesterday. Will the scholars get their Bibles and read what is in their place?" for in place of Tom's confession the teacher had written the text in Isaiah 43: 25.

Every Bible was quickly turned and the passage silently read, and many a quick, intelligent glance turned toward the desk. "Please, teacher, let us read it together," said

"I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins."—S. S. Times.

Don't Harm The Little Birds.

D. F. NEWTON.

We love the song-birds, and feel that if they were taken away the earth would lost one of its richest and most wonderous charms. We love them and wonder at them, for of all God's irrational creatures they are the most wonderous and beautiful. They are the choristers of heaven, and constant ministers of that worship which goes up continually unto God, the unpaid and faithful preachers of an unselfish and beautiful piety.

Look at them, as swaying on flowery sprays they gush out those strains which chime with the songs of angels; aye, look at them as they sing, with upturned head, rapt, soft, and halfclosed eyes, their frail forms quivering in the ecstatic joy, and selfish heart melting into reverential awe and rising up to God on the wings of praise and prayer!

How thankful should we be that God has given us the dear birds to be our fellow-laborers and comforters, and the laborer is surely worth of his hire. Why grudge him his pay? Why cheat him of his spring and summer work? Soon we shall see them very busy. Many have already begun.

"Don't shoot the birds, the joyous birds,
That charm the traveler's way."

Many children have abundant religious instruction at home and in churches and Sabbath-schools, and yet are suffered to grow up with the idea that there is no harm in robbing birds' nests, or tormenting the bugs, snakes, toads, and the lower species of animals life.

The exercise of this spirit is sure to engender a tyrannical love of power and dominion over everything, either brute or human, that is weaker than themselves and generally leads to wickedness and cruelty.

"The Lord who gives us daily bread
Supplies their wants and hears their cry,
And every wrong which they endure
Is marked by his paternal eye,

"And should your cruelty betray
Your trust o'er those who can't complain,
Beware the measure that you mete
May be returned to you again."

"You've Cut Me Deep."

Last summer a missionary, recently returned from India, stepped into a third-class carriage on his way into the country, and seated himself near the door. As the train approached a village, and as his fellow-travelers, pointing to a cottage, said, "There's my house, sir, and in a drawer there I have a Bible that I paid fifty-two shillings on!" "A large sum indeed!" said Mr. S.; and then putting his hand on the man's shoulder, added, "But, my friend, a Bible in a drawer at home will do you no good! Let me tell you what a dying woman in India said to me. She took her Bible from under her pillow, and clasping it in both hands said, 'I have my Lord Jesus here.' Then, putting her hand on her heart, she said, 'I have my Lord Jesus here;' and then, lifting both hands and looking up, 'I have my Lord Jesus there for me.'"

The effect of these words were as if he had been shot. He flung himself back in the seat, covered his face with his hands, saying again and again, "You've cut me deep—you've cut me deep!" Just at that moment the train arriving at the station, the poor fellow took hold of both Mr. S's hands, saying, "God bless you sir! God bless you! but oh! you've cut me deep!" and disappeared, overcome by his feelings.

Christian reader—at least, Christian by name—like the man cut deep, you have Christ in your Bible, but have you him in your heart?" "Christ in you the hope of glory." He who finished his Father's work on earth is now seated at his Father's right hand in glory. He is there for God, and for us who believe.—Good Words.

SELF-DENIAL.

Do you know what self-denial means? Perhaps this story will help you understand it.

One morning, as Harry and his parents were sitting at the breakfast-table, Harry seemed for a while engaged in a brown study. Presently he exclaimed, "Father, I have made up my mind not to eat any more salt mackerel."

"Ah! what has brought you to that conclusion?" asked his father, with a look of earnest inquiry.

"Because," continued harry, "our Sabbath-school teacher said we ought to give up something, so that we might have money to put in the missionary box."

"Well, but what has induced my son to choose salt mackerel as the thing he will give up?" again asked his father.

"Why," answered Harry, "because mackerel don't come very often; and I dont like them very well any how."

Now, do my young readers think there is any self-denial in that? I will tell you what self denial is.

Little Jenny, who dearly loved oranges, received one just ever so rich in its beautiful golden color, and plump with its delicious juice. Instead of eating it, she ran around the corner and gave it to little Emma, who was sick, and whose mother was too poor to buy her such luxuries, that was self denial.

When you give away something that you really want, that by so doing you make another happy; or when you give up something that you are really fond of, that you may have money for missionary or other good purposes, that is self-denial.

Jesus said, "If any man be my disciple, let him deny himself."—Carrier Dove.

It is exceedingly lovely to behold pictures of purity, though they be hung in frames of poverty.

THE FAMILY

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

No inteligent farmer or mechanic of modern times thinks for a moment of successfuly carrying on his business without the aid of all the machinery that can really be of advantage to him. Every well-appointed farm has its mower or reaper, its tedder, its hay-fork, its improved plows, its hay-cutter, its apparatus of steaming food, if it be a stock farm, and all the lesser appliance that suplement the skill and industry of the workman. This is as it should be. But when we leave the precincts of the farm-yard and stables and cross the kitchen and dining room, we are we sure of hearty meals to provide punctually at the appointed hour every day, children to look after, a baby to take care for, butter to work, calves to feed, chickens to attend to, besides the inevitable washing, ironing and mending that comes every week, it does seem as though she should have every possible aid—a good stove or range, to begin with, as this is really the central point of the household machinery, with abundance of fuel ready for use and not far away. A poor, small stove, though the best of fuel is provided, is a continual aggravation; a good, large stove, with poor fuel, is equally unsatisfactory. We knew a lady once, a clergyman's wife, who lived in a village where dry wood could not be obtained, as everybody found boot making more profitable than wood chopping. On baking day she whould go regularly to her husband and say, laughing, "Now, Brother B., I am going to bake; you must begin to pray." That didn't always give a nice brown to the loaves or keep the under pie crust from being soggy. How much it had to do with the uniform cheerfulness of the tried housewife it would be a difficulty to tell. The smiles that wreated her face in the midst of such trials were those of a saint.

Even when farm work presses, on Monday, the housekeeper, if she has no hired girl, ought to have the services of one of the hired men at least part of the day, to work the washing machine if she has one, to stand at the pounding-barrel, to turn the wringer, pump the water, empty the tubs, and keep the fire hot; so that, if possible, the washing may be out of the way in time to get dinner in season, and no return to the wash-tubs be necessary when dinner is over. Some women have so much sweetness of disposition, and such abounding health that they can bear everything with equanimity, those who are not thus blessed should not, as a matter of policy, be called on for the manifestations of amiability of which they are incapable. An energetic, ambitious housekeeper must, to keep up her spirits, see a way through her work, and if "Alps on Alps arise," and there is no possibility of scaling them, she will become either melancholy or ill-tempered—either of which states of mind is most unhappy for all concerned. "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Does God care for the oxen?" Much more than they should the women who works hard enjoy the fruit of her labor: turning her poultry and eggs, butter and honey into whatever may assist in making her work light, keeping her young in feeling and buoyant in spirit.—N. Y. Tribune.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.

too, but did we get them from the brethren's school? Cetainly not. A Moses was needed, he was schooled by the enemies to ancient Christianity. A Paul was also schooled to the work who had been educated by the enemies to Christianity. Old brother Kurts labored in the church with much profit for years, his literal qualifications he certainly received from the enemy of the cross of Christ. So at present we entertain the idea that many humble advocates of Christianity are receiving their literal qualifications from the enemies to the cross.

Our sixth argument is the voice of Christian fathers. Martin Luther in his complete works page 19, says; "the high schools were worthy that they were all ground to powder. Nothing more hellish and devilish has come on earth from the beginning of the world, neither will come," Dr. Clark in his theology says; "fine scholars seldom make good preachers," page—

Henry Kurts Vol. 3, page 239, of the G. V. says, "there have been brethren's children who might have become bright ornaments in the church; but they wanted more, they wanted to be shining lights in the world by obtaining a liberal education, and where are they now?" "We might multiply the above testimonies but we shall let those named suffice.

Having now briefly given our views on the subject of the Brethren's school we feel to submit them to the judgment of the candid reader; trusting they will be read as they have been written i. e. with humble sincerity. We not long since read a series of advices to correspondents, a prominent one of which was, "never express views which are likely to lead you into controversy with the editors for they have you at their mercy." The remark impressed us, did not think we should violate it soon; the only possible reason we can give is because of that "perfect love that casteth off all fear." Our dear Brethren in Conference we also hail them with kind regard, but we are compelled to think that recent decisions indicate plainly to a gradual "yielding to the pressure of the times," which if so, is evil, hence as an evidence of our love, we call their attention to it.

With this for the present we bid adieu. I. R. ROSENBERGER.

PRIDE.

Brethren and sisters, let us keep in the valley of humility. If we would be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus we should be a separate people from the world, and not follow the fashions of th world. Remember the day in which we were received into the church, and the holy vows we then made. We were then willing to forsake all and follow the meek and lowly Lamb of God, but sisters I think we forget ourselves sometimes and follow the fashions of this world too much. The Scriptures say what is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall. Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud. Prov. 16: 18, 19. I heard a woman say last week that moved here from Wayne county, who does not belong to any church, but was used to going to our church in Wayne county, that the sisters there were much plainer than they are here. She said you could tell their children, their little girls all wear sunbonnets, and the sisters did not allow their daughters to follow the fashions of the world. She thought some of our sisters here put on too much. How can they tell their children to abstain from the fashions of this world! O, mothers, set your children a good example, train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Speak kindly to them and tell them to love Jesus for he first loved them. Tell them much about the goodness of God, and that he hates proud looks.

I think we should be neat and clean, and keep our houses the same. but anything that is unnecessary we should not put on our garments, such as ruffles, edging, belts and many other things that are unnecessary. Now if we want to be a separate people and unspotted from the world, we must lay these things aside; but I feel thankful to the Lord that we have a goodly number of old sisters that set us a good example. O, why not follow them. They are mothers in Israel, for they let their light shine that others may see their good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven. But I fear that in ten years from now most of the old ones will be gone. If the church continues in pride, what an example will be set for the younger race. Those that are now on their mother's lap trained up in pride from their infancy, will they see any humility when they get to be young men and women? This Spring I was at a lovefeast in another arm of the church, and I saw that pride had crept into their church too, and I saw a young sister who was a minister's daughter, all ruffled and trimmed in the latest style of the world. She had not the apearance of a sister. I felt sorry for her. I thought if they had the good old leader that they used to have he would not suffer one of his flock to go astray, but would call a council and warn them of their danger. Yes, that good old leader is gone to his long home and we miss him much. He was one that could rule his own house, and he kept pride out of his own house. Then he had no trouble to rule his flock. He set them such a good example that his light still shines. I wish all our ministers now could rule in the same way and keep pride out. Then the world would not say, if your minister thinks it is wrong to wear the fashions of this world, why does he not keep it out of his family.

Now I hope no one will take offense at what I have written, for it is out of love that I have written it. God knows I love you all.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

I will inform the readers of the PILGRIM of the health and crops in our neighborhood. In the first place I will say, health is very good and has been all Summer, more so than it has been for many years. We had rain enough to bring crops on rapidly and to perfection. Wheat is very good with the exception of a few fields that was winter killed, but sown in spring has come on. There is more wheat than was expected. Some fields yielded 30 bushels per acre, and the berry is as good as any I ever saw. Corn is as good for the time of year as can be. Oats is good. Potatoes cannot be surpassed. no bugs to injure them, they have about all left. Everything looks prosperous. O, how thankful we should be for the blessings of the Lord. Apples are not so plenty as they have been some years, but there will be enough to supply the demands at home. Our marshes had the most whortleberries that I ever knew of. I heard one man say that one of the buyers had shipped over four thousand bushels, and he was only one among many that bought. Every family that had no crop to take care of was gathering and selling, and many that had farms were gathering and selling. There were many thousand dollars made. Some women made $2.00 per day for several weeks. It was a harvest for the people for four or five weeks. New wheat is going into the market by the thousands at $1.00 per bushel. We had the most favorable season that was ever known in this country. JOHN KNISLEY.

Answer to Information Wanted.

In the weekly PILGRIM No. 24, page 190, I see a piece from A. J. Correll headed "Information wanted." He wants to know if there is or ever was an organized church of the Brethren in St. Louis Co. Mo.,

There was some years ago a church planted and organized there, by (what were then known as far Western brethren,) George Wolf and James Hendricks. A short time ago I had the pleasure of visiting Jeremiah McKinnon, (not McKenen) from whom I have received this information. Jeremiah McKinnon is living near Dixon Co. Mo. He and his wife both claim to be members, and he in the first degree of the ministry, but they have no letter of recommendation, but we doubt not but what they are, and were members in full fellow-ship when they left St. Louis Co. and they are still contending for the faith of the brethren. Jeremiah says a brother by the name of Williams, who was advanced to the second degree of the ministry, preached and baptized several persons in St. Louis and Franklin counties, and those names in brother Correll's article are all familiar. But this John R. Miller was baptized after they left there. William McKinon also left St. Louis Co. and moved to Preble Co. Mo. where he died, but after he moved to Preble they were there, and William also visited them in Pulaska. They say they remember hearing William speaking of baptizing one John Miller after they left there, and that is all they know about it. They don't doubt but what John Miller's claim is a just one. Jeremiah thinks they all left there without ever applying for or receiving a letter, one in one direction and another in another. If this will give any satisfaction receive it in love from your brother in Christ. JOHN LAIR.

H. B. Brumbaugh:—

DEAR BROTHER:—I wish to say to you that I am much pleased with your manner of conducting the PILGRIM. It seems to me that when strife is successfully avoided without sacrificing the truth, much is accomplished. This I think you are laboring to do for which you have my earnest approval. If you could secure more proper local news, it would be appreciated. Try to glean your exchanges, so that your "Miscellaneous Department" is not too barren. This department is read with interest, as many get no other paper than the PILGRIM.

The above is submitted in love by one that regards the judgemeot of others. JOHN ZUCK.

Dear Pilgrim:—

I find in Vol. 5, page 186, a query said to be from me. I wish the whole of my query had appeared for I discover that the answer to it does not suit the query that I intended. The question was not, if we might commune without having our feet washed, that is clear enough to us, but the query with me is, can we commune without washing another's feet, since the command is to wash feet and not that we should have our feet washed? Please let this appear in your columns soon and oblige. Yours in the bonds of the gospel.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Brethren of Rogersville, Ind, have changed the time of holding their Communion meeting from Oct. 20th to Nov. 1st 1874.

—The Lutherans have, on an average dedicated two churches in this country per week, since the first of January.

—Those who wish a card or advertisements in the "Brethren's Almanac" should apply at once as rare advantages will be afforded to good advertisers.

—The new church of the "Brethren" in Hill Valley, Huntingdon Co., Pa. will be dedicated on Sept. 19th. Communion services will be held at the same time.

The Presbyterians claim about one hundred churches in the South. Among this number there are eight colored churches which are said to be orderly and interesting.

—Bro. E. L. Yoder of Madisonburg, Ohio, says the credit system is troublesome and that he much prefers the cash system. So do we, and will gladly allow our agents to adopt it when practicable.

—Our readers will please notice Bro. J. Zuck's card on the eighth page. Bro. Zuck is fully competent to give satisfaction in anything in the line of his business and we hope our readers when practicable, will call upon him.

—Bro. Martin Nehr of Sugar Creek W. Va. says "The Church here has just passed through a dark time which was hovering over it when we came here the first of June last, but now it seems God is riviving his work among us. Some have made up their minds to come to Christ and others are counting the cost. May God help them, is our prayers."

—Reports are coming in from every direction full of praise for the plentifulness of crops of all kinds. These are happy indications and makes us hope that the day is fast approaching when the lonely dirge of "hard times" will be heard no more.

—There are in Jackson county, Minnesota, 3,109 persons destitute on account of the grasshopper raid. The relief distributed to them up to this time amounts to six pounds of flour and ten ounces of pork for each person. So far about $17,000 have been contributed in Minnesota for the relief of the grasshopper region.

—Wm. C. Thurman has fixed the final consumation of all things on the 19th of April 1875. Yet he is willing to take subscribers, and their pay, to The Time Appointed for a full year from date. Would it not be to the credit of Bro. Thurman and his prophecy if he would make arrangements to wind up his earthly affairs about the 19th of said month, and take subscriptions that will expire at the time of the end? Prophets should be consistent with their own faith.

—Bro. M. M. Eshleman of Lanark, Ill. expects soon to give to the Brotherhood a book on "Non conformity to the World, or a vindication of True vital Piety." We are pleased that there are efforts being made in this direction and hope the work may be worthy of general patronage.

—The citizens of Ottawa, Franklin Co., Kansas, were visited with a terrible sterm or whirlwind on July 31st. It done considerable damage to buildings and property generally, removing a number of houses from their foundations and unroofing many more. At the time the Adventists had their Mission Tent pitched in the Park, which was torn from its fastenings and badly damaged.

—Brother A. Brumbaugh says, "As a news item for your worthy paper I will state that the East Nimishillen congregation, Ohio, is fast bringing to completion its new meeting-house, on the farm of Lewis Brumbaugh, 1½ miles North of Hartville. The church at its late Council got along very well with its business, although one member had to be cut off an account of disobedience."

—Bro. J. H. Moore, under date of Aug. 18th, says: "We are now having a very severe drouth, and there is no possible chance left of raising a good crop of corn this season, in this part of the State. Last Lord's day I attended quite an interting meeting among the Brethren in Montgomery County, Ind. Some people would call it a "basket meeting," but we do not. We had preaching at 11, a. m., ate our dinners in a beautiful grove near by, and had preaching again at 3 p. m., a large crowd and good attention."

—Bro. J. P. Larew of Latimore, Adams Co., Pa., says: "We were in council with the Marsh Creek Church on last Tuesday and Bro. David Bosserman, who, for agitating some of his views was deprived of his ministerial functions, is again reinstated into the full ministry.

With us it is very dry. Everything is suffering for want of rain. For the last few days it has been very warm.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

—The Turkish Government is having trouble with its subjects in Crete. The Christians and Mussulmans are arrayed against each other, and a strong garrison is required to keep the peace. The Christians demand that full political rights be accorded them, and complain that they are oppressed by the Turks with impunity in presence of the troops. Both parties are willing to be rid of Turkish rule. The Christians favor annexation to Greece, while the Mussulmans want to be under the protection of Egypt. Conciliation is believed to be impossible, and a serious outbreak, it is said may occur at any moment.

—In the population of the world, China, stands first, with 426 213,152, the British Empire with 199,817,000, and Russian third, with 82,172,022. The United States are fifth. In density of population Belgium comes first, with 451 per square mile. England comes next, with 389. Belgium has one mile of railroad to 6 square miles of territory; Great Britain 1 to 8 square miles, and the United States are eleventh, with 1 mile of road to 56 of territory. Of electric telegraphs, Great Britain has 1 to every 4 square miles; Belgium 1 to 5, and the United states 1 to 36. The mercantile navies of the world comprise 61,429 vessels, and a total tonage of 18,514, 029. Of these, Great Britain has 3,061 steamers and 20,832 sailing vessels, the United States coming next, with 403 steamers and 5,786 sailing vessels.

—The immigration for 1873, judging from the arrivals at New York, is not so large as during 1872. During 1873, down to December 20th, there were 266,011 immigrants landed at New York, the number for the corresponding period of 1872 having been 292,932. The bulk of the immigrants came from Germany and Ireland, as usual, the former sending us 105,749, and the latter, 76,083. England sent 32,713, France, 5,197, Sweden 10,173, and Italy, 6,770. There were 2,437 Mormon arrivals this year (777 more than last year), and England, Denmark, and Sweden furnish most of them. The Southern Emmigration Society in 1873 succeeded in getting a larger immigration to the Southern States than formerly was the case, though the number who go in that direction is still small.

A WONDERFUL TELEGRAPHIC INVENTION.—At the Broadway, N. Y., office of the Western Union Telegraph Company, a test was recently made of an invention which promises to be of almost more importance to the present age than Morse's first achievements to the people of his own time. The test resulted successfuly, and it proved that four messages can be simultaneously sent on a single wire in opposite directions, with no more liability to mistake than as if an equal number of wires were used. This invention quadruples the usefulness of all existing lines and the effect will be the same as if there had been erected three times the present length of line. The only particular in which the change will not be felt will be in the cost of messages, as the Western Union controls the invention and will have a monopoly of the advantages.

MEETING OF THE SYNODICAL CONFERENCE.—The third annual convention of the Synodical Conference of North America was held July 15–21 in Pittsburg, Pa. The Synods in connection with it were all represented, namely those af Missour, Ohio, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, and the Norwegian Synod. A large number were also presented as advisory members. Two series of these were discussed, one on church fellowship and another on parochial law. On the latter subject it contended that parishes should be geographically limited and have each his own territory; where the boundaries of different parishes meet, care for the soul and interest in the welfare of Zion must determine to which one a person should belong; parochial boundaries, being merely of human right, may be changed whenever the interests of the church demand it. Although there was a protracted debate on the first point stated, arising from the proofs adduced to establish the thesis, the propositions were all adopted without a dissenting voice. It was recognized by all as an evill that members of different congregations live in the same territory. The work of the church is impeded and the pastoral labor rendered more arduous by it. Only where there is a difference of language should their be members of more than one congregation within the same geographical limits. To arrange parochial boundaries for the different congregations as soon as practicable is regarded by all as a goal earnestly to be aimed at. That Synods should have their territorial limits, and that one should respect the boundaries of other, the Conference had already expressed as its conviction in its Constitution, and to this our labors are tending.—Luthern and Missionary.

POETRY.

WHY BE PROUD?

SELECTED BY J. H.

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a swift fleeting meteor, a fast flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave.
He passeth from life to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around and together be laid,
And the young and the old, and the low and the high,
Shall moulder to dust and together shall lie.

The infant and mother attended and loved;
The mother that infant's affection who proved;
The husband that mother and infant who blest,
Each, all, are away to their dwelling of rest.

The hand of the king that the sceptre hath borne,
The brow of the priest that the miter hath worn,
The eye of the sage and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depths of the grave.

The peasant, whose lot was to sow and to reap,
The herdsman, who climbed with his goats up the steep,
The beggar, who wondered in search of his bread,
Have faded away like the grass we tread.

So the multitude goes, like the flower or the weed,
That withers away to let others succeed;
So the multitude comes, even those we behold,
To repeat every tale that had often been told.

For we are the same our father's have been;
We see the same sights our fathers have seen,
We drink the same streams and view the same sun,
And run the same course our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking our fathers would think;
From the death we are shrinking our fathers would shrink;
To the life we are clinging they also would cling;
But it speeds for us all, like a bird on the wing.

They loved, but the story we cannot unfold;
They scorned, but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved, but no wail from their slumber will come;
They joyed, but the tongue of their gladness is dumb.

They died, aye! they died; we things that are now;
That walk on the turf that lies over their brow;
And make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the things that they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yea, hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,
We mingle together in sunshine and rain;
And the smile and the tears, the song and the dirge,
Still follow each other, like surge upon surge.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

THE COVENANT OF GOD.

"And I will be their God." Gen. 17: 8.

In all God's covenants with men, spiritual and temporal blessings are expressly mentioned, or fully implied; and the few words which we have selected for a few brief remarks to those of us who have made a solemn covenant to God to live faithful until death, contain all the blessings of this life and that which is to come; for what greater portion can any one desire than to have God for their inheritance. He is the fountain head of all good, and happy is that people whose God is the Lord. This sentence contains all that can be thought of or desired, obtained or enjoyed. It surpasses our most sublime thoughts of the grandeur of the New Jerusalem. Our minds are too weak to comprehend the greatness of the promise that God made to faithful Abraham, "And I will be their God."

We should feel thankful to God that his promises are not confined to Abraham alone. It is to as many as are willing to leave their own country, the land of sin, and journey towards the heavenly Canaan, and endure the trials and temptations through the thorny desert. God has in all ages tried his people. He tried Abraham in many ways, and finally commanded him to offer up his dear son, and finding him faithful to the last he then confirmed his promises by an oath.

Brethren and sisters, have we endeavored to walk blameless in all the commandments of the Lord's house? Have we faithfully performed the covenant that we made when we made confession unto salvation? If so, we have the same soul-cheering promise that was made to Abraham years ago. "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate saith the Lord, and I will receive you, and be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 16. How such promises, from such a never failing source, should animate, encourage, and buoy us up in our feeble efforts to follow in the foot-steps of our victorious Captain.

We notice that in all the covenants made between God and man, that if man faithfully performed his part God never failed on his part, "For all the promises of God are yea and amen." What a glorious thought that God has covenanted upon our faithfulness to his word to be our God, not for a day, month, or year, but through all the trials and temptations of this life, and when we shall be called to pass through the dark valley of the shadow of death, "He will be our God." We will have his rod and staff to comfort us, yea, it extends through all periods of time, while the ceaseless ages of a vast eternity are rolling on, when God shall be all in all, he will still continue to be our God.

Upon an examination on our part of the covenant, we will readily see and feel that we have often disobeyed the conditions of the covenant through the weakness of the flesh. Let us not be discouraged. We have an advocate with the Father, pleading for our shortcomings. Let us then renew our covenant afresh, and may we henceforth have his holy and righteous law indelibly written in our hearts, that we may never forget it, so that we may at the fulfillment of our part of the covenant hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Then we will realize to its full extent the covenant that he will be their God.

Friendly reader, you that have never entered into covenant with God, let me say to you that you are occupying dangerous ground. "You are without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world." How do you suppose you will feel when you are brought before a covenant-keeping God, and you have never tried to comply with the requirements of the covenant of promise. I wish to bring to your minds with what glory and terror the Lord made his covenant with his people on Mt. Sinai. "There were thunder and lightning and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet was exceeding loud so that all the people in the camp trembled." If the children of Israel trembled when they could not behold their God, and he was making his covenant with them through Moses, his mediator, what do you suppose your feelings will be when you will be arraigned before God in his august presence to receive your sentence from an offended God. O, the horrors of that soul, who in the great and notable day of the Lord will have to hear in thunder tones from the Judge of quick and dead. "I will not be your God." Then you will remember how often you was invited through the preaching of God's word, the weekly visits of our loving PILGRIM to enter into covenant with him who has said, "And I will be their God." May you be enabled to make your covenant with God before it will be forever too late, is the prayer of all God fearing people.

SAMUEL A. HONBERGER.

Hamilton, Mo.

Causing others to Sin.

Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend I will eat no flesh while the world standeth.—1 COR. 13: 13

There are at least three other passages of New Testament Scriptures that are quite similar to the above. They are: "For meat do not destroy the work of God." "All things indeed are pure, but it is evil for man who eateth with offence" and "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

From these three expressions the conclusion that it is wrong to do anything which will injure one of our brethren, may well be derived.

We are not allowed to be knowingly influential or instrumental in the destruction of one soul. In this particular the spiritual warfare of the soldiers of Christ is quite different from that of the soldiers in the kingdoms of the world. In the late rebellion not only individuals, but companies, and sometimes whole regiments were purposely sacrificed to gain certain points. But in the Messiah's army we find no such strategy. In his kingdom meritorious deeds are voluntary sufferings of the just for the unjust, of the strong for the weak, and of the master for the servant. But this suffering, labor, and tribulation will end with all things that are earthly.

"The spirit (of Christ) speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith of Jesus by commanding others "to abstain from meats which God hath directed to be received with thanksgiving of those which believe and knew the truth." This is the same flesh which the apostle said he would not eat while he lived, if it made his brother offend. But while he, for that reason, abstained from those "meats," he was also as firm and punctual in obeying the command of the "spirit of Christ," to remind his brother of the truth that it was a seducing spirit to which he had given heed that caused the offence, that the command of God to him concerning these "meats" was to abstain from pollutions of idols," which is simply an inordinate affection for, or an improper use of these "meats," an abuse of the world created to be used. By temporally obeying the command of the deluded brother to abstain from those "meats," and by keeping him in remembrance of the truth concerning them, we shall be good ministers of Jesus Christ. The ground embraced by the words "meat," "meats," "flesh" and "creature" as they occur in the Scripture refered to includes that which produces swine's flesh, squirrels, all stimulating or intoxicating liquors, tobacco and other creatures of God that nourish the body when they are properly applied to it, including wearing apparel and musical instruments, high schools and everything else that tends to nourish the mind of Christ in man, even including the low marshy sickly swamps that produce scarcely anything but disputes about the different ways of combing hair, and about different or the same ways of cutting garments, pickles, &c. A total abstinence from any of these or other things, or a submission to any restriction may at any time be essential to the spiritual welfare of the Christian. The apostles were willing to become all things to all men to save them. I conceive their elasticity to have been such that they could be bent in any direction to suit the purpose of their Redeemer. I conceive their firmness or inflexibility to have been such that they could have been bent in no direction that would tend to subvert the cause of Christ, which was to seek and to save that which was lost.

To have the mind of Christ is to be exceedingly unselfish and large hearted, loving our brethren with a pure heart fervently, being faithful, not only until, but unto death.

Remarks on the Lord's Prayer.

Nothing is more steadfast than the eternal truths of morality. The heavens may pass away and the whole frame of nature be dissolved, but the rule of righteousness shall remain immutable and immortal, and therefore he ordered his disciples under the severest penalties to enforce both by preaching and example the strict observation of all the moral precepts contained in the sacred writings, and that in a much greater latitude than they were taken by the teachers of Israel, and in consideration of the frailties of human nature taught them that excellent form of prayer which has been used by all Christians.

Our Father. If earthly parents are called fathers the Almighty has the best title from every creature, and particularly from men, being the Father of their spirits, the maker of their bodies, and the continual preserver of both. Nor is this all. He is our Father in a still higher sense, as he regenerates us and stamps his image upon our minds, so that partaking of his nature, we become his children, and can therefore with holy boldness call him by the title of Father. In the former sense, God is the Father of all his creatures whether good or bad, but in the latter he is the Father only of the righteous.

Father is the most magnificient title invented by philosophers or poets in honor of their God. It contains the most lovely idea possibly to be conceived by the human breast. As it is used by mankind in general, it makes the essential character of the true God, namely, that he is the first cause of all things, or the author of their being, and at the same time conveys a strange idea of the tender love he bears to his creatures whom he nourishes with a watchfulness infinitively superior to that of an earthly parent.

The name of father also teaches us that we owe our being to God, points out his goodness and mercy in upholding us, and expresses his power in giving us the things we ask.

We are likewise taught to give our Maker the title of Father, that our sense of the tender relation in which he stands to us may be confirmed, our faith in his power and goodness strengthened, our hopes of obtaining what we ask in prayer cherished, and our desires of obeying and imitating him quickened. Reason aided by graces teaches that it is disgraceful in children to degenerate from their parents, and that they cannot commit a greater crime than to disobey the commands of an indulgent father.

Lastly we are commanded to call him Father in the plural number and that even in our secret addresses to the throne of grace, to put us in mind that we are all brethren, the children of one common parent, and that we ought to love one another with sincerity, as we pray not for ourselves only but for all the human race which art in heaven. These words do not suppose the presence of God confined. He is present everywhere, is about our paths, and about our bed, and narrowly inspecteth every action of the sons of men; but they express his majesty and power and distinguish him from those we call fathers here on earth, and from false gods which are not in heaven and happy mansions of bliss and felicity, where the Almighty, who is essentially present in every part of the universe, gives more especial manifestation of his presence to such of his creatures as he hath exalted to share with him in the eternal felicities of the heavenly Jerusalem.

"Hallowed be thy name." By the name of God the Hebrews understood God himself; his attributes and his works and therefore the meaning of the petition is, may thy existence be universally believed, thy presence be loved and imitated, thy works admired, thy supremacy over all things acknowledged, thy providence reverenced and confided in. May all the sons of men think so highly of his divine majesty, of the attributes of his works, and may we so express our veneration of God that his glory may be manifested in every corner of the world.

"Thy kingdom come." Let the kingdom of the Messiah be extended to the utmost parts of the earth that all the children of men may know his salvation and become one fold under one shepherd, Jesus Christ the righteous.

"Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." May thy will, O thou great Father of the universe, be done upon us that by the light of thy glorious gospel we may be enabled to imitate the angels of light, by giving us sincere universal and constant obedience to thy divine commands as blessed beings do in glory.

"Give us this day our daily bread." Give us from time to time wholesome and proper food, that we may be enabled to worship thee with cheerfulness and vigor.

"And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." The great God as supreme governor of the universe has a right to support his government by punishing those who transgress his laws. The suffering of punishment therefore is a debt which sinners owe to the divine Justice, so that when we ask God in prayer to forgive our debts we beg that he would be mercifully pleased to remit the punishment of all our sins, particularly the pains of hell, and that laying aside his displeasure he would graciously receive us into favor, and bless us with life eternal. In this petition therefore we confess our sins express the sense we have of their guilt, namely, that they deserve death, and surely nothing can be more proper than such a confession in our addresses to God, because humility and a sense of our own unworthiness when we ask favors of the Almighty, whether spiritual or temporal, have a tendency to give us a proper sense of the goodness of God in bestowing them upon us.

The terms of this petition are worthy of our notice. Forgive us only as we forgive. We must forgive others if we hope ourselves to be forgiven, and are permitted to crave from God such forgiveness only as we grant to others, so that if we do not forgive our enemies, we seriously and solemnly implore the Almighty to condemn us to the ponishment of eternal death. How exceedingly careful therefore should men be to purge their hearts from all rancor and malice before they venture into the temple of the Almighty to offer up their prayers to the throne of grace.

"And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." O thou that helpest our infirmities suffer us not to enter into temptation, to be overcome, or suffer loss thereby, but make a way for us to escape and deliver us by some means from the evil, either by removing the temptation, or by increasing our power to resist it. This petition teaches us to preserve a sense of our own inability, to repel and overcome the solicitations of the world, and of the necessity there is of our receiving assistance from above, both to regulate our passions and enable us to prosecute a religious life.

"For thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory for ever and ever." Because the government of the universe is thine forever, and thou alone possessed the power of creating and upholding all things, and because the glory of thine infinite perfections remains eternally with thee, therefore all men ought to hallow thy name, submit themselves to thy government, and perform thy will, and in an humble sense of their dependence seek from thee the supply of their wants, the pardon of their sins, and the kind protection of thy providence.

This is emphatically called the Lord's prayer because it was delivered by the Son of God himself, and therefore we do well to understand it thoroughly, that when we enter the temple of the Lord and address him in solemn prayer, we may have hopes that he will grant our petitions.

THE COMING STORM.

How beautiful is the scene of peaceful nature! The breeze so gently floating with its silvery touch upon every leaf. Our hearts throb with pleasure when we behold the fields of golden grain, of coming plenty, yea, everything seems to join in one united voice, "I would it were always thus. I wish this tranquility of nature would ever remain." But in the distance I hear a murmuring sound of thunder that tells of a coming storm; the clouds blacken and begin to rise higher and higher. On they come with vivid lightning in flames of wrath in and around the heaving mass. This peaceful scene around us is now becoming disturbed; the sun is hid behind erupted nature; the sweet songs of the birds are hushed in fearful silence; the hall of mirth, the resort of the gay, is as still as death; every heart is fearfully awaiting the approaching storm. It is a moment of danger, although it may pass away and leave us unharmed, yet it may not. The next moment we may be found gasping for eternity. How many such cases has there been! We have heard of them. And fearful lest this may be such a time, we wait in silence. At last the storm is over. Many have been found away from home unprepared for the drenching rain. The morning was so beautiful. The soul was filled with such expectations as to become forgetful of the storm that might send their chilling pangs to the very fount of life's blood. Yes, in the peaceful tranquilities of life how often do we forget "that in the midst of life we are in death," or while we are encircled in the embrace of gratitude's charming scene, there may be a storm lurking behind the distant hills, ready to burst upon us with its powerful arm. When we say peace and safety, sudden destruction may come. We are never safe from the storm, of whatever nature it may be. Let me say to you, dear friend, as a message from the Lord, "Trust me, in the calm and I will be with you in the storm." Where the Lord is there is peace, though the elements may be clothed in her arms of destruction, yet if God dwells in our hearts there will be one place where there is a calm. If we forget God in the time of peace, when all goes well, it is but mere mockery to trust him in the storm. Live to please God in the morning while the dew-drops are sparkling in the golden rays of the rising sun. Live to please God in the evening when the orb of day is sinking unbeclouded behind the western clime. Please him in the time of peace when there is no pang of woe to disturb the breast. Please him when there is no storm. Please him when all is well. Then you can trust him in the storm; for he is riding upon the wind; his power can stay all thy fears. O, may we thus live to please God, that when the last storm will come, when Jesus will be seated upon the clouds coming in all the majesty of his power, and in the image of his glory, followed by heaven's citizens, the sons of God. O, cannot we trust him. If we have trosted him in the calm of his power, when he spoke in gentle tones of mercy, we can trust him then. Yes, though this earth may burst as bars of sand, and the elements may melt with fervent heat, we will trust him. This storm is gathering fast; we can almost hear the murmuring thunder.

EDUCATIONAL.

Education is essential to the salvation of the soul. The time was when God communicated his will to man face to face, as in the garden of Eden. But since the ascension of Christ we have the revealed word, called the New Testament, as our guide, and to understand its teachings requires education. We must learn that letters in the form of words convey ideas, and different words convey different ideas, and often the same word has different meanings according to its orthography.

But, says one, it is the preacher's duty to tell me what the will of God is concerning me. I would say the value of your soul is too great to be risked upon the mere teaching of some one else who may not know more than you do. If all that is preached from the sacred desk were true, we would not hear so much that is not gospel. If you have no education how can you find out whether the truth has been told you or the ideas of men? But if you can understand the word for yourself then you may decide rightly.

Peter says in regard to the writings of Paul, "And the longsuffering of our Lord account salvation as also our brother Paul according to the wisdom given him, wrote to you: as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things, in which things are some hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable rest as also the other Scriptures to their own destruction." I wonder how my opponents reconcile the above Scripture with their views that education is of no consequence.

Is education the cause of crime? Let us reason together. Go to our alms-houses and examine the paupers there and what do you find? Highly educated men? No; but to the contrary, ten to one, can neither read, write, nor calculate. They are invariably such that shunned the school-house, and whose parents were equally ignorant. Visit our country jails, and what comprises the greater part of its inmates? Uneducated men. Our State prisons are also void of highly educated men. In view of these facts is it possible that any can oppose education. I am of the opinion that as education increases crime will decrease. When men can see their true condition and the inevitable result of crime, they will cease to transgress.

That it leads to pride I cannot conceive, for we find as much pride among the ignorant as among the educated, which goes to show the lameness of that argument.

Some brethren admit that education is necessary, but when it is to extend beyond their education, then it is too much. This however is poor logic. If no person were better educated than your unworthy writer, the business now in the world could not thus be carried on.

Some object to high-schools (so called) from this standpoint: That they are highly esteemed among men, hence an abomination in the sight of God. To such I would say: are not railroads, telegraphs, the art of printing, and a score of such like things equally highly esteemed in the sight of men? and do the brethren object on that account? No; and when it is necessary they use them without scruples. The time was when the wearing of boots, the riding on vehicles suspended on springs, and a score of such like things were objected to by the Brethren, but how is it to-day? The very opponents use them, and what harm do they do? Neither can there any evil result from being educated.

If the Brethren are challenged for a debate on the subjects of Feet washing, the Lord's Supper, Close Communion, Nonresistance, &c., why do they not bring forth the illiterate brother to represent the Brethren? If education is of no consequence he is the man. But we find that the contrary is the result. When such debates are to be held the very best educated brother is sought out to meet the Goliah on his own ground and with his own weapons. We admit that education can be abused and misused, but that does not say that the Brethren would be ruined were they educated. JOSEPH BLOUGH.

The Vine and the Branches.

BY W. J. ORTON.

The imagery of the Scriptures, strikingly beautiful and appropriate as it may appear to the cursory reader, is often far more beautiful and complete in the sight of careful study. Take, for instance, the familiar parable named in our heading. The fitness to the figure is felt and acknowledged by every Christian; yet we doubt whether even some of the best are aware of certain relations that exist between the vine and its members.

It is unquestionable true that the branches of any plant are in a general way wholly depended upon the root and trunk; from and through them they derive support and nourishment; without them they are not only barren of all fruit, but they speedily wither and decay. Still, while in the very nature of things it is impossible that the branches should flourish independent of the vine, they are in a large measure responsible for their own life and vigor, having a part assigned to them in the economy of vegetation which nothing else is fitted or allowed to do. Never did root or stem of any herb, shrub or tree force its branches to increase a single atom in length or strength. The root will furnish and the trunk will carry to the branches needful sustenance; the latter, in turn must literally, in a certain sense, feel their needs, and by their own free act draw upon the stores of nourishment provided.

So the fruits that crown the branches are by no means furnished to them in all their richness and perfection, unsought and unearned. Only the elements of fruit are given; to the branch, through the appointed means of bud, leaf and blossom, belongs the business of elaborating, of improving upon those elements and fitting them for the harvest day.

Peculiar significant in their analogical bearings are the disposition and capacity of a branch to seek, get and assimilate the needful things provided for it. Their real origin is traceable by science to the cellgerm of the seed, no further. Religion only, piercing the vail beyond, finds it with the single, uncreated Source of every facilty of mind and matter. This much of a great mystery we know, and let this suffice, as indeed it must. Other questions we may fathom easier and with greater profit. How is the vine best fitted to fulfill the great object of its being, to bear good and abundant fruit? Not simply by enriching it with that which enables it to make the largest outward show,—not simply by adding it in any way to the rank increase of leaf and branch, than which nothing is more incompatible with great productiveness. Fertilizers of any sort, well assimilated, are always to the plant invaluable; ill asimilated, they but prove a curse, and the very means, it may be, of condemnation and rejection. The skilful culture of the vine, indeed, often implies, apparently, less of tenderness than severity. Not all, to be sure, need the same rigorous pruning; some can bear both leaves and grapes abundantly; the greater part cannot; and to all the pruning treatment is indispensable, as well as to favor the beginnings as to ensure the continuance and improvement of a fruitful state

As with the material, so it is with the spiritual Vine and His members. In Christ, emphatically, the Christian lives, moves and enjoys every portion of his being; from Him, as the primal source, deriving all that he has and is; to Him as the great inspirer of worthy deeds, giving the glory of any good he does, of any fruit he bears. Yet this momentarily dependant creature is so far from being inactive, that his personal care and diligence are essential to his own prosperous and fruitful state. The strength of his faith, hope and joy, are measured by the labor of his love; with fear and trembling, yet without ceasing, he works out his own salvation.

Nor is it true only that he can be; it is true equally that the Christian must be his own faithful helper. Given all the elements of religious life and prosperity, it rests with him to choose, take and improve them. The gifts of God are free alike to his acceptance and rejection. No member of the true Vine is ever blessed or unblest against his will. But just here is heeded and is found the grand connection link between the heavenly plant and His earthly branches. The mystic union of Christ with His members begets in them more and more the likeness of His Father. And in exact proportion as the Divine likeness nears perfection, more and more deeply do the members feel their needs, more and more carefully seek and improve the blesings which the Master of the vineyard gives while he works in them, both to will and to do of His own good pleasure. The essentials of true life, healthy growth and full fruition are thus all secured. Any false prosperity, any growth superfluous, any morbid luxuriance of leaf and branch are under the watchful eye and healing hand of husbandman; sometimes for a season, if need be, veiling the light of His countenance and withholding the fullness of His favor; oft-times in judgment cutting the rank and barren branch away, while in love he prunes even the smallest fruitful branch, that it may yield still more abundantly. Thus every abiding branch necessarily, yet freely too, bears much and increasing fruit of holiness and good works, even unto death.—New York Observer.

THE JEW AND HIS DAUGHTER.

As I was going through a western part of Virginia, (says an American writer) an old clergyman gave me a short account of a Jew, which greatly delighted me. He was preaching to his people, when he saw a man enter, having every mark of a Jew on his face. He was well dressed, and his look seemed to reveal that he had been in great sorrow. He took his seat, and listened in a serious and devout manner, while a tear was often seen to wet his cheek. After the service, the clergyman went up to him and said: "Sir, am I not speaking to one of the sons of Abraham?" "You are." "But how is it that I meet a Jew in a Christian church?" In reply to these questions, he gave the following account:

He had been well educated, had come from London, and with his books, his riches, and a lovely daughter of seventeen, had found a charming retreat on a fruitful bank of the Ohio. He had buried his wife before he left England, and he knew no pleasure but the company of his dear child. She was indeed, worthy of a parent's love. Her mind was well informed, her disposition amiable; she could read and speak with ease various languages; and her manners pleased all who saw her. No wonder then, that a doting father, whose head had now become sprinkled with gray, should place his whole affections on this lovely child. Being a strict Jew, he brought her up in the strictest principles of his religion.

It was not long ago, that his daughter was taken ill. The rose faded from her cheek, her eye lost its fire, her strength decayed; and it soon became too certain that death was creeping over her frame. The father hung over her bed with a heart ready to burst with anguish. He often tried to talk with her, but could seldom speak, except by tears. He spared no expense or trouble to get her medical help, but no human skill could save her life. The father was walking in a wood near his house when he was sent for by his dying daughter. With a heavy heart he entered the door of her room. He was now to take a last farewell of his child, and his religion gave him but little hope of ever seeing her hereafter. The child grasped the hand of her parent with a death-cold hand.

"My father do you love me?"

"My child, you know that I love you; that your are more dear to me than all the whole world besides."

"But, father do you love me?

"Why, my child, will you give me pain? Have I never given you any proof of my love?"

"But, dearest father, do you love me?"

The father could not answer.

The child added, "I know, my dear father you have ever loved me; you have been the kindest of parents and I tenderly love you; will you grant me one request? Oh! father, it is the dying request of your daughter will you grant it.

"My dearest child! ask what you will, though it take every farthing of my property, whatever it may be it shall be granted; I will grant it."

"Dear father," replied the girl, "I beg you never again speak against Jesus of Nazareth."

The father was dumb with surprise.

"I know but little," added the dying girl, "about this Jesus; for I was never taught; but I know that he is a Saviour, for He has made Himself known to me while I was ill, even for the salvation of my soul. I believe he will save me, though I never before loved Him. I feel that I am going to be with Him, that I shall ever be with Him. And now, my dear father, do not deny me; I beg that you will never speak against this Jesus of Nazareth' I entreat you to obtain a Testament that tells of Him, and I pray that you may know Him; and that you may bestow upon Him the love of that formerly mine."

The labor of speaking here overcame her feble, body. She stopped, and the fathers heart was too full even for tears. He left the room in great horror of mind; and ere he could recover his spirit, the soul of his dear daughter had taken its flight, as I trust, to that dear Saviour whom she loved and honored.

The first thing the parent did after he had buried his child, was to procure a New Testament. This he read; and, taught by the Spirit from above, is now numbered among the meek and happy followers of Christ.—Church of England Magazine.

—Bishop Miles, of Kentucky, the first ordained colored bishop of the colored Methodist Episcopal Church South in his circular letter, uses this language in reference to questions involved in the Civil Rights bill: "We believe that there should be no antagonism of races; we are in the same ship, and half cannot be scuttled without sinking the whole vessel. We believe, therefore, that our people should be educated. We must have our own schools, and conducted by men and women of our own race We have never yet, as a people, or as individuals, sought to have our schools or churches mixed up of different races. Our Church is a colored Church. By special law our membership is confined to one race."

THE BRETHREN'S SCHOOL.

While we have, at different times, avowed our sentiments in regard to the move of obtaining among us better facilities for the educating of our youth, we have also kept in view our true relation to the Church, and endeavored to manifest that degree of fairness that true christian courtesy justly demands, hence we have not exercised that spirit of radicalism that would debar those, holding different views from us, an expression when done in the spirit of love and reason.

That there may be dangerous outgrowths from education we freely admit, but what can we find in the world that cannot and is not abused? Everything that we use and have about us can be abused and thus be made the cause of sin. But a knowledge of this fact is no reason, whatever, that we should cease using those things which God has given us for our good and convenience. Money, for instance, when improperly used, is a most dangerous foe to grace and has paved the way to destruction for its millions. This is an undeniable fact and we all know it—some by sad experience,—yet how tenaciously we cling to those pursuits in life that afford its accumulation! Of this danger our Savior has plainly and pointedly warned us. "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." Are not these fearful announcements? They certainly are, and should cause some of us to fear and tremble, yet there seems to be no special alarm, very little said about it and still less written. Suppose for a moment, brethren, that we should find in Matthew, Mark, Luke or John, something like this: "Verily I say unto you, that educated men shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I say unto you, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for an educated man to enter into the kingdom of God." Where would be the advocates of education in view of such declarations? They might be just where they are, the Berlin enterprise might go on, be a success and flourish and its friends still be in less peril, spiritually, than hundreds of our rich brethren who have good standings in the Church and are revelling at ease on the fatness of the land while many of God's poor and poor ministers are denied the necessaries of life.

We should view these things in the fear of God and the light of reason. We admit that the present school movement is an important one and one too, that may be attended with danger if not entered into with pure motives and a great degree of caution, but it occurs to us that there are many unnecessary fears apprehended about this special subject, while other things equally dangerous and even more fatal in their results are allowed to pass without being noticed.

Last week, under the head, "A High School Among the Brethren," we admitted a lengthy paper from our esteemed brother I. J. Rosenberger, and while we admire his manner of treating the subject and admit the force of some of his arguments we hope he will not feel injustice done him when we take the liberty of reviewing some of his points. His first argument against High School is that the Scriptures nowhere authorize such measures.

It is very true that the Scriptures are silent on the subject of education and nowhere teach that High Schools should be built, neither do they say a word about many other things that we, by common consent, have adopted as being good and convenient both in a temporal and spiritual sense. We are nowhere authorized to build houses and barns for our own protection and that of our stock and grain, nowhere authorized to plant orchards and vineyards and plow and sow our fields for our sustenance and that of our families, nowhere authorized to build Church houses in which to worship God, yet all these things, and many more, we do because reason and the Holy Ghost has taught us that they are good as means to carry out that which is taught and authorized.

We are taught, first, to provide for our own and those of our household. Second, to worship God. Third, improve our talents. To accomplish these desirable ends, the Scriptures do not specify the means, yet means must be employed. For the first there must be buildings, plowing, sowing, and planting. For the second we think it good to have houses built, and for the third, we must be educated. Our brother admits and is in favor of a good common education and as the Scriptures are as silent on this much education as they are on a little more, or buildings or names of places where it is to be obtained he destroys his first argument by his own admission. If those churches that are favorable to education have went astray, have become corrupted, why assert education as the cause? Education itself is simply power. It is by the use or abuse of it that the possessor and the world is effected for good or evil. The abuse of it may be a part of the cause of the sad state or condition of some of the churches, but while we admit this, is it not equally evident that money, large salaries, has been still a greater influence for evil in the same direction?

Our brother's second argument or position seems a little strange. He admits that patronizing sectarian and worldly institutions of learning has a tendency to dangerous influences, but thinks there are other gaps or influences equally dangerous, and then follows with this strange declaration:

"We would have the reader to know that we do not at all oppose a good common education, such that would qualify us for any business in life, suitable for a Christian, but are favorable to it; our parents before us were; took an early interest in the education of their children, patronizing Oberlin, Berea and several minor institutions in our native State. And we are happy to say that our parents were never grieved with the ill fate admitted at the head of this argument; but on the other hand had the joy of witnessing two out of four of their sons coming to the church while at home during vacation of their attendance at school."

If our fathers in the Church who patronized Oberlin and Berea, schools of acknowledged reputation and influence throughout the States, were not disappointed in their expectations, but had the happy privilege of witnessing their sons come to the Church during their vacation, what have we to fear, as a result from patronizing a Brrethren's School, a school controlled and taught by brethren and surrounded by their influences, a place where is taught, in connection with the arts and sciences, the humble principles of the church, both by theory and practice, by precept and example, a place where we can put our children under the direct influence of brethren and sisters whom we are persuaded have a special care for their moral and religious training? Can it be possible you, dear brother, would prefer to send your children to the popular institutions of the world in preferance to one like the above described, or that you would fear more dangerous consequences resulting therefrom? The idea to us seems preposterous, yea worse, madness and greatly betrays that confiding trust and confidence that we profess to have in each other as fellow heirs of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Brethren, this kind of an argument will not do. We must either admit and assert that education is entirely of the devil and that it belongs only to the world, or else that it is of God --good, and therefore obtainable in the "narrow way," among the people of God. It would be rational, admissable and safe for the worldlings, while passing down the broad way, to stop and come over into the kingdom of Christ in order to obtain good, but who would dare argue that it would be right or reasonable to go out of the good into the evil in order to obtain good? Such would certainly be a new, strange and dangerous theory to advocate, but this is just what our brethren are doing who are favorable to a good education and yet contend that it should be obtained from worldy institutions.

We acknowledge that it is our highest duty to properly instruct our children at home and inculcate into their minds the great principles of right, morality and christianity, but because we have done this, will it justify us in sending them out in the wilderness to be tempted of the devil, or because their are forty-nine other gaps through which our children may be led astray, shall we also leave open the fiftieth one? But our brother thinks it right to patronize worldly institutions of learning and at the same time oppose them in the Church and give the following reasons for it:

"We patronize the official capacity, magistrates and justices, but we oppose them in the church; we patronize lawyers, but we oppose them in the church; we patronize bankers, railroad incorporations, &c., but we oppose them in the church; thus there are many enterprises to which we give patronage by common consent, but we oppose their being in the church, in like manner do we favor a liberal patronage of the high schools of the country, but we are much opposed to erecting them in the church."

We will examine the force of this argument. When we go to magistrates is it with the intention of obtaining a knowledge of the duties of a magistrate that we may go home and be a magistrate too? When we go to a lawyer is it to learn to be a lawyer by studying the law, and have we similar purposes in view when we patronize railroad and banking incorporations? If this is what our brother means, than are his comparisons appropriate and his conclusions legitimate. If not, they are not admissable as having a proper bearing on the question. When we patronize an institution of learning we do it with the intention of obtaining an education which we expect to practice in our every day life and also teach it to others. This intention is relatively, as different from the intentions when patronizing magistrates, lawyers &c., as light is to darkness. Again our brother says:

"There is a science of medicine which teaches that by taking a drug into the system in very small quantities, we get the desired effect without the drug effect. The church heretofore has been getting her necessary education here and there, as it were in small quantities under the care of the respective parents, thus not influencing the church by their organization; but when we get an institution of learning in the brotherhood, I then shall fear, shall greatly fear the poisonous drug effect, pride, exaltation."

By taking drugs without feeling the drug effects, we understand that the effects of a small dose is counteracted by the nature of the disease or rather, is consumed by the disease, but when taken in over doses it is not counteracted by the disease and the effects are left on the system. Let us make the application. The church is sick and therefore needs a small dose of education In order to avoid the drug effects (pride) every member must receive a small but equal share. No, says my brother, that is not what I mean, I mean that the church needs a small dose of educated brethren, it is slightly diseased with pride and we need a small dose of pride to cure or counteract it. No, this will not do either. Well, the fact is, we cannot make a proper application of the drug system. According to our brothers theory, to give a small number of our brethren a full dose of education would be to kill them outright. If the drug effects of education is pride, then it is a decided evil and the church should have nothing to do with it. But that such is not the case must be evident to every observing mind. We need but to look around us to see that among the most ignorant and unlearned are found those who are most distressingly proud. It is however, a sad fact that some of our educated brethren do not manifest that light to the church and the world that they should and on this account they stand as a hindrance to the cause of education. We hope this stumbling block will be seen and removed.

We continue to be of the opinion that if it is safe for our children to obtain an education in worldly institutions it would be still more safe to have them educated in a school of our own. It may be safe, for children that have been brought up properly and have fixed principles established, to be sent out to these worldly institutions, but unfortunately our children are not all thus cared for. The minds of such are open to the surrounding influences, and it now remains for the Brethren to decide what influence it shall be. We would say, let it be that of the Brethren and we believe this to be the sentiment of every brother and sister who cares for the welfare and salvation of their children. But when we plead in favor of a school under the influence of the church we mean it to be a Brethren's school in ever sense of the word. To accomplished this, the enterprize must have the aid and sympathies of brethren who are well established in the faith and are willing to stand by and advocate both by precept and example, all her principles. Our brother Roseberger thinks this cannot be done, but we hope better things and believe it can be done if the right kind of brethren take hold of it. It is not education that promotes pride but the circumstances by which the obtaining of it is surrounded. Pride, phrenologically considered, is a seperate and and distinct faculty of the mind and is really averse to the obtaining of knowledge. Were there not outside influences connected with our institutions of learning there would be less there to promote pride than there is on the farm, in the workshop or even in the churches. Therefore we feel to labor for an institution among us that will be free from these outside and ungodly influences.

When we commenced we did not think of pursuing this subject to so great a length, but as we advance, our interest in the subject grows and it is really difficult for us to stop, as there are still a great many things that we feel like saying. In conclusion we would say to those who differ with us on the subject of education, bear with us, especially do we ask this of our dear brother whose views we have been criticising. We believe what he done was prompted by pure motives and we kindly ask him to excercise thesame charity towards us. If we have, in any way, misrepresented his views, our columns are open for a correction of the same.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

ABOUT FOOTMEN.

Has the young reader of this ever read the story of Marco Polo, the Venetian, who six hundred years ago, traveled through Tartary and China, and coming back nineteen years later, wrote a book containing accounts of such wonderful sights and strange adventures, that his bosom friends would not believe him, and begged him, even when on his death-bed, to retract the falsehoods he had published? But Marco stuck to them declaring that every word he had written was true. After many years, other travelers had shown that Marco had really not told half the marvelous things he had seen in the countries he had visited. Among many other wonderful things which he describes in a most fascinating way, he tells of the first pony express and mail service that probably ever existed in the world.

Wherever he traveled in Tartary, Marco Polo says he saw the "couriers of the kahn," as the emperor's swift messengers, who carried letters from city to city, were called. Day and night they flitted by him, on horseback and on foot, over the great highways; "never stopping," he writes, "for an instant, save at the post-stations," where fresh horses or runners were always on hand.

There were both mounted and foot couriers among the Tartars. The stations for horsemen were twenty-five miles apart. Each courier had to ride this distance in two hours on a single horse. At the station, however, both horse and rider had a good long rest, for a fresh horse and fresh courier were ready to take his message and speed onward with it to the next station, where in turn the jaded horse and rider would find rest, while the message would speed onward in the hands of another courier on a fresh, fleet steed. The foot couries had stations three miles apart. When a message was to be carried, it would be given to a foot messenger, who would instantly start, running with might and main to the next station, where he would deliver the message to the courier waiting. The trained courier could go this distance in a very short time, without much injory to themselves, and indeed, without much fatigue.

Foot couries of the same kind were in use in England about one hundred and fifty years ago, though not employed by the monarchs of that country, but by private gentleman and nobleman. It was their duty to run by the side or in the rear of the coaches, when their masters were traveling or riding for pleasure. These attendants were called "footmen," as the attendants on carriages now-a-day are called; but the first footmen did ride on the box with the driver, or on the seat behind, as now. And the footmen in past days accompanied the coaches, not to open the door for their masters and mistresses, as in the present time; but for a purpose you will never guess, I am sure. They ran after the carriage to help it out of the mud and mire! In the "good old times,"—which for all that you may hear said in praise of them, had not half the pleasures and convenience, nor, indeed half, the virtue and goodness of the present time,—the public roads in England were so poor that it was almost impossible to travel over them; every few miles the footmen had to help the coach out of the mire. When "gay Prince Charles from over the water," who was afterwards King Charles II., went to visit another prince, his coach-and-six was six hours in going nine miles! After the roads were improved, the footmen died out, or rather were replaced by what were called "guards." These were strong, stout men, who rode on the stage-coach or followed it on horseback, partly to protect it from robbery, but mainly to help it out of the mud. When the stage-coaches gave away to the railway cars, the guards became porters and brakemen.—From "The Pony Express," in St. Nicholas for September.

The Blind Man and the Flower-girl.

A short time since as a gentleman was walking through one of the squares of London, he saw an old man, quite blind who was led about by a dog. He was clean in his dress, though the smock-frock he wore was much warn. His withered cheeks still had that bloom upon there which we often see in those who have lived in the country.

As the gentleman was looking on him with compassion, there was another one who pitied him. A poor flower-girl came along, crying "Violets, sweet wood violets." The blind man turned his head suddenly to the place from whence the sound came, and some tears fell on his face. No doubt the cry of "violets" had brought to mind the time when he was a country boy, and had gathered such sweet flowers as he passed through the woods or along the shady country lane; and he wept. The girl saw the old man, and, taking a bunch of violets from her basket, held it to his nose that he might smell it. "Here, old fellow" said she, "take a smell to mind you of past days. I was a country lass myself once." It was a simple but kindly act. There was no cost or trouble in giving a moment's—perhaps a whole day's—pleasure to an old blind beggar. In that act there was a lesson to be learned alike by rich and poor.

A costly gift offered in a cold or proud manner loses more than half its value; but the smallest, if given in a loving spirit and gentle manner, may be better than a bag of gold. A cup of water given in faith and love to a disciple in the name of our Lord, will not be forgotten by Him.

How Envelopes are Made.

One of the most interesting examples of the manner in which mechanism is now made to do the work of human fingers, is that by which envelopes are now produced by means of machinery recently introduced in England. A pile of envelope-blanks is placed on a plate on the left-hand side of the machine,—this being done either when at rest or in motion. A hollow brass tube, with an end of peculiar shape, descends upon the envelope-blanks at the side nearest the folding-box. To the other end of the tube is attached an India-rubber pipe communicating with an air-pump, which, coming into action at this instant, causes the blank which is upon the top of the pile to attach itself to the brass tube, which, rising, carries the envelope-blank with it.

A pair of grippers then run forward, and, seizing the blank, carries it to its proper position over the folding-box,—after which it is stamped, and the gum applied to the proper places upon the side flaps,—this movement being singularly ingenious. At this point a plunger descends and carries the blank into the folding-box; upon the plunger rising, slides working in the thickness of the folding-box run in and inclose the flaps in their proper order. The bottom of the box now rises, and completes the operation by pressing the envelopes against the slides; the bottom of the box then falls and allows the envelopes to drop in an upright position into a trough running under the machine, when it is met by a simple contrivance which secures the envelope with its flaps in proper position in the trough; and, as each successive envelope is placed in front of it, it gradually works along the trough until removed by the attendant and handed.—Young Folks' Rural.

Formation of Character.

The daily habits of every boy and girl are materials with which they are building up their characters, and every repitition strengthens them for good or for evil. Justice, benevolence, honor, integrity and self-control are no ephemeral blossoms, that a day's sunshine can call into being, and a night's frost can wither and kill. They grow slowly and develop gradually, but once rooted firmly in the heart and trained by constant exercise, they will prove sturdy, healthy, long-lived plants that will bear rich and abundant fruit. It is not enough to teach; we must learn to train. It is not enough to tell the child what is right, we must accustom him to love its atmosphere. So with self-culture. If we would become noble and more virtuous, we must habituate ourselves to the constant exercises of pure thoughts, generous affections, noble and disinterested deeds.—Young Folks' Rural.

Boys, Read This.

A few years ago, the Christian Observer says (a New York paper,) a large drug firm in the city advertised for a boy. Next day the store was thronged with applicants, and among them came a queer-looking little fellow, accompanied by his aunt, in lieu of faithless parents, by whom he had been abandoned. Looking at this little waif, the merchant in the store promptly said:

"Can't take him; places all full. Besides, he is too small."

"I know he is small," said the woman, "but he is very willing and faithful."

There was a twinkle in the boy's eye, which made the merchant think again. A partner in the firm volunteered a remark that he did not see what they wanted of such a boy; he wasn't bigger than a "pint of cider." But, after consultation, the boy was set to work.

A few days later a call was made on the boys in the store for some one to stay all night. The prompt response of the little fellow contrasted well with the reluctance of the others In the middle of the night the merchant looked in to see if all was right in the store, and discovered his youthful protege busy scissoring labels.

"What are you doing there? I did not tell you to work all night."

"I know that you did not tell me to, but I thought I might as well be doing something."

In the morning the cashier got orders to "double that boy's wages, for he is willing."

Only a few weeks elapsed before a show of wild beasts passed through the streets, and very naturally, all hands in the store rushed to witness the spectacle. A thief saw his opportunity, and rushed in the rear to sieze something, but in a twinkling, found himself seized by the diminutive clerk afore and, and after a struggle, he was captured. Not only was a robbery prevented but valuable articles which had been taken from other stores, were recovered.

When questioned by the merchant why he stayed behind to watch when all the other had quit work, he replied:

"You told me never to leave the store when o hers were absent, and I thought I'd stay."

Orders were given once more to "double that boy's salary; he is willing and faithful."

In 1860, that boy was receiving a salary of $2,500, and is now a partner in the establishment.—N. Y. Advocate.

Correspondence.

Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Editors:—

I have been looking through the columns of your paper and am well pleased with the most of it. I think it is a good paper. I just read a piece written by J. B. Lair, No. 28, page 222, and as I differ somewhat on the subject I will give my views and you can do as you wish to publish them or not, but I wish it to be understood that I do it out of a pure motive and in love.

The subject is "Feet Washing," and the point that I wish to get at is this: Bro. Lair's is, that ever brother and sister should have their feet washed before going to the communion table. That far I agree with him, but says he, on the other hand it is not so particularly necessary for every one to wash. The brother said the law is a very precise law, yet it was not perfect, and that it would not have been satisfactory to the Lord had they neglected part of that law, and it was not only plainly to be observed, but to the letter, and nothing short would have justified them. But says he, now we have a perfect law whose giver is perfect as its author. Consequently it is doubtless necessary that we should obey it in full. I can say Amen to that.

Now I hope Bro. Lair and myself will agree on the passage of scripture which reads thus: "If I then your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought also wash one another's feet; for I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you." John 13:14-15. I cannot see how the brother can infer from this passage that it is not necessary for every one to wash, for certainly the Savior just meant what he said. He quoted that the law was so precise, that it had to be observed to the letter, and my candid opinion is if we want to observe Christ's law to the letter, we should all engage in washing at every communion that we attend. The command is to wash, and not to be washed. Of course to be washed must be observed that ye be clean every whit, and equally also to wash at the same time, is my opinion from the holy Scriptures, because the Savior in that night when He communed with his disciples also washed their feet, and told them that He gave them an example that they should do as he had done to them. Now I think it just as important for us to wash every time we meet to perform the sacred institutions of the Lord, as to be washed.

Brethren let us examine well that we observe to the letter. As the brother has remarked in his article, it has been the general order of the church that some wash, perhaps half, or two thirds do not wash at a communion, expecting to get an opportunity at the next communion. Well another communion draws on, and being crowded with members, many again have not the opportunity to wash, and no doubt some that are willing to do all the Master told us to do have passed into eternity without complying with that command. If this be so I am fearful that we, the church, are not enough concerned in behalf of all the members in this particular. We should obey while it is called to-day, and not wait for another communion meeting. The brother stated in his article that we could not do it unless each one would only wash one. I would ask the question, if each one would have to wash one's feet can we not do it when we come together expressly for the purpose to practice the examples of our Savior? We should not think it too much to do when the Savior told each and every one to do it. I can say for myself, I am satisfied as concerns feet-washing. I have hinted in the above lines that the order has been to wash three or four and so on. We, the Brethren here in Virginia, now have the privilege—I do not say an order, but a privilege—to wash only one, or more if we chose. I can say that I am satisfied. Then I think it is my duty as well as privilege to wash one of my brethren's feet at each and every time that we practice the sacred institution. If we would embrace this privilege, then all our members could engage in the work. We should not be afraid of doing too much of what the Savior commanded us. It might be the cause of some never fulfilling the command.

Now, from these few remarks I wish it to be understood that I credit the command or institution as all other institutions in the name of the Lord. We all partake of the Supper, all partake of the Bread and Wine, all salute with the Holy kiss, all have their feet washed, and I think it would be a nice order if all would wash feet at the same communion, and that we all be of this mind is my heart's desire and prayer.

Your unworthy brother, H. E. H.
Good's Mills.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

In my July letter, near the close is a typopraphical error. Instead of "in quantity" equal to any in the United States, it should be in quality. Doubtless many would have noticed from the reading that it was a mistake, but I want to call attention to the error as there are a few that make use of such errors to prejudice the minds of some against my statements relative to this country. Some that came here seemingly with a hope of making a speculation in a short time, and having failed, blame the country and all that have spoken in such a way, so as to influence them to come here. To one and all such we say, Colorado is just as well off without them, and as thousands of brethren can testify that I have held out no exaggerated inducements for them to come here. In no case have I knowingly misrepresented the country. When they ask me if there is a good chance for work and good wages, I say no, not in this locality. While men have come here, some with families, without much means and done well, I would not encourage such to come. That is a matter they must decide for themselves.

Some have left here, abandoned their claims but hardly were they gone until others came in and took them gladly. Some brethren have been in lovely and selected claims, others write they will be here soon. Yesterday the grass-hoppers in great numbers first made their appearance in this locality, whether they intend staying for a while we have not learned, one thing I am sure they have no pressing invitation to prolong their stay. Whether they will do any serious damage I can't say. Yesterday eve we had quite a wind storm, heavy rain, heavy thunder and vivid lightning, the plain was set on fire by the lightning near hear and the rolling and leaping flames spread rapidly and went at a terrible rate before the storm, however the rain quenched the fire. But to-day I notice at a distance a heavy smoke which is evidence at another point the fire is still burning. We are all well thank the Lord. May the grace of God be with you and qualify you for the responsible position you occupy, and may you receive much encouragement.

Truly yours in haste.
J. S. FLORY.

Dear Pilgrim:—

How can I raise my pen to communicate to you my greatest of afflictions, my all in this life seems gone. Fannie, my dear wife and bosom companion has been taken from my side and all that is now left to comfort me is to mourn for my best earthly friend. Would to God I could have died instead of her, though she was so much better than myself, and a sheaf fully ripe for the Master's use. When I look around me this pleasant morning and see the trees in our yard ladened with fruit, cherries and peaches, and then think what a fine little companion she was to always prepare and arrange her fruits, nothing ever being to much trouble for her, Oh what gloom and sadness it brings to my heart. It seems I cannot make myself believe it to be real.

She took her bed on Wednesday morning, May, 6th, with a hard chil, and on Thursday was some better when I called in a physician. On Thursday night she was taken with a violent fever which got worse and worse until Saturday night, when erysipelas broke out in her face which soon spread all over it. On Sunday eve about dusk she seemed to breath very low for a little while when her sister Leah spoke to her, and she said she had dreamed that she was in Heaven and saw her little brother Vernon and sister Dora, and said, O, Leah, you don't know what a nice place Heaven is, and then commenced and sung distictly and plainly:

"I long to be with Jesus
To walk the Golden streets," &c.

When her father came in and asked her whether she was willing to die, she said she was perfectly willing to die, only she wished to stay with her dear husband and two dear children awhile yet. During Sunday night she experienced great suffering; could only see a little out of one eye. On Sunday morning the doctor called in council and still thought there might be something done, and she thought she felt a little better. On Monday eve a physician arrived that had been dispatched for, and they both went to work and by Tuesday morning thought she had improved considerable, when I had a talk with her and asked her to forgive me all that I might ever have done during our short engagement in married life, all that I might ever have done to cross her path or mar her feeling in any way. Yes dear, she said, you know I have forgiven you all that ever could have been said or passed between us, said I always had been a kind husband and loved and cherished her, tried to do all I could to make her comfortable and said she felt so happy and that she heard such nice singing I asked her where she heard it? She said in Heaven and if I had not called her on last Sunday evening she would have gone. She is gone now and I would not, for ten thousand worlds, call her back even if I could. She often said it was sweet to think of Heaven and much of her conversation was there. She said her father first loved Jesus and he taught her to love Him, and Jesus loved his people because they keep his commandments.

On the 14th, Ascension morning, when she was about to breathe her last she called us all by name, father, mother, Leah and Ada, the two only sisters she has, then her brothers and so on to her darling Georgie whom she wanted to press to her bosom to the last. Little did I think I would so soon have to part with my best earthly friend. Truly as father Wimer said, "there is the mirror, look into it now and learn therefrom." The doctor was here some four nights all night said he has witnessed many death bed scenes but never one as this. To see her suffering without a murmur and patient as a lamb, and then to hear her call, in her last moments, aloud to her parents, sister, brother and friend, was enough to break a heart of stone and certainly should be a loud call to us.

Dear Bro. I have written this out with my children on my arm. I thought it might be a little satisfaction to some of my friends, also to those of my wife, and if you can give it room in the PILGRIM it will be appreciated. I know it is badly written but under present circumstances could not well do better. I have two dear children left, the oldest, Georgie, will be 3 years old the 7th of Oct, and, babe, Clemey, will be 12 moths old the 2d of July. The stroke has fallen heavily upon me, and I ask an interest in the prayers of the church in my behalf as it is my prayer for strength so to act I may be able to bear up under this heavy burdon. My dear wife was a faithful member of the church for near 11 years, aged 22 years.

Yours in the of bonds Christian affection.

QUERY.

Dear Bro:—

Will you or some other brother, please give us an explanation on the 16th verse of the 3rd chapter of Luke? I wish to learn the meaning of the fire. NANCY CROUSE.

Oak Hill W. Va.

The Scriptures referred to reads as follows: "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

The Holy Spirit is an invisible power that God grants to believers when they enter into covenant relations with Him. Its first power is promised immediately after baptism, "and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This power did not accompany John's baptism, as the object of its revelations had not yet come. Its office was to lead the possessor into all truth and that truth was embodied in Christ. Hence when the "Mightier One" would come, his water baptism should be accompanied with a baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire. The fire here spoken of was a visable accompaniment of the Holy Spirit and was significant of purification. After the day of Pentecost, the visible sign of the presence of the Holy Spirit, was cloven tongues like fire. We do not understand this fire as literally burning away the impurities of the soul, but as literal fire separates the dross from the silver and gold, so this spirual fire separates the impurity of sin from the soul.

DIED.

ZEIGLER.—In the Cbiques congregation, Lancaster Co., Pa., June 23, 1874, elder Philip Zeigler, aged 69 years, 10 months and 27 days. Disease, consumption.

He lived a consistent member of the church about forty four years, was elected to the ministry twenty-nine years ago and labored zealously in his vocation until about a year ago, when in consequence of the above named disease was partially confined to his room until his death, and bore his affliction with christian resignation.

He was a good citizen, a kind neighbor, and a beloved father in Israel. e leaves a sorrowing w fe, three daughters, (also members of the fraternity) and one son to mourn their loss. We fondly hope that Jesus whom he served and in whom he believed and trusted will crown him with a crown of glory. Funeral discourse by brethren S. R. Zug and Jacob Rider.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Baptists are making an effort to raise $500,000 to advance their school interests.

—Don't forget to send us the news. The time will soon be here when communion meetings will be held after which we hope reports will be sent in. Brethren, let us hear how you do.

—A mock show of the sale of indulgances is the latest sensation of Germany. However wicked and Goddefiant this unholy practice may have been it is certainly ill becoming for a Church professing the humble and non-resenting principles of Christ to make a holy burlesque of it. We doubt very much whether such a sham Christianity is any better than the one they are trying to burlesque.

—The first copy of The Daily Juniata Valley Camp Journal is on our table. It is published at the office of the Huntingdon Journal and will be issued daily during the continuance of the National Camp Meeting now commenced at or near Newton Hamilton. The Daily will give the general proceedings of meeting and will be of great interest to those interested in the meeting. To be had at the Journal office or at the Camp.

—Some years ago there was a great sensation created relative to a Jewish child being abducted by Romish agents. Here is the result of it.

The boy Mortara, a Jewish child who was surreptitiously baptized by the papists, and then withheld from his parents by the authorities of Rome on the ground of his being baptised a Christian, has appeared again, no longer a boy, but a Romish priest. He is now Father Pius Mortara, an Augustine monk in the Monastery of Notre Dame de Beauchene, France, and on the 16th ult. he preached a sermon at Niort, in the Depart of the two Sevres, on the occasion of the festival of Notre Dame du Mont Carmel.

—A terrible accident occurred at Toronto on Sunday evening. While the Rev. Mr. Day was preaching in Holy Trinity Church his eldest daughter, Mary, about twenty years of age, and a young son ten years of age, were at home; the young boy picked up a gun which had been carelessly left loaded in a bedroom, and pointing it at his sister, said, "Do you want me to shoot you?" at the same time pulling the trigger. He literally blew the side of the young lady's head off.

—What is called a war of races seems to be breaking out at various places in the south, hostilities having commenced, and several lives having been lost in the encounters between the whites and the blacks, but it is more of a war between designing politicians who are making use of the opportunity to stir up strife and accomplish their own selfish ends. There will always be found men wicked enough to light a flame by which they may secure plunder regardless of the consequences to the property and lives of others, and so there will always be found moral incendiaries who are much worse.

—One of our exchanges says H. W. Beecher for preaching, lecturing, &c., gets $65,000 a year and yet he is not happy. Dollars and cents does not bear that kind of fruit but just now they may be of great service to Mr. Beecher to bribe a number of prominent editors who will tell the truth unless liberally paid to do otherwise. Money and popularity is gradually covering up the stench of sexual criminality and doubtless we will soon hear the cry; great is Diana (Beecher) god of the Plymouthians. There is no other go in the United States that can supply their wants and answer their prayers.

GOING TO LAW WITH BROTHER.—On Sabbath last was the reopening of the Reformed church in this place, and we had the pleasure of listening to an able and appropriate sermon by Rev. Dr. Bomberger, President of Ursinus College. After the sermon it was stated that there was about $300. of a debt occasioned by repairing the house and an effort was made to raise it by subscription. After this was done liberty was given one of the trustees to make some remarks which he did in a businesslike way. He said he "meant business" and we suppose the manner of his expression impressed every one present with that fact. It appears that the repairs had been in progress a year ago and some of the brethren subscribed who had not yet paid their subscription. This he said must now be paid, we have your names with the amount on the subscription book, and if it is not paid soon we will try other means which you all understand. Of course we understood that he would collect it by means of the law. How is this? Brother go to law with bruther? We think the apostle Paul would have occasion to say to such as he did to the Corinthian brethren, "I speak to your shame." "There is utterly a fault among you, because you go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather suffer wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded? Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brother." This is what the apostle says, in reference to this matter. It is wrong for brethren not pay their debts when they are able, and indeed such are not fit to be in the church at all, but to force them to duty by means of the civil law is nowhere sanctioned in the Scriptures. Better "take wrong" "and suffer yourselves to be defraued" than to go into such measures. For a man to get up in the Lord's house on the Lord's day and make such a threat does not seem to manifest much of the spirit of Christ.

—It was estimated that about 10,000 people attended the campmeeting at Embury Park, near Dayton, Ohio, last Sunday. The services lasted twelve hours, and were conducted in English and German.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

EDUCATION IN EUROPE.

In Saxony education is compulsory; all inhabitants of the kingdom can read and write, and every child attends school.

In Switzerland all can read and write, and have got a good primary education. Education is obligatory, and greater efforts, in proportion to its means, are made to impart primary instruction than in any other part of European nation.

In all the smaller States of North Germany education is compulsory, and all the children attend school.

In Denmark the same is true. All the Danes, with a few exceptions, can read and write and keep accounts. The children attend school until the age of fourteen.

In Prussia almost all the children attend school regularly, except in some of the eastern districts. An officer who had charge of the military education of the Landwehr, in twelve years only met three young soldiers who could neither read nor write. An inquiry having been instituted, it was found that those three were the children of sailors, who had been born on the river, and had never settled in any place. Instruction is obligatory.

In Sweden the proportion of inhabitants who can neither read nor write is one in a thousand. Instruction is obligtory.

In Baden every child receives instruction; and in Wurtemburg there is not a peasant girl of the lowest class or servant in an ion, who cannot read, write and account correctly; every child goes to school, instruction being obligatory.

In Holland public assistance is taken away from every indigent family that neglects to send its child to school. It is estimated that the number of illiterate is three per cent.

In Norway almost all the Norwegians can read, write and account passably well. Instruction obligatory.

In Bavaria, among 100 conscripts, but seven whose education was incomplete, or entirely wanting, were found. Instruction also obligatory.

France, with its twenty-three illiterate conscripts in 100, comes next, and is followed by Belgium, Italy, Austria, Greece, Spain Portugal, Moldo Wallachia, Russia and Turkey, in the order named.—Ex.

—At the last monthly meeting of the Baptist ministers of Chicago and vicinity, the following minutes, introduced by Dr. Cheney, was discussed and adopted:

1. As ministers, we owe it to our profession to guard each other's reputation, and help to extend each other's influence, and in general to aid each other in our work to extend our power.

2. As ministers, we owe it to our profession to be careful not to introduce unworthy or incompetent men into it. As our profession is to a great extent in our own keeping, we must guard it against those who will dishonor and degrade it.

3. As ministers, we owe it to our profession to withhold the hand of ministerial fellowship from those who have been pronounced unworthy upon trial by peers, and no longer recognize them as ministers.

—At present there is a fearful persecution of the Christians in China. Thousands are being literally butchered. The following account of the mode of torture and death we clip from the New York Observer.

In several localities they take an entire family—father, mother and children—bind them together with bamboos, and then fling the bundle of living humanity into the waves. First, however, they take care to cut off the man's head. The multitude of dead bodies thus fastened together in groups of from eight to ten block up the principle river, but to the great surprise of everybody do not send forth any bad smell. There are then five parishes, containing 10,000 Christians, which have to be blotted out of the mission—namely Lang-thank-Huyen, Nam-Doung, Hoy-Yen and Doreg-Thank. Many of the victims died in the midst of the flames. A village of more than 400 Christians was attacked by the literates, and soon became a prey to the flames. Among these 400 Christians there were 120, more or less, who succeeded in saving themselves by taking refuge in a large village near by. The remainder, about 300, were nearly all massacred.

—The movement among the "Old Catholics," of Switzerland is working great reformation in some of the Cantons. Public services will no longer be performed in Latin, but in the spoken tongue of the people who assemble for worship. Parish priest are to be elected by their congregations, instead of being appointed over them; and are to be free to marry when and whom they please. Both the bread and wine are to be administered to each communicant, and the Bible is "solemnly and publicly adopted as the standard of the truths to be taught."

—At a recent convention of railroad men it was decided that travel has not been so light before in many years, and all the railroad superintendents agreed that two trains are being run now where only one is necessary. Taking this view, the majority of the railroad men favor no change in the time-table till fall.

POETRY.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOME.

BY J. H. ECK.

There is a place where angels dwell,
A pure and happy land,
Rejoicing round the throne of God,
Is ever the celestial band.

Ten thousands of the saints are there,
Joined with the angel band,
Ever singing, Glory to God,
And Halelujah to the Lamb.

There is the Christian's dwelling place,
The Christian's real abode,
There they will love in perfect peace,
Forever happy with their Lord.

This is the place where Christian's meet,
When washed in Jesus blood,
They safely pass through Jordans stream
And enter the palace of God.

And friends will find their loved ones there
To separate no more:
Their elder brother to adore,
The glorious presence to share.

This is the place, where pilgrims rest,
From all their toils and cares.
There tears are wiped, no foes are there
In the bright regions of the blest.

This is the place, which Jesus said
I will prepare for you,
And we shall see Him as He is,
If we're ever faithful and true.

O, let us cast the world behind!
As men of God will do,
Take up the cross! endure the fight!
And the crown will be ours.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

Can we lawfully Observe Feetwashing, the Supper or Communion, Seperate or disconnected, one from the other?

Since the above question was presented to our minds by the editor's of the PILGRIM in a former number, I have exercised my mind somewhat upon the subject. The idea was new indeed to me, and being kindly admonished not to jump at conclusions, (I write from memory not having the paper before me,) we have come to the following conclusions after mature thought, viz: When observed by the Church they should be together as parts of one service, otherwise it would be a matter of doubt on our part if the Lord would approve of the observance at all. Especially do we think so in the matter of partaking of the Communion without having attended to the ordinance of Feetwashing. Our reasons for coming to such conclusions are:

1. It is evident, order is a divine law and when we look at the law, under the old dispensation where the service was of a literal nature, we see how strict an observance was required. In the law relative to a means of purification of those who had become defiled, as well as in many other instances, the different acts had to be observed according to the command, all in perfect order. In the case of the covenant to Moses, make a laver of brass "For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat," and that at the time "when they come near to the altar to minister." (Exodus 30.) If they wash not death was the penalty. So we see what a very important connection existed in the matter of washing and offering. In Exodus 40 chapter we see when they obeyed the command of washing, that is, Moses, Aaron and his sons, and ministered at the altar or holy place "The glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle." Wether it was convenient or necessary to wash the hands and feet for a literal cleansing alone, had nothing to do in the matter, wash they must "that they die not." Hence we conclude no deviation in the services belonging to the house of God is allowable especially where the Lord by precept and example has given the order.

2. We have set forth in the new order of divine service but one system of worship which is perfect in all its component parts, and system was given unto us by the Lord Jesus Christ himself, not only in word, but also in practice to a considerable extent. While we are taught in the gospel, salvation is by grace, we are also plainly taught the doing of God's will is indispensably necessary in order that we come to that salvation that is by grace. Christ, the embodiment of God's will, became the "Author of salvation to all them that obey him." Baptism to be effectual must be in connection with true faith and genuine repentance. Baptism where there is no faith, as in infancy for instance, can profit nothing, though faith may come sometime afterward. In like manner, baptism and faith, where there is no genuine repentance, will not answer the means whereby we attain to salvation. Faith and repentance disconnected from gospel baptism by water will fall short of bringing the individual to where God has promised salvation from sin and the gift of the Holy Spirit. Therefore we conclude they must all be in close connection one with the other and in proper order, otherwise the form of worship would be void of the power of God, as the power comes through obedience. By a strict compliance with the gospel order through faith, repentance and obedience, we meet God on His terms where we receive the remission of our sins, divine life, and rightousness of Christ through the merits of His atoning blood. By this means we enter into the sheepfold or church by the door and there we find institutions belonging to the house of God for our observance through life, that we may continue to live spiritually and grow in grace. It is said except we eat His flesh and drink His blood, that is Christ, we have no life in us, and the "bread" Christ says, is "my body" and the "wine" is His blood. That we may partake of them with benefit a preparatory work is necessary. And in doing that work, we must obey the commands of God that come in as a prior service, signifying cleansing or purifying of the soul, to the end that we might partake thereof in a worthy manner, which we claim is the design of Feetwashing, at least in part. But first we remark (by way of making the matter more plain) that in the ordinance of baptism, as the Scriptures abundantly testify, there must be a relative connection with all the means of grace set forth as belonging to that matter. Water being a natural element used in cleansing and purifying there is a close connection with it, in the literal observance of baptism, and the cleansing efficacy of Christ's blood. The material water is used in washing the material man, signifying, the immaterial "inner man," shall be washed, cleansed and purified in a spiritual manner by the blood of Christ, and the same immaterial principle of man will be baptized with the immaterial effusion of the Holy Spirit of God. It would be rediculous to say water will wash away sins, yet it would be assuming a prerogative inconsistent to the divine economy of grace to say a sinner can come to Christ and receive the remission of his sins through Christ's blood without first passing through the baptismal waters of regeneration. Feetwashing as clearly shown in the example of Christ precedes the Lord's Supper and the Communion. Christ says to Peter "He that is washed need not save to wash his feet," as much as to say it is necessary to wash the feet, but nothing more, and for a reason you shall "know hereafter." It is a plain fact that Feetwashing was instituted with a spiritual signification attached to the ordinance, for Christ says to Peter ye are clean but not all, alluding to Judas who was doubtless just as clean as any outwardly, but within he was unclean, spiritually, at heart a devil! As in the case of Aaron and his sons, the feet "ought" and "should" be washed before we enter into the Holy of Holies, before we come near the altar or holy place, or in other words, before we approach the Lords Table to partake of the "body and blood" of the Lord Jesus Christ. Having sinned after our entrance into the church, it is needful we "examine ourselves," and go to Christ with the burden of our sins and in faith ask him to cleans our souls through the efficacy of his blood. Having the need of an after cleansing from sin that we may not "eat damnation" to ourselves, we have an ordinance of after washing "with water" signifying the after cleansing we hope for through blood of Christ. As baptism is not for the putting away of the "filth of the flesh, but for the answer of a good conscience," so in the example of Christ and design of the ordinance of feetwashing, it was not for the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but for the answer of a good conscience. "If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them," and "now ye are clean through the word I have spoken to you." The answer of a good conscience, and the cleansing power of the merits of Christ comes through obedience to his word.

When we "from the heart" literally wash the material feet with material water, because the Lord has so commanded, we anticipate a refreshing season to the soul by divine influence; humility is made to grow, pride and self-will debased, and through the wonderful influence of love we are made to grow, and are filled and prepared for our Master's use at his table where material food for the material man, in the full meal, signifies we shall have a spiritual feast, full and enough to satisfy the burning thirst for the waters of life, and the most craving hunger after rightousness, especially at that time when the saints shall sup with the Lord and Master in the evening of this world, yes at that time when the Lord's "passover" shall have it complete and glorious fulfillment.

Thus we are, in a most beautiful and effectual manner, by these acts or parts of the service, brought on to forget for the time earthly cares and brotherly estrangement, and through the electrifying influences of love, we "walk as in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Then truely we may with hearts embued in the love and faith of a crucified Redeemer "shew forth his death until he comes, eat of his "flesh" and drink of his "blood" unto life, peace and joy. How we can attain to such a desired result otherwise than by a strict observance of those things that were given unto us by the head of the church, and according to His example we can't conceive, hence we claim they are inseperably connected.

3. In the example of Christ, his apostles and the church, in the purer ages, we know of no departure from the example set by Christ, and to separate what God has joined together would be hazardous, to say the least of it. The church has, while following the "simplicity that is in Christ" recognized the ordinances of Feetwashing, the Lord's Supper, and the Communion as being linked together by the example of the Lord Jesus and to deviate therefrom either in mode or time (the evening) would most assuredly open the way for a total repudiation of such parts of the service as would not be just so convenient, or congenial to exalted minds.

If Satan once could sunder the links that connect the parts that constitutes the service of God, he would soon make the gaps so wide we could not see from one to the other, and the observance of those things that are the most repulsive to a worldly mind would be like angle visits "few and far between."

Thus brethren, after mature thought, free from a desire to court favor from any on earth, I have expressed my honest views on the subject heading this article and claim that "United they stand and divided they fall."

A High School Among the Brethren.

In PILGRIM No. 34 will be found an article on the above subject, which evinces considerable thought and care in its preparation. In it the author gives six reasons for opposing the school enterprise. With the kindest of feelings toward the writer and all who think as he does, I desire to notice four of these arguments, taking them in the order in which they occur in his article.

1. The Scripture nowhere authorizes such measures. In addition to what the brother states on this point, it may be added that the church practices and upholds certain other measures which the Scriptures nowhere authorize—that is, if we use the term "authorize" in the sense of command. This, of course, does not prove that the measure under discussion is right, it merely proves that we are not consistent in condemning the school enterprise on the ground that it is not commanded in specific language in the Scripture. But admitting that there is no positive "thus saith the Lord" in favor, we must next ask, is there any against—is the measure condemned in the Scripture? In answer to this question such passages as these are quoted: "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise," &c. And again, "I came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom," &c. Now it happens that the writer of both these quotations, and of several others that are sometimes used in this connection, (such as, "knowledge puffeth up") was himself a man of fine literary attainments, and was, moreover, specially, even miraculously called to the work of the ministry. This seems to prove at least two things. 1. God does not always choose the unlearned and ignorant. The "chosen vessel" is, doubtless, the one which will, in any given instance, best accomplish the work to be done. 2. It is not impossible for a highly educated man to humble himself so as to "know nothing save Christ and him crucified."—When Paul speaks as he does above, he is not condemning human wisdom,—much less is he commending ignorance,—he is simply extolling Christ,—that wisdom which cometh down from above and maketh wise unto salvation. And with how much better grace such words come from an educated man than they would from a man of no education. We can not make an intelligent comparison between two things unless we have a knowledge of both. And herein lies one of the advantages of education—it gives the ability to make correct comparisons, and thus to make our thoughts intelligible to other minds. An untutored plowman may rail against the constitutionality of a certain measure which has been adopted by the government; but who cares? So an ignoramus may denounce education as worthless, but the verdict of most minds will be, "He don't know what he is talking about."

To sum up; higher education is not commanded, neither is it forbidden. The passages quoted in opposition to education may be off-set by as many others which may be construed in favor. Hence the statement that the Scripture nowhere authorizes the establishment of a high school proves nothing definitely as to whether or not such a school should be established. Is not this one of those cases in which we must be guided by the light of reason and by the wants of the day,—the circumstances by which we are surrounded? The brother says not, and tries to vindicate his stand by an argument which we are now ready to consider.

2. The argument based upon circumstances. That many brethren are sending their children to school under the influence of other denominations is admitted; and that some of these children unite with those denominations is not denied. But it is claimed that this is only one of many "gaps" through which brethren's children are lost to the church; and that "it then becomes our duty to guard, not only one, but each of the avenues named." Just so. That many parents are too negligent in the early training of their children is too true. Let there be improvement in this particular. It will not impede the school enterprise in the least. But it is claimed that if children are properly taught when quite young that they will not be likely to embrace the doctrines which influence them while away at school. There is, no doubt, much truth in this; early impressions are lasting impressions. But has it not just been admitted (not only admitted but urged apparently as an argument) that there is a great lack in this early training? It is folly to base an argument upon what has no existence save in the theory, no matter how good that theory may appear. But the theory in this case is not entirely faultless; one has to be well "rooted and grounded in the faith" to withstand some influences brought to bear upon him at these schools; early training will not always give this stability—perhaps it would be safe to say that it will seldom give it. "We would have the reader to know that we do not at all oppose a good common education." By "a good common education" the brother does not mean merely a common school education. The allusion to Berea and Oberlin precludes this. Hence he believes it right to patronize high schools and colleges so long as these institutions are not under the control of his brethren in the Lord! This position is fortified by an allusion to magistrates, lawyers, bankers, &c., all of whom we patronize yet "oppose their being in the church." This looks plausible at first. But is it fair to compare the teacher with the lawyer, or a school with a railroad corporation? Unless it is the argument amounts to nothing. In the first place law-offices, banks, railroads, are purely secular institutions. Not so with the school. Even our common schools are thought fit places for the reading of the Bible and the imparting of moral and religious instruction. But who ever heard of a prayer being offered, a hymn sung or the Bible read at the opening or closing of a bank! This shows that there is a marked difference between the two institutions, and hence it is not fair to apply the same reasoning to the one that we apply to the other. Because the church refuses to admit worldly-minded Mr. A is no reason why she should turn the cold shoulder upon Mr. B whose influence is on the side of morality and religion.—It seems to me the brother's position can, however be illustrated by a comparison not open to the objection afore cited. Suppose we had no periodicals owned and controlled by brethren, and that we belonged to that class of brethren who oppose the introduction of papers into the church. We, however, like to read,—indeed we think it right to read and rejoice that our brethren and their children are of the same mind. But we don't want any paper in the church (that is edited and controlled by brethren.) Brother B. wants to publish a paper called the Pilgrim, but let us not patronize it; let us instead take the Methodist. Let us patronize the Presbyterian instead of the Companion. If we train our children right before they are able to read they will not be biased by these "corrupt religious doctrines" and we will be spared from reading the thoughts or encouraging the "individual enterprises" of our own brethren in the Lord. These we fear would be "simply a pontoon upon and over which the enemy (our brethren beloved?) will march a very powerful division of his force into the camp of Israel and when the enemy once lands his forces, plants his batteries, it is very difficult to drive him back and regain the territory."—This it seems to me is a fairer illustration of the positon of those who "favor a liberal patronage of the high schools of the country, but are much opposed to erecting them in the church" than is an allusion to banks, rail-roads and other institutions of a purely secular character.

3. The effect of an institution of learning upon the organization that founds it.

The effects mentioned by the brother are divisions, pride and exaltation. In proof of this he cites the testimony of a brother who was once a Mennonite, and alludes to the popular churches of the day. Now I do not wish to argue regardless of the facts in the case. Discussing will do good only in so far as we manifest a sacred regard for truth when it is elicited. And it must be admitted that one of the strongest arguments of the opposition hinges upon this point, the supposed effect of an institution of learning in the church. I say "supposed effect," for we cannot say with absolute certainty just what the effect would be. True, it is said that we can know the future by the past; but then we must know how to interpret the past. Even then so much allowance must be made for current events and new influences that we can arrive at nothing very definite. How does the brother know that the divisions in the Mennonite church can be traced to their high school? Again, is he sure this is a natural inevitable consequence of higher education in all religious bodies? Do we not all know of churches that have had high schools and colleges for centuries and are as firmly united to-day as they ever were? On the other hand I know of a small body of beleivers who never thought of establishing a high school (and who believed it wrong to build meet-houses until within a few years; perhaps some do yet) but who are divided up into almost as many factions as there are congregations. There must be some other things besides high schools which cause divisions, even among the humblest churches. Almost the same line of argument may be use in regard to pride and exaltation. The brother refers to the popular churches and to certain members in our own church in such a way as to lead us to infer that he attributes all the pride (and perhaps every other evil) to high schools. A little to sweeping when we remember the effect of distinguished parentage, wealth, beauty, praise and a hundred other things which all conspire to make men what they are. Why lay all the blame upon an institution which has perhaps the least to do in bringing about the much-talked-of but little understood evil of pride? The brother evidently does not believe Pope.

A little learning is a dangerous thing,
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.

The friends of higher education think there is another class of effects coming from institutions of learning. Among these are intelligence, higher purposes in life, mental and morsl culture, books, literature, &c. And it is furthermore thought that these are the legitimate results of such an institution just as faith, love and obedience are the legitimate results of the church. But we know that evil mixes with the good even in the church of Christ; should we expect better things from an institution less divine? No institution has ever yet been established upon the earth by either God or man that has not been more or less abused, and thus it will continue so long as sin prevails. "Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied." Says some author.

Our dangers and delights are near allies;
From the same stem the rose and prickle rise.

Some people are always fretting about the prickle; they never see the rose.

4. The class of brethren who favor the school enterprise.

The brother introduced his fourth argument by saying that our fraternity are not fully united upon the principles of humility, there being those who think we ought to 'wear modest apparel,' not being 'conformed to this world,' "while there are those who do not believe in the above external manifestations of humility, and hence are drifting with the world." This is assuming something which itself needs demonstration. Is it true that there are brethren who do not believe in wearing "modest apparel" and in "not being conformed to the world?" I can hardly think so. True, I have seen a few brethren whose apparel seemed to me to be more slovenly than modest, but had they been consulted in regard to it, they would no doubt have felt hurt at the slightest hint of immodesty. So there are others whose apparel is finer than that worn by the majority of their brethren, but who still claim to dress in modest apparel. So while there is a difference of opinion as to the meaning of the term "modest" it is not true that a class of brethren do not believe in wearing modest apparel. And it is almost the same with regard to conforming to the world. None claim that Paul was wrong and that it is right to conform to the world, but there is a considerable difference of opinion as to the meaning of the apostle. Some seem to think that he has special reference to the external appearence—to dress—while others think this is only one of many ways in which we may conform to the world. They see in the apostle's language, no specific allusion to dress, much less to its cut or color. He says, "And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Some brethren seem to think that the renewing of the mind is the important idea in this injunction, and it so happens that some of these brethren are in favor of a high school movement. The brother cites us to at least two of this class who came under his own personal observation. The first had not a single "external mark of our fraternity" upon him; but we are glad to learn that he preached some "telling sermons." This is at least something in his favor, and seems to indicate that he is trying to show himself approved unto the Lord if not unto men. Perhaps he is young and has not yet learned the secret of becoming popular among his brethren. "An old brother once told me when young that unless I became plain and humble that I would never have much influence in the church."

But says our brother, "we are however frank to admit that there are some plain humble brethren who favor a high school, the lamentable truth in this is, that their presence is what gives the enterprise a show in the eyes of the church." Yes, we trust there are many of these good, pious fathers in favor of education. And such can rest assured that they are loved and reverenced all the more by the younger members of the church for their plainness and humility. And if the "order of the brethren" is to be perpetuated it will be done by just such brethren as these who show some little sympathy with the wants and wishes of the young, and some regard for the times in which we live. It is a pleasure to walk hand-in-hand with those we love and then to follow in their foot-steps when we can no longer be by their side. Our liberal minded, generous-hearted old brethren can make a high school a powerful engine for the dissemmination of the truth and perpetuation of their ideas on simplicity and the many other Christian virtues; but they can do this only by engaging in the work and throwing around the enterprise the dignity and worth of influence of their own lives. The Quaker character (simplicity and plainness included) is known and respected in all parts of the civilzed world; their devotion to education and institutions of learning is equally well known.

Salt Lake City and the Mormons.

ISAAC ERRETT—My Dear Sir:—We left the Pacific Rrilway at Ogden, and after four hours run through the valley and along the eastern side of the Great Salt Lake, we arrived at this wonderful city. Salt Lake City is situated on the foot-hills, and on the slope descending from the same to and into the valley of Salt Lake, and about ten miles distant therefrom, being ten miles south from the south end of the Lake—as the Lake has no outlet, it is difficult to determin which the head or foot of the Lake is. Behind the city, viz, on the east and southeast, is the Salt Lake range of the Utah mountains, rising high above the city, upon which the prophet stood with his band of enthusiastic follwers, and proclaimed the valley that lay before them, "The Promised Land," and named the little river that flowed through the valley from the southwest into the Great Salt Lake, "The Jordan."

The city is beautifully laid out, with broad streets and alleys, and large squares, all at right angles or, as the saying is, "squares with the world; the lots well improved with shade trees and plenty of shrubbery. One great source of comfort and beauty, as well as absolute necessity, is the abundance of water, which is procured by utilizing a mountan stream, or streams, so as to supply the streets and lots with abundance of water, which is a source of untold wealth to this city. With it they have made the barren wastes to "blossom as the rose;" without it, the productive valley of the Great Salt Lake would be worthless, even to the Mormons.

The city is well built, with many good, business blocks of stone and brick, of modern style and good architecural taste. The resident portion of the city is neatly improved with, for the most part, small cottage buildings of various styles, neatly painted and having an air of comfort and satisfaction. On the right, as you stand facing the Lake upon the foot-hills, or rather close to them, is situated the square of land first occopied by the Prophet on the arrival of the Mormons in this valley, and it is still occupied by the head of the church. This square of land was early walled in by a stone wall from eight to ten feet high (some places being higher than others,) as a protection from the Indians, but the wall still remains. Situated within this wall, on the front is the "Bee Hive," one of the President's residences, and the general business office and councilrooms of the head of the church. On the north end of this square is the "Tithing" office and stone house, in which is deposited the one-tenth, in kind, as it is brought in and offered up to the church, and, as they say, redistributed to the poor of the church "as they have need," which I think is true, judging from my own observation during the few days I have been in their midst.

Passing to the north one square, is located The "Great Temple of the Lord," now being built. This building is not very large, but wonderfully substantial. The foundation and basement stories, with walls eight feet thick, are now finished. The material is granite rock, obtained in the mountain twenty miles distant, the superstructure of the building to be built of same material. The foreman of the work told me they expected to finish the building in twelve years. The building is not purposed to hold meetings in, but for the ordinances or rites of the church. Passing to the next square north, you will find the Tabernacle or house of worship. This house is large enough to accommodate fifteen thousand people at one sitting. In one end is the largest and finest organ in the United States (except the great Boston organ,) which was built entirely by one man. This man is from Australia. He was converted to the Mormon faith and came to Salt Lake, and has spent twelve years in building this organ. It is a beautiful piece of work. Immediately in front of the organ is the President's or Prophet's seat; next in order are the twelve apostles, twelve counsellors' and so on by twelves; and lastly the twelve deacons.'

On the first day of the week, church at 10½ A. M., and services at 2 o'clock. At this hour communion is served, as in other churches, except that they use bread and water instead of wine, holding that the use of wine is communion contribute to intoxication by creating an appetite for strong drink.

It is the custom of these people to attend church on Sunday at the Tabernacle, and Sunday evening in each ward, in the city, there being a meeting-house in each ward; the same building being used during the week for schools.

These people are emphatically "a peculiar people," and this is, as I said, a wonderful city. And Bro. Errett, it has not its parallel in the civilized world, and never was equalled in the history of the world. Here is a city of over twenty four thousand people; over twenty thousand of them attending the same church every Sunday, holding the same religious faith, worshiping at the same altar, communing at the same table.

I have had some knowledge of the Mormons in years past, and have been perfectly surprised and astonished to know of their success in all countries and nations, in bringing people to their standard. But it is no wonder or surprise, when you come to know what their teachings are. They go forth as the apostles were taught to go—"without money or script"—and preach the gospel; as the Apostles preached it, and as Alxander Campbell, Walter Scott, Sidney Rigdon, and a host of true men preached it forty years ago. "1. Faith; 2. Repentance; 3 Baptism for the remission of sins; 4. The gift of the Holy Ghost." That, preached in its purity will meet with abundant success. I am told they never mention the book of Mormon in their proselyting tours, but stick closely and entirely to the New Testament—in short, they preach the word. The book of Mormon is brought in in after times, to sustain "New Revelation" by the voice of the prophet. Hence the authority for the many extravagances and peculiar views of this people.

With the exception of the practice of polygamy, I doubt whether there can be much exception taken to this people as a religious body.

They are indebted to their President, Brigham Young, for their success, religiously, morally and financially. He has brought them out from all nations and from among all people, and planted them in this wilderness, and has attained a measure of success that is truely wonderful.

They came here poor, but Brigham Young has established a credit in New York, London, San Francisco and all over the commercial world equal to Astor's or Vanderbilt's.

In my opinion there are very few men with the peculiar ability to control a large a body of people, in the main ignorant, with such perfect submission and with such financial success. At the present time there are over one hundred thousand Mormons in Utah Territory, controlled by the one head, the prophet of the church of "the Latter Day Saints."

W. S. STREATOR.

SALT LAKE CITY, May, 1874.

SLANDER.

No man can tell how soon he may be called upon to defend himself against the accusation of enemies, or interested, perhaps hired, assassins of character. The best of men are not safe from the tongue and the pen of the slanderer. We have fearful illustrations every day of this sad truth. The brightness of one's character invites assault. Reckless men throw mud at the cleanest surface. No one may safely rely upon his integrity as insurance against the attacks of the wicked. The innocent and upright will eventually be delivered from the serpent and bear, but they will suffer in the fight. The injury done to the truth and righteousness by the temporary blackening of a good man's character is incalculable, and can never be wholly repaired. A pure preacher of the Gospel publicly charged with crime, suffers by the charge, because human nature is so greedy of evil that some will believe a story, which is afterward prove to be a lie. And so we that tongue and the pen ought to be under the law of charity. Words once spoken, once published can never be recalled. They go on forever. Swift to hear, slow to speak, is a good rule, and yet a hard one to observe, when every man who makes a newspaper wishes to speak first.—N. Y. Observer.

A Child's Faith.

How straight and simple is the way a child comes to Jesus! No doubt, no hesitation, only simple faith and perfect love. A little girl of my acquaintance was once looking at a picture, with which most of you may be familiar, which represents a rock in the midst of a stormy sea, bearing upon its summit a cross, to which a female figure, just recovered from the angry waves, clings, faint and exhausted, while at her feet a hand grasping a part of a wreck is just disappearing in the black water.

"What does that mean?" asked the child.

"It is called 'The Rock of Ages,'" was the answer.

"That means Jesus to whom we cling for salvation."

"You know the hymn says, 'Other refuge have I none.'"

"Oh yes!" said the child, after a moment's hesitation, "but that rock isn't my Jesus; when I cling to him he reaches down and clings to me too."

Teach the little ones of this Jesus "who reaches down and clings to him," to whom we hold not so much from fear of falling, since underneath us are his everlasting arms; but because, like the trusting child whom his father safely carries, we love to cling that we may draw him closer.—National Sunday School Teacher.

A Scriptural Answer.

Some weeks ago it fell to my lot to stop over night with a Campbellite elder, and during our interview I discovered that he made a very free use of his tobacco. Some remarks being made regarding the propriety of Christians using the weed, he simply stated that he used tobacco, and had Scripture for it. I then requested him to produce it. He then quoted the following passage: "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still." Of course I had nothing more to say.—J. H. Moore.

THE bold defiance of a woman is the certain sign of her shame. When she has once ceased to blush it is because she has too much blush for.

TRUE modesty blushes for everything that is criminal. False modesty is ashamed of everything unfashionable.

The Weekly Pilgrim.

HUNTINGDON, PA., SEP. 8, 1874.

☞ How to send money.—All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or postal order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

A Book Bindery.

For some time we have had under contemplation the idea of starting a book bindery, but as yet we are not fully assured that such an enterprise would be sustained. For years our brethren have been filing or preserving that Pilgrims and Companions with the expectation of having them bound. If we could get all these together it would give us a good start. This could be done at a very small cost by having some one at each office, or several offices could join to send the whole lot together. They could be sent as freight and returned in the same way thus only costing a trifle. Brethren, what say you? How many volumes could you give us? Again, we are getting books and pamphlets published.—This we could also do as well as anybody else. If there are any of our readers interested in this matter, we shall be glad to hear from them, and if there is any encouragement given we will start a bindery and also prepare ourselves to publish books.

Almanacs for 1875.

We again call the attention of our readers to the fact that all matter intended for the Almanac and all corrections to be made, must reach us again the middle of September or before the first of October. We are especially anxious to have the Ministerial List as correct as possible. Remember we want your address as it will be for 1875. Some sent us corrections soon after the publication of this years Almanac. We were not then prepared to make a note of them so that they are now lost. Therefore we want all corrections to be made now. Also all the names of those not in our present list including those elected during the present year.

As there are some inquiring about our rates for advertisements in the Almanac we will again state that we intend to publish for the two papers Pilgrim and Companion, 8000 copies and have fixed our rates for advertisements as follows: 1 column $30. 00. ½ Col. $16.00. ¼ Col. $10.00, and ⅛ Col. $6.00. This offer affords rare opportunities to good advertisers and those wishing to avail themselves of them, should apply at once.

THE VIRDICT.

One of the strange things of the age was the Beecher investigation. Never before, in the history of the country was there such an outloudish outrage upon justice and fairness played off, or tried to be, upon an intelligent public. Truly the Christian name is brought to shame. Well may heathens rage and infidels scoff at the religion of Christ, if such proceedings are to be recognized as that of his followers. A libertine in religion, if not in passions, through the force of circumstances of his own generating, gets into serious difficulties, so serious that the Plymouth Rock in the estimation of an observing public, begins to quake and tremble. The great builder upon this rock becomes alarmed and a sham investigation is called, not to investigate but to cover up and hide the truth by ignoring the veracity and even destroying the reputation and character of those who were acknowledged by him as being his best friends. To accomplish this most completely, the committee is made up of three of his prominent church members and three others called outsiders, but really hisdisciples, as they were converted into his good graces by hearing his exceeding loose and carnal doctrine.

This committee has been investigating, subverting and laboring to cover up the Plymouth stench for the last month and the other evening, in Plymouth Church, in the presence of an infatuated and most indecorous assemblage, the great verdict of "not guilty" was given. In this, no intelligent and observing man was disappointed as it was so "ordained" in the beginning. But will this satisfy a justice and mercy loving public? A desire for popularity will do much, money will do more, but it is very doubtful whether the man who has acted so unwisely if not criminally will ever be permitted to sit and remain on his former seat of glory.

CONFLICTING CONTRAST.

Under the above head we read the following in the August No. of Der Waffenlose Wechter.

"We could hardly present our readers with an idea of the conflict among the old Brethren society, generally called Tunkers, better in any way than by contrasting the two following articles selected from late No. of two of their constantly differing papers."

The two articles referred to are first, "A Serious Departure" by H. R. Holsinger and published in the Companion. Second, "The Pressure of the Times," by Jos. W. Trostle, published in the Vindicator.

This is the natural outgrowth of too many Church papers when they are disposed to be theologically sectional. There is no truer saying than the old adage. "There are many men of many minds." These many minds are found in the Church as well as in the world, and are resolvable into as many parts or clans as they can have organs through which they can give expression to their peculiar notions, and as birds of a feather go together, so these parties patronize the paper that most nearly express and given expression to their views. Therefore if we want to get up a regular Babylon in the Church let us have an organ or paper to represent each notion or belief that may obtain among the members of the brotherhood. These things at first are simply a difference of opinion as a result of a different education and circumstances by which we are surrounded, but if they are contested and persisted in and have an organ or paper through which they can be sown broadcast throughout the membership, they grow into heresies and the paper thus made use of is largely responsible.

In the general plan of salvation we are united but that we must be alike in all of these little outside issues cannot be expected and to discuss and compare our different views in the spirit of love, we can see no impropriety. But it should be done in the same paper or if there is to be more than one, each should be alike open and free to the discussion of both sides of all subjects that it is proper to discuss. Just so long as we ignore this fact and continue to allow our papers to be advocates for some special theories now obtained and obtaining among us, we are nursing the spirit of heresy, and upon whom shall the responsibility fall most heavily? Most assuredly upon those who are the instigators of the means by which it is encouraged and carried on.

The assertion, "constantly differing papers" is a little too strong a term, yet it is evident that it is very much too near the truth and to our shame be it said. Because we cannot see alike relative to the propriety of education, high shools, a supported ministry and some other things, is no reason why we should become sectional in our feelings toward each other, neither is it any reason why we as publishers should accommodate our papers to such feelings and thus encourage those whose inclinations naturally run in that direction.

Qualifications of the Christian Warrior.

The apostle Paul compares the Christian life to a conflict, and if you have ever tried to subdue your passions, control your temper, and rouse yourself to a better manhood, or womanhood, then you can know what he means. There are those, who, apparently, expect to be carried to heaven on flowery beds of ease, and these can not enter into the feelings of Paul when he represents our life on earth to a war with the world, the flesh and the devil. But the Christian, he who has cut himself loose from the world and has enlisted under the banner of Jesus, realizes that it is a hand-to-hand fight, that we are beset on all sides by a dangerous foe, and that there is no peaceful encampment beyond the grave. How good Paul felt as he saw death approaching, the time when he would be released from the conflict and be at rest. "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me in the last day." Oh, that all men might so fight that when they see death approaching, it may appear to them only as a time when they can lay their armor by and be at peace.

In order that we engage in this war successfuly, that we be enabled to overcome the foe and have that blessed and consoling hope within us that Paul had, there are many qualifications that we should ever keep before the mind, and a few of these we shall endeavor briefly to notice:

1. When starting out on this conflict we should have engraved in large capitals on our banner, TRUST IN GOD. This we should ever keep before us,—filial trust in God. 2. We should perform our duty to God faithfully and fearlessly. 3. We should be watchful.

1. Trust in God. There are many examples in the Scriptures to illustrate these points, but we prefer some circumstance in which all these ideas are embodied, and therefore refer to the message which Jesus sent to Herod. "And he said unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold I cast out devils, and do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." Previous to this message Christ had preached repentance upon the punishment of the Galileans, healed the crooked woman, showed the power of God's word by the parable of the grain of mustard seed, and of the leven. The miracle which he performed, the manner of his preaching, and the pointedness and aptness of his illustrations, exhibited his supernatural power; and as Christ's preaching was foreign to the opinions of the Jews it was very offensive to them, hence certain of the Pharisees say unto him. "Get thee out and depart hence; for Herod will kill thee." But this did not in the least intimidate Christ; he trusted in his Father who sent him, and with this feeling of reliance, he told them plainly that he would continue among them yet three days and do cures. Then he would depart but not through fear of Herod. In this then, we have this reliance, this trust in God, illustrated by Christ our great exemplifier.

Reader do you have this trust in God? If you have not, you can not expect to rout and put to flight the great enemy of your soul. There are fierce struggles within and without and unless there is a reliance upon the strong arm of him who hath power to save, you can do nothing. God helps those who put their trust in him. David says the Lord is a buckler to all that put their trust in him. This expresses the idea very clearly. The buckler was a kind of a shield or defensive piece of armor, used by the ancients in war. It was often large enough to cover the whole body. To this David had allusion when he spoke of the buckler, and used it to illustrate God's protecting care over those who put their trust in him. But without this trust God will not be as a shield, we stand out unprotected, unsheltered and alone. Reader how would you like to stand out alone without protection, while the enemy is firing shot and shell at you? You would think your condition a very critical one indeed, but not more so than he who leaves the ranks of the enemy without reliance upon God. It is that which brings about your shield, it is that which protects your soul in this great conflict and enables you fearlessly and faithfully to go forth although "fiery darts be hurled," in the performance of your duty. At this age of the world the battle is becoming fierce and it is to be feared that there are many of Christ's soldiers who are standing too much alone. May God help them to draw near to him who is their help in this the day of trial.

2. Faithful to duty. This qualification is also seen in the message, from the fact that Jesus went on fearlessly and faithfully in the performance of his duty regardless of the threats they made to take his life. God is to be obeyed even though obedience should involve us in difficulties and trials. Notwithstanding all this we should not hesitate to commit our cause to God and press onward. Jesus did so. He only wanted to remain three days at Gallilee, and during that time he worked with untiring zeal and perseverence.

In the faithful performance of duty it is necessary that we first have a knowledge of duty, and from whence we obtain this knowledge; and secondly we should consider the benefits arising from a performance of duty.

We remark first that duty arises from the moral obligations we are under to God. We obtain a knowledge of these obligations from the Scriptures. The Bible contains the will of God concerning his creatures, that is, through it we are brought under obligations to him. But while this is so, it contains much that is merely history, a narrative of the actions of good and bad men of former ages. Much of it has reference to a particular people, and for a special purpose. It also consists of exhortations and reproofs addressed to persons in reference to laws that are now abrogated. Amidst all this great variety of instructions given to men at different times, and of different nations, it now remains for us to determine what is binding upon us at the present time. we have God's revelation to us in language, and it is taken for granted that whatever is our duty will be signified by a command, hence it is only what is commanded that brings us under obligations to God. This we think is certainly a proper conclusion, for if it were not so, the doings of both good and bad men might be regarded as authority, and thus the revelation of God designed to teach us our duty, be used as an instrument to confound the distinctions between right and wrong. In short the ground work of all moral obligations is a command of God. With this view of it man has ever been under obligations to God. As soon as our first parents were put into the garden of Eden a command was given. It was their duty to keep their fingers off the forbidden fruit. But shortly after this command, the two antagonistic powers, right and wrong, met, and then ensued the great battle. What a struggle that must have been! We imagine that every nerve of mother Eve's moral strength was strained, but unfortunately wrong was too strong to combat with right; the moral obligations were violated, and man fell a prey to the great foe. He alienated himself from God, and as a punishment it was said unto Eve, "in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children, and thy husband shall rule over thee." Unto Adam it was said, "in sorrow shalt thou eat it," (the fruit of the tree) "all the days of thy life." Man is now spiritually dead and in this condition must remain unless an atonement is made. A very faint hope is given of this in the far distant future. God still continues to communicate to man; he gives unto him commands, and places him under obligations to him even for his temporal existence. A violation of God's law was a temporal death unless an atonement was made by means of sacrifices, which were not acceptable to God without the shedding of blood. Hence the apostle says, referring to the law, "And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without the shedding of blood there is no remission." This of course has reference to the atonement for our temporal existence, but in the course of time it pleased God to make an atonement for our spiritual existence, and this is accomplished by the shedding of blood and that too, the blood of God's own Son. The sacrifice is now made, and a way is opened by which we may again be restored into our primitive condition. But this is only upon the conditions that we comply with his will which he has revealed unto us. He has given us commands, and these places us under obligations to him for our spiritual existence. In the New Testament is contained the commands from a compliance of which we are promised eternal life. We have, as had our mother Eve, the same enemy to contend with, and many are the attacks he makes upon the soldiers of the cross; but can we not, Christian friends, having our duty so plainly revealed to us, and having a knowledge of the manner in which our redemption was accomplished, successfully refute him? Will not the thought of what Christ has done for us give us strength for the conflict. May God help us all to meditate upon our duty and feel the obligations we are under to him, and may this feeling strengthen the back-bone of the inner man, so as to stand up erect in the hour of trial and combat faithfully with the enemy of souls.

We come now to consider briefly the benefits of a faithful performance of duty, or its relation to the great conflict. In any conflict, or in surmounting any obstacle it is necessary to have strength. This is of very great importance. Strength of body is very desirable, but how much more desirable is strength of soul, the power to resist the flesh and the devil! As the body becomes strong only by exercise, so does the soul. This is one of the conditions of its developement. Every time there is an effort made to perform a Christian duty the enemy resents, there is a conflict for the mastery, and when we overcome, the soul is strengthened, it is prepared to surmount greater difficulties. To illustrate we will suppose a case although it may have been actual experience with some of us. A brother has been overcome. He has been captured by the enemy. We see this, and then it is that duty presses upon us. Jesus says that if a brother commit a fault we are to go and tell him of that fault. But this requires Christian strength, for we always feel more fearful of the enemy when we see he has gained the victory, than we do when he is refuted. But if we can just have strength enough to go and perform our duty how good we feel afterwards, how much stronger we feel, and how much more ready for another conflict. Another actual occurrence illustrates it. A brother who had been brought up in habits of industry and economy had accumulated considerable wealth. It so happened that in the congregation where he lived there were some three houses of worship needed, and these were built successfully one after another. When the first call was made for money, although he saved hundreds of dollars every year, he concluded to give a very small sum. The brethren tried to impress him with the idea that it was his duty to give more, but this he said he felt; it was only the enemy that said keep it, hoard it up, you have labored for it and you have a right to it. While the spirit of right and wrong was thus conflicting he felt unhappy and was not relieved until he made up his mind to contribute more liberally. The next house that was to be built he contributed still more liberally and felt better. After the last one was built he remarked that it was no more a cross to give money for church purposes if he had it. So it is brethren, it is our duty as Christians to tell our brethren of their faults, it is our duty to give of our money to the church, it is our duty to relieve the distressed, to give to the poor, to return good for evil, and do good to our enemies, all of which are fearfully resented by the enemy, yet we have the power to overcome, and the more we exercise this power, the easier will our Christian duties become. Thus the benefits of a faithful performance of duty are apparent. The more we do the stronger we become. If we wish to be strong active soldiers of the cross, we must exercise in the christian duties. It is to be feared there are too many inactive Christians, and in consequence of this, their moral powers are too weak to hold up the banner, and fight for Jesus. Reader, let us labor. Let us exercise every bone, sinew, and nerve of the inner man, for upon this depends our spiritual growth, and strength.

3. We should be watchful. Going back to the message of Jesus to Herod again, we find also embodied in it this idea. "Go tell that fox." The fox is an animal that is noted for its sly, cunning, artful manner of doing mischief, and this nature Herod seemed to have. He had just performed a very artful trick that called forth this metaphor from Jesus. He wanted Jesus to leave the country and of accomplish this end, he employs the Pharisees to pretend to be his friends, and as such advise him to get out of their territory. Jesus however perceived their strategy, and immediately sent the message informing him that he would leave only when his work was completed. There are, no doubt, some Herod's in the world to-day, and unless we watch closely, they may deceive us. The enemies to the cross are around us on every side, the simple teachings of the gospel are not in harmony with their feelings and consequently every effort will be made to impede the Christian work. Christian reader there must be no sleeping done in this great conflict. As the fox in the dead of night, when all animated nature is wrapt in the arms of Morpheus, seizes upon his prey, so the enemy of our souls will, when we slumber and sleep, make his inroads upon us. Oh that we all could be wide awake! Brother, sister, if you are asleep, awake! If you feel sleepy let the thought of the awful consequenees of a defeat drive it all away. This is a dark age of the world, the battle is growing fiercer. Awake! O thou slumbering one, on to victory! "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit like men, be strong."

In conclusion dear reader let me exhort you to see that you have these qualifications. We must trust in God for he says "without me ye can do nothing. We must be faithful to duty that we become strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. We must be watchful that we be not deceived. Stand in readiness having on the whole armor of God, then,

"Fight on my soul, till death
Shall bring thee to thy God:
He'll take thee at thy parting breath,
To his divine abode."

MOST persons are apt to think that God can be glorified only in certain ways or at stated times, but we may glorify him in all that we do, wether we eat, drink or work it may all be done to his glory.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

Clean Hands.

Philip and Katy were much more together than brothers and sisters commonly are. Though very unlike, they liked each other's society, and were a mutual benefit to each other.

Katy, who was delicate, grew stronger and healthier by living so much out doors with Philip. And the boy, who was inclined to be rough and careless, was daily trained and trimmed by his bright, kind little sister. Boys who have not the benefit of such loving, little pruning shears to snip off the crooked twigs as they sprout, miss a great deal.

Aunt Lois was "dreadful 'fraid Catherine would get to be a tom-boy," but her brother, Katy's father, said, "he hoped she would. Just think, Lois, how much sickness and trouble it would have saved you if you had been allowed to fish and drive around with me through the woods and meadows at her age."

Aunt Lois shook her head gravely. Little girls ought to be "little ladies," at any cost.

But all were glad to see the glow of health flush up on Katy's cheeks, even if it was a little brown.

She used to play and work in the garden, and get her hands sandy and muddy, but when she came in she always put them in the neatest possible order. She kept a strict look out for careless Philip, in this respect also.

"Let me turn back your wristbands, Phil," she would say. "You can't half wash with them buttoned." She was sure to shove his cuffs as far back as she could, and see that his hands and wrists were perfectly clean.

"Will you take my knife to clean your nails?" she would ask.

"No, thanks," said Phil, accepting the hint, "I will use my own; it answers well enough. There, how will that do?" and he spread his hands out for inspection

"Nicely," was Katy's answer, as they walked into dinner.

What a blessing if some other boys I know had tidy little sisters they were willing to hear to, who would give them line upon line as patiently, for it takes it to make the average boy keep his hands neat. And depend upon it, boys, clean hands tell a great deal about your character and future fortune—a great deal more than the little crooked lines inside of them which the gypsy fortune-teller makes so much account of.

What sort of a story do your hands tell?—Schoolday Magazine.

Epistolary.

A LETTER TO WASHINGTON DOVE.

Dear Bro:—

It is with pleasure and according to promise, that I now endeavor to write you a few lines, though it is after such a long delay that perhaps you think we have forgotten you. But we have not, and I hope we never will forget the good counsel you gave us while you was with us, and my desire is that we would ever strive to obey the same, some that way hold out faithful unto the end of our journey, and then all be brought together in that better land, where we can enjoy the society of all the happy ones forever. But O, how sad we are made to feel, when we see so many and some too, who are near and dear to us by the ties of nature, that are not taking hold of the good work, and not trying to walk in the way the good Spirit would guide them. But I hope and pray that the Lord will be merciful to them, and will awaken them so that they can see the error of their way, before it is forever too late for them to retrace their steps and return to him from whom they have stayed away.

We were glad to hear that you arrived home safely and well, and found all well. However by the inference in your letter, your escape must have been a very narrow one. We are enjoying a resonable health at present, and we desire that these few lines may find you all enjoying the same blessing. There has been but very little sickness in our neighborhood this Summer. We have great reason to be thankful for this and other blessings that we enjoy. We hear that crops have failed in some parts, so that people must suffer if they don't get help. We are blessed with good crops here, in this part of the State. We have had some very dry weather for a short time, but it was just at such times that the crops did not suffer very much. Now for fear of wearying your patience I will close. We join in sending our love to you all, we would be pleased to hear from you often through the PILGRIM. We remain your unworthy brother and sister. I. & C. BLICKENSTAFF.

Schools.

Not having been a reader of the PILGRIM for a very long time, I do not know the position of the paper on the subject of denominational schools among the Brethren, and therefore do not know whether the management of the PILGRIM allows contributors to advocate views antagonistic to its own, to some, or to a large degree, neither do I feel seriously concerned on the subject, only I do not feel to spend precious time in writing up matter for publication that would likely be subject to rejection by the printer on those grounds.

I felt prompted to look briefly into the "six arguments" of brother Rosenberger against "A high school among the Brethren."

The first argument is based upon the declaration that "the Scriptures nowhere authorize such measures," which declaration he endeavors to tro ify with quotations and observations as follows: "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings God has orpained atrength." The "babes and sucklings" alluded to in the text, are babes in point of worldly wisdom, education, &c., yet amidst this weakness they are provided with strength. Again "God hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise," and "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." The "foolish and weak things" here spoken of by the apostle it is true have a broad application, but it is evident that we may safely apply them to the illiterate and unlearned advocates of Christianity in the Saviour's time and their successors up to this day. Now if we raise the standard of education to a level with the education of the world, then we will have passed out of that chosen class. And right here in the begining we find our way in search of the truth obscured, because we do not clearly apprehend what Bro. R. means by the expressions, "worldly wisdom" and "education of the world," but suspect that he means all the "wisdom" and all the "education" required by all the people outside the Brotherhood.

We come to this suspicion or conclusion from the fact that Bro. Bucher and nearly all other brethren, who write against our denominational schools, argue from this ground.

An explicit definition or explanation of their views on this obscure point in their writings from themselves, would be exceedingly welcome to us, and would go very far, I believe, in bringing out a clear conception of the merits of this school proposition. We will, therefore wait for further light on this point, and see what ground the brethren take.

Truly, &c.

P. H. BEAVER.

DAVID KINGERY.

DIED.

SHELLER.—Brother John Sheller departed this life on the 11th day of July, 1874, aged 23 years, 10 months and 11 days. He was subject to the falling fits, lived near Jack's creek and he went fishing with hook and line, and it is supposed that he took a fit, fell into the water and drowned. He was found in the water dead, his hook and line laying at the edge of the water. He was a consistent member of the Lewistown arm of our Church, Mifflin Co., Pa. Funeral occasion improved by Bro. William Howe and brother Samuel I. Swigart.

PRICE.—Also brother John B. Price departed this life on the 22nd day of August, 1874, aged 45 years, 2 months and 9 days. He was in the second degree of the ministry. He preached loudly by his actions, his walk and talk and by his demeanor in life. He left a mother and six children to mourn their loss, though they do not need to mourn, as those that have no hope. We think their loss is his gain The neighbors have lost a good neighbor and citizen. Funeral occasion improved by brethren William Howe and Samuel Swigart.

JACOB MOULER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Send us the news.

—The Rev. S. H. Reed (Reformed) preached a very able and instructive sermon on the "Unpardonable sin," in the Reformed church of this place on last Sabbath eve.

—News items wanted from every congregation in the brotherhood.

—A brother says: "Your news column is the first thing read, make it as full and interesting as possible." Help us to make it so.

—The Eastern District of Pa. have lost, by death, the following bishops, whose places, we are informed are not yet filled: John Zug Shafferstown, Lebanon Co., Philip Zeigler, Mastersonville, Lancaster Co., David Eshleman, Mohrsville, Berks Co., and David Merkey, Bethel, Berks Co., all of Pa.

—Don't forget the book-binding enterprise, let us know how much binding you can give us.

—Bro. Wm. Hertzler of Elizabethtown Lancaster Co., Pa., says: The Spring Creek Church in Dauphin Co. is still alive to the cause of Christ, although satan desired to sift us as wheat. The ark of God is still moving slowly forward, and the ministers seem to labor together for good. Our old brother Jacob Hollinger, is fast failing physically, his eye sight is very poor, one eye blind, the other so weak that he often does not know his near relatives. Otherwise he is strong in body for his age, and occasionally attends meeting and preaches a long sermon.

—We have under contemplation for 1875, greater inducements than ever before offered. They will be made known in good time.

—The Juniata Valley Camp Meeting which has been in session for the last ten days, closes to-day. It was held under the general superintendency of Rev. M. K. Foster, P. E. of this district and resident of this place. The meeting is said to havebeen a complete success and the largest ever held on the ground. The meeting was graced by some of thier most eminent ministers.

—What has become of our sister Carrie who dwelleth in the land of "Big Trees?" Items from the Pacific Coast are always acceptable.

—From Bro. H. M. Sherfy of Limestone, Washington Co., Tenn., we have the following: "In early spring we had about four weeks rain, then dry, with an occasional shower, till the latter part of July when we had some rains, then dry again. At the present writing we are having a good deal of rain. Our wheat crops were tolarbly good, oat light and short, corn promises well.

We have had one accession to the Church and hope that many more may soon cast their lot with the people of God. The Limestone Church seems to be in peace and union since we have got over the Granger excitement, for which three were expelled but one has been reclaimed."

—With every letter you send us, let us have an item of news. Put it in on a separate slip of paper or in a shape that it can be detached from the other matter sent.

—The Rev. Mr. Plannet, a Baptist minister was in attendance of the Juniata Valley Camp meeting and preached a sermon. The editor of the Daily Camp Journal in his next issue remarked "that it was rather a dry region for a Baptist." In the next issue appeard the following:

"Mr. Editor, You say in your issue of the 29th ult., in refering to Bro. Plannets presence at Camp, "that is rather a dry region for a Baptist." We were suprised at this. When according to the historic statement of St. Matthew, the first Baptist preacher who lived, preached in the wilderness of Judea and found at Enon sufficient water to baptize all who believed and brought forth fruits meet for reopentance.

—More good essays wanted. The days are growing shorter and the evenings longer, more time to read and more to write, improve your time, write that others may read.

—Some of our readers are fearful that the form of the Pilgrim Almanac will be changed by the late arrangement. Not at all. The only change, except improvement, will be the name. As it is not intended to be either a Pilgrim or Companion Almanac, but for the Church, it will be called the Brethren's Almanac. But the size, form, astronomical calculations and ministerial list will be the same as the Pilgrim Almanac.

—The cry is, "What has become of brother Saylor?" Bro. Saylor last heard from, was living and well, but as he does not care to have his writings made the subject for queries for Annual Meeting, he has concluded to write no more, for a season at least. We wish Bro. Saylor would "mind none of these things" and continue to accede to the wishes of his brethren.

—A number of our readers are anxious to hear from sister Mattie Lear. Will not our sister take the hint and make use of the talent with which God has so richly blessed her?

—In another column will be found an interesting letter from the Christian Standard relative to Salt Lake City and the Mormons. As we are to learn from the "Open Book," this body of religionists give us a leaf well worthy of our careful study. It shows what can be accomplished under the most severe persecutions when a living zeal and faith is connected with the work. Had we, as a Church, exercised half the zeal as did the Mormans, to-day the principles of primative Christianity would be known and taught on every continent and island on the globe.

—The school question is becoming quite lively but we are glad to say that the writers, so far, manifest quite a Christian spirit in their interchanging of ideas. The subject by the nature of circumstances, is before the Brotherhood, and those who have anything either pro or con should say it now, but let it be done in the spirit of love. We want it understood that the columns of the Pilgrim are equally open to both sides of the question, and that there shall be no partiality shown in the investigation of this or any other subject as long as personalities are avoided.—As before stated, we are in no way financially connected with the school enterprise neither do we expect to be. The position we have taken is the result of principle and a sense of duty we owe to God and our fellow beings.

—The Annual Meeting for 1875 is now located about one and half miles west of Covington, Miamia Co, Ohio., on the premises of Bro. John Cassel, in the Covington congregation.

—At the Urbana O. Methodist camp-meeting, Aug. 10, the Rev. Osborne, said he thought the people were tired of the common kind of religion. He urged the people to seek a salvation which would save them from tobacco, croquet and Freemasonry—a salvation that would save preachers from the follies of the day, and the Bishops from traveling on Sunday and going to wine dinners. His charges against the bishop occasioned some excitement, and he was interrupted and interrogated, but refused to give particulars, and said he would answer at the Conference for his action.

—On account of the ravages of the grasshoppers in Kansas the people in many places cannot afford to pay their preachers as much as they think they should have, and some of the Episcopal ministers are about leaving their charges in care of the grasshoppers. Their church paper thus speaks of it. "Shall our missionaries be recalled? Shall our little churches be shut up? In this day of sorrow shall the preacher of consolation in Christ be withdrawn?" A dear consolation such preachers are—good shepherds indeed are those who when they see the wolf coming are the first to leave the field—to run. The Good Shepherd, it is said, layeth down his life for his sheep, but these shepherds are being scared at a sworm of grasshoppers. Truly "when the wolf cometh the hireling fleeth."

—The following is a general statement of Iowa's present prosperous condition and if not greatly exagerated we may expect heavy subscription lists from that direction for 1875. "We have never been more inn pressed with the greatness of the state of Iowa than now. All this western portion is rolling and beautiful, and vastly productive. The unimproved lands are being rapidly converted into farms, and the villages are increasing with an enterprising population. The wheat harvest just gathered exceeds anything that has preceded it, in average quality and in quantity. The corn and coarse grains and fruit were never better. The people of Iowa have never been so free from debt as now, and they have never possessed so much solid wealth.—Ex.

A Granger Burial.—The follies of this order are manifesting themselves more and more every day, and demonstrates more clearly that it is an organization with which the humble follower of a non-resistant christianity ought to have nothing to do.

On the 4th of June, 1874, Abraham Vories, a member of the organization known as the "Granges" was buried according to the ceremonies of the order, in Union township, Marshall Co., Indiana. Each Granger had on his sash and apron; each also had a sprig of evergreen which were placed on the coffin. They marched both to and from the grave in double file, and when the coffin was placed in the grave, the evergreens were removed by a master granger, after which the members marched round the grave and each threw a sprig of evergreen. Both men and women who joined the ranks, while marching from the house, passed under long staffs held by others for that purpose."

We hope our brethren will begin to see whither these things are leading and avoid them. They are nothing for those who love the Lord Jesus Christ with a pure heart fervently.—Herald of Truth.

—From the New York Sun we have the following:

The steamship City of Richmond, of the Inman line, arrived yesterday and anchored in the North river off Pier 45. Among the passengers were 497 Mennonites from Russia, on their way to join the colony lately established in Dakota by members of their order.

A Sun reporter boarded the City of Richmond yesterday and spent two hours in conversation with the leading Mennonites. He found them intelligent, earnest men, bent upon the one object of securing for their people perfect freedom to worship as they pleased—such freedom as is not vouchsafed by the laws of their native country.

"We have never been revolutionists," said a white-haired patriarch, who spoke English with remarkable fluency; but we have our opinions, and are detemined to give them full and free expression. We do not think that it is right for nations to engage in war; and as in our country we are all liable to military duty, we have come to a land in which our religious prejudices will be respected. Our people are honest and industrious. We bring no paupers with us, nor shall we breed any. The money we hold to-day is equal to nearly half a million dollars, every cent of which will be invested in the United States. We have been called religious fanatics, but no one has ever questioned our integrity, and as time rolls on Americans will learn to respect our community as honest, law-abiding, hard-working, earnest citizens."

The Menoonites on board the City of Richmond, like the thousand who have already landed here, are all plainly but neatly dressed, and without exception are strong and healthy. They will come ashore to-day, and will at once take passage for their Western home.

—B. B. Bollinger of Louisville, Ohio says: "We have built two sheds, twelve by sixty feet each, at the Center Meetinghouse, to protect our horses from the inclement weather during worship. Brethren let us not forget the wants of our creatures."

LITERATURE.

Through the kindness of Mr. Steiger the great American publisher of German and other text books, we have been favored with two more of his popular German series.

The first book is entitled Ahn's New Practical and Easy Method of learning the German Language with Pronunciation by J. C. Ochlschlager, Revised Edition First Course Practical Part.

Part 1st treats on the pronunciation of the German letters in such a complete and simple way that no scholar can fail to get the true pronunciations and sounds of the German characters. It also contains the written alphabet, also some forty exercises as specimens of the German Script, thus enabling the student to write as well as read the language.

In the second department we have a large number of exercises in both languages to be translated from one to another. For each lesson there is a vocabulary containing all the words used in the exercises.

The third division of the book is made up of German reading exercises, and takes the place of a regular reader. The work is gotten up in such a way as to lead the student step by step, from the most simple construction of the language to the more complex without much apparent effort.

The first book embraces the practical part and the second the theoretical. This teaches the grammatical constructions of the language and necessarily follows the practical.

We feel a deep interest in Mr. Steiger's German series and can cheerfully recommend them to our readers. Any one contemplating the study of the German Language should send for a list of his work which will be sent free of charge. Address E. Steiger 22 and 24 Frankfort St. N. Y.

The Centennial is a handsome eight page monthly devoted exclusively to the interest of the coming Centennial Exhibition of 1876. Those wishing to learn all about the preparations being made for this great coming event should subscribe for it $1.00 per year Pub. by H. W. Crotzer 521 Chestnut St. Philada. Pa.

Magazines.

For September we have on our table the following Monthlies:

Scribner. Published by Scribner &c. Co. 654 Broadway, New York, 128 pages, $4.00 per year.

Lippencott. By J. B. Lippencott &c. 715 Market Street Philada. 168 pages $4.00 per year.

Old and New. By Roberts Brothers, 143 Washington St. Boston 118 pages yearly subscription $4.00

Great Western Monthly. By the great Western Publishing house 502 Walnut St. Philada. 70 pages. Terms $3.00

These Magazines occupy a very similar standing in the literary world each one having a preference by its special friends.

They all have their portion of what we term light reading, but the good and useful by far overbalance the bad and to those who wish to read the standard literature of the day, we can recommend any of them leaving each one to make their own choise.

The Phrenological Journal $3.00 and Science of Health 2.00 published by S. R. Well's 389 Broadway New York occupy different fields and to us are more practical and useful.

For the Young, we have first, St. Nicholas, published by Scribner & Co $3.00 per year.

It is handsomely gotten up and carefully edited and is richly worth the price asked for it.

Young Folks' Rural Published by H. N. F. Lewis, Chicago Terms $1.50, in Clubs $1.00

This is a large 16 page month y and contains much interesting reading for the young.

The Nursery (price $1.50) By J. L. Shorey 36 Bromfield Street Boston, for the "wee ones" is the best of all. It is really a gem among the Juvenile Magazines, entirely free from any sectarian intentions and of the highest type of morality. It is decidedly the children's favorite.

The Childrens Paper is a neatly printed monthly, published by H. J. Kurts, Poland Ohio at 30 cents per year. It is well adapted for Sunday school purposes and should be patronized, especially by the Brethren.

—The most terrible thunderstorm for years, occurred at Mukwonage, Wis. The steeple of the Congregational church was torn into fine splinters, and holes torn in the floor and foundation. The gable of Wm. Rhode's house was torn completely off, and the boards scattered in the streets. Strange to say, no fire resulted in either building.

—The Royal Family of England are considerably mixed in their church relations. Queen Victoria is Presbyterian and Episcopalian by turns, according to her residence. The Prince of Wales inclines to Ritualism, while his eldest sister, the Princess of Germany, is a Lutheran; his brother-in-law, the Prince Imperial of Russia is a Protestant Lutheran; a sister-in-law, the Duchess of Edinburgh is a Greek Catholic, her husband is a Low Church Episcopalian; the other brothers and sisters, like their mother, alternate between the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, depending on their residence for the time being.

POETRY.

Out on the Shore.

BY WESTLEY.

"Out on the shore," my spirit stands,
Upon the treacherous crumbling sands;
Alone, alone, no arm is nigh,
To interpose 'twixt death and I.

"Out on the shore," earth's outlines fade,
As twilight yields to nights dark shade;
I hear the sob of the murky tide,
Like griefs low wail when hope has died.

"Out on the shore" of deaths dim coast
The drear abode of the loved and lost,
Chilly the breezes whisper by,
A down the gloom I hear them sigh.

"Out on the shore" the wild wave beat,
The frowning beach beneath my feet;
Over the foaming caldron wide,
I catch a gleam from from the other side.

Out on the shore" the billows rage,
Ood's power can their wrath assuage;
His voice can calm the raging tide,
For this His Son was crucified.

Out on the shore hopes pinions spread
In snowy silence o'er my head
His mercy bids the darkness break
His light illumes the surging lake.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

JUSTICE.

One among the most lovely of the characteristics of the true Christian is that of justice. Love mercy and do justice is a divine precept of more than ordinary value in the economy of grace. Justice is one of the attributes of God and was it not modified in its rigidness by mercy, few could be saved, or perhaps I had better say none could be saved. Knowing then, as we must, that by grace we are saved, should it not impress upon our minds with double force, the necessity of exercising the divine principle, justice, towards our fellow men in all the different relations of life and in all of our worldly and spiritual associations. In all of our daily associations, this great principle is more or less severely tested, and were we not so strongly fortified by grace, who would be able to stand? Our humanity is demoralized through sin and because of this, self is always made the object of our first service, which runs directly opposite to the golden rule, "love thy neighbor as thyself" upon which it is said "hang the law and the prophets," or which properly includes the whole duty of man. This is justice and precludes the idea of mercy. Mercy is so far beyond justice that while we are commanded to do the one we are only asked to love the other. Justice demands of us, to give to our brethren, sisters, and neighbors what strictly belongs to them, and expect the same in return, that is, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, but mercy reaches much further and gives us more than what justly belongs to us. This principle is fully set forth in the divine precept, "Love your enemies and do good to and pray for them that despitefully use and abuse you."

To do justice then, common humanity demands of us and is the step which introduces us into a higher sphere, a life in Christ Jesus. Brethren and sisters, let us not over step this great principle, as I fear some do. All have certain inalienable rights which should be honored and respected, no matter how averse they may seem to our way of thinking. We are, to a very considerable degree, what the force of circumstances make us. Of course we do not feel that this is so, the fact is it is extremely difficult for some of us to believe it, yet, nevertheless, the fact is so evident that we cannot well avoid the conclusion. To fully realize the truthfulness of the assertion, let us suppose ourselves to be the child of the roving Arab or the benighted African. Would we not be an Arab or an African too? Not because in our veins flowed the Arabian or African blood, but because we were brought up and surrounded by the same circumstances. It is true, the contrast in our case is not so great but the principle is the same, our minds are greatly biased by surrounding circumstances, whether right or wrong, good or bad. In consideration of this fact, supposing all to be equally honest, does it not enforce upon us the necessity of doing justice to all.

Even in the "One Body," the Church of Christ, different views obtain among us, not because we desire to differ, but because we cannot help it. It is true, the "One Spirit" presents to us the same light and truths, but on account of our dissimilar organizations they are differently received, generate different impressions and result in slightly different opinions, especially in things not clearly set forth in divine revelation. For these things we should make great allowance and be slow to condemn those who differ from us. I am glad that this spirit is made manifest and is growing among us, especially am I glad to see the PILGRIM taking such a wise course in regard to issues now before the Brotherhood. To give fairly, both sides of all questions discussable in our periodicals is to do justice to all, and to accept those different views with due allowance for the circumstances that called them forth and in love, is the spirit of Christ.

A BROTHER.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

"Peter, therefore, was kept in Prison but prayer was made without ceasing by the church unto God for him." It appears after King Herod had killed James with the sword, when he saw that it pleased the Jews he proceeded to take Peter also.

This was Herod Agrippa the son of Aristobulus and grandson of Herod the Great. He was a nephew to Herod Antipas who beheaded John the Baptist and closely related to Herodias also. He was made King by the Emperor Caligula and was put in possession of all the Territory formerly held by his uncle Philip.

After he killed James he took Peter because he supposed these two to be pillows on which the great cause rested and if these were removed the building must necessarily come down. Peter was delivered to four Quadrenions of soldiers, sixteen, four companies of four men each, who had the care of the prison, and the four watches of the night also. Peter being cast into prison, he now lay bound and sleeping, bound with two chains, his right arm being bound to the left arm of one of the soldiers, and his left arm being bound to the right arm of the other. This was the Roman method of guarding their prisoners.

This was undoubtedly in the city Jerusalem, and as Jerusalem was surrounded by three permanent walls, and the prison included, also made four places to watch for the four companies of soldiers.

While Peter was thus sleeping and the soldiers also, all unconscious of any thing that might happen unto them, there was an angel dispatched from heaven in the rapidity of lightning and came upon him, and a light shined in the prison and he smote Peter on the side, he struck him in such a way as was just enough to wake him from his sleep and his chains fell off from his hands. It would appear that the two soldiers were unconscious of what was going on. He was now commanded to gird himself and bind on his sandals and follow the angel. He wist not what it meant but supposed himself to be in a dream. He now passing through the different wards, comes to the Great Iron Gate which is said by critics to be a Gate of twenty men's power to open, but to his great astonishment it opened of its own accord, and they went on passing through the street and forthwith the angel departed from him. It was at this time that Peter comes to himself and says: "Now I know of a surety that the Lord had sent his angel and delivered me." And when he had considered and weighed everything and was fully satisfied of the divine interposition, he went to the house of Mary the mother of John, where the church had conveined together praying for his release, without ceasing. When Peter knocked at the door, which had undoubtedly been kept shut for fear of the Jews, a damsel came to hearken by the name of Rhoda, and when she knew Peter's voice she opened not the door for joy but ran and told how Peter stood before the door, but he contined knocking till they opened the door, and when they saw him they were astonished.

Now we conclude that all this was brought about by the prayers of the church. Oh how fervently they were eugaged for their dear brother and prisoner, and by sending their repeated appeals to heaven without ceasing, God heard their petitions and sends an angel to release him. Oh what emotion, what joy among this little flock. Brethren and sister, will we not continue to pray for brethren and sisters who may now be imprisoned by satan? And what shall I say to those brethren and sisters who neglect this duty? I feel to say to you, as one that loves your souls dearly, may God help you to gain confidence enough in him that you can call on his great and holy name for he will not hold you guiltless.

Now as soon as it was day there was no small stir among the soldiers what had become of Peter.

When Herod had sought him and found him not, he examined the keepers and commanded that they should be killed as he pretended to believe that Peter's escape was through their own neglect.

Jailors and Watchmen ordinarily suffer the kind of punishment which should have been inflicted on the prisoner whose escape they were supposed to have favored. It was probably not decided in the mind of the King in what way to execute Peter, but undoubtedly he expected to bring it about in the way it would please the Jews best, and thus he found a way to execute the keepers of the prison.

Thus we can see that among the ungodly there is no safety, that earthly Kings are not only unreasonable but also unjust towards those who are under their special employ. Between them and the subjects there is no middleman or mediator to plead their cause or hear their prayers. How much better then is our condition when we have the assurance that we have no high priest to approach who cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities but one who in all things had been tempted as we are. Then let us, with the unmistakable example before us, boldly approach the throne of grace freely assured that whatsoever we ask in faith, nothdoubting, we shall receive.

The High School.

In No. 34 of the PILGRIM is an article on the above subject which we would have passed by, were it not that the author, like may others, entirely misconstrues the object of education. Education from educere means to lead forth—to draw out, and not to pour in or to stuff. We educate to give strength and capacity to the mind and not to fill it with facts, theories and principles, though many facts and truths may be gathered in the process of mental development. The educator does nothing more nor less than furnish to the mind that food which is necessary to develop those powers which God has placed within; and, to withhold a certain amount of mental food from our children to prevent their minds from growing larger, is as heinous a crime before God as to withhold material food from their bodies to prevent them from growing to a proper size, simply because we happen to be dwarfs.

This writer objects to high schools because he says, they are unauthorized by Scriptures. Why does he not immediately turn around and say he advocates them because the Scriptures nowhere condemn them? One is just as logical as the other. If he has adopted the principle of making use of nothing which is not clearly pointed out by the Scriptures, how can he without violating those principles make use of the press to spread his ideas before the public? Does he find printing presses better authorized by Scriptures than high schools?

Again he says, "It is evident that, emulation and exultation has been the invariable fruits of a high school enterprise with every church." Surely he cannot be acquainted with the society of Friends who have maintained their own high schools for more than a hundred years and still maintain their simplicity of speech and general dress.

Again he asserts that he would patronize an institution of learning outside the pale of our church rather than one within. All I have to say to this is, that our tastes differ. I would sooner have my children under the influence of the Brethren while they acquire an education and he prefers to have his under the influence of some other church, that is the difference between us, and may be a mere matter of taste.

The allusion to the Mennonites by your writer was an unfortunate one for his side of the question. Having been brought up by one of the numerous branches of the Mennonites I happen to know something about them, and beg leave to state that they were not perfectly united, even in the day of their founder Menno Simon; and, not long after his day, the Amish faction severed itself from the mother church and, though it is one of the smallest churches in America it is the most divided—numbering about ten thousand souls, it is split into five divisions. They have never had any high school among them nor even a single classical scholar. One faction enforces the "old order" so strictly as to prohibit its members from using such worldly utensils as grain drills, reapers and threshing machines. All these factions of these Amish Mennonites enforce strict plainness of dress, but neither their plainness nor their want of education could save them from the most woeful divisions and subdivisions. The truth of the matter is, want of better education is the cause of all their divisions.

Your writer also states that well educated members were needed in the church, but throughout his article he holds to the very novel idea that members educated by the enemies of our church were more efficient than those educated by ourselves.

Before I can accept his views I want to see the Brethren establish a good school, put it in charge of sound brethren and give it a fair trial. Never condemn before trial, but, "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good."

S. Z. SHARP.

PRIDE.

Pride, like many other evils proceeds from within, out of the heart and defiles the man, Mark, VII. 22. If we examine the Scriptures we find that pride is from the enemy, the devil for through pride he first transgressed and fell thereby. After this, we find his next move was to implant this foul spirit into the minds of angels, he succeeded and they also fell, all those that gave heed to the seducing spirit. We next hear of him in the garden of Eden endeavoring to instill this same spirit into our mother Eve. By using much guile he again succeeded and as a result, they also fell and were driven out of the garden. It was pride that gave place to the desire to become wise like gods and to accept the condition by which their eyes should be opened. Their eyes were truly opened but they were made to see what they did not expect or desire. The first was that they were naked. Second, that they were deceived. Third, that the serpent—the devil—was their greatest enemy. Fourth, that they had done a great wrong in disobeying God and fifth, that they, in consequence, would be driven out of the garden and be to earn their bread by the sweat of their face and to endure many sorrows and privations of which they never before had heard. All this was the result of giving heed to the spirit of pride. Thus we can easily determine the origin of this greatest of all evils that now threatens the destruction of the world.

Pride was the first sin and will be the last one to overcome. Well has it been said; O thou detestable vice, the source of so great an evil, from which none can deliver us but the Lamb of God. Pride, by nature, exists in all men to a greater or less degree as long as they are unregenerated—have not yet been changed from the natural to the spiritual man in Christ Jesus. As long as we are proud we cannot be a child of God for by pride we cannot please God, therefore to please him and meet his divine approbation we must become humble.

Brethren and sisters, let us be on our guard, lest we also be overtaken by this evil spirit and thus become entangled in the meshes of the net which satan has set for our destruction. He is very cunning and excellent of speech and will tell you many things that will have the semblance of truth but are full of guile. His first advice is, do not be so careful about complying with every little command, it is not neccessary to be so particular about little things, such as the hair, dressing, &c., if the heart is only right all is right. But we should remember that it takes something to make and keep the heart right. God has told us what we shall and what we shall not do. If we are obedient and do right the heart is right, if not, the heart is not right and as God resisted our first parents for disobedience so will he resist us if we obey not his word. Pride is sin. the fruits of which is seen on the outward of the person. There is no use of talking about a good heart wrapped all around with sin. A good heart does not desire such things neither will it put such a sign out As a rule we judge that which is within from that which is without and when we see the sign of sin on the outside we suppose there is a little in the heart. "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace to the humble.

THE BEARD.

The question of wearing the beard has been agitated for some time past, and while it may not be relative to salvation, it may still have some moral influence in connection with religion, hence it may not be out of place to give it a passing notice.

In our humble opinion, the beard being worn all over the face, or full, is out of the question of custom, simply because it is natural, and requires no planting, no culture, nor anything else, but let alone.

Every Bible reader knows that man was made in the image and likeness of God, then we naturally suppose that the beard has its place in that image and consequently we disfigure that image whenever we impair the beard, it being natural. If man was willing to be just as God made him, he would of course not "mar the corners of his beard." Mar means to hurt, to impair, or to shape differently. Hence we understand that we should not disturb the shape of our beards, but simply leave them to shape themselves—so to speak—just as much so as any other part of the body, and as God made it.

But one will say, if I were perfect I would wear a full beard.

Is there a shadow of evidence in the Bible where we should wear a type of imperfection? We think not, but on the contrary Christ tells us, "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." Matt. 5:48. And Paul tells us to "Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace" "till we all come in the unity of faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man unto the measure, of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Eph. 4: 13.

From the above we infer that we need not portray any imperfections, but should rather strive to become perfect, even unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

And it is also asserted that a full beard is not nice, decent, nor clean. What God has made (clean) call thou not unclean.

As we have said that the wearing of the full beard cannot be termed a human custom, because it is natural, and a part of that likeness which God gave man of himself. With the same propriety we assert that the cutting of the beard—we care not what the shape may be—is after the custom of men. It is a custom of the world to cut and shape the beard, and not a natural consequence, and I don't see that it makes much difference how the beard is cut, since it is only custom anyway, and it is fashion that does all the cutting.

It may be proper to notice whether the beard has a purpose or not. We are inclined to think it has. First, it is a grand distinguishing point between the sexes. Second, it is a mark of manhood, or shows when the person has arrived at manhood. And lastly, it is generally agreed that it is healthy to wear a full beard. So we say that God had a design in the beard, and when we impair the beard we interfere with that design.

Then again, conscience is talked about in wearing the beard. There need be no conscience in wearing the beard, for it is of itself natural, but there must necessarily be some conscience in cutting the beard, for it is conscience that dictates the shape, and it is cut for conscience sake. But on the other hand it will grow if we have consciences or not.

It does not appear that the wearing of the beard was ever called in question among the children of Israel when they were directly under the control and under the immediate government of God himself. But it seems that all the old fathers in Israel wore their beards and that full too. And according to history Christ and the apostles all wore the full beard. Who ever said that they were not decent.

Then if Christ gave us the example in wearing the beard, and never said "cut it" why should we cavil about a certain cut, or cut at all. Who will say how it should, or must be cut or what the particular cut is?

Talk about baptizing just as Christ did; talk about washing feet just as Christ did; talk about eating the Lord's supper just as Christ did; and talk about saluting the brethren with a holy kiss just as Christ did, and then talk about wearing the beard just as Christ did not. He gave the example in that as well as in other things.

Now in conclusion I would say if the beard is not essential to salvation, why talk about it at all, and if it be essential, then why talk about a cut, for if we take examples and Scripture we find that cuts are ruled entirely out of the question. But if one will cut for conscience sake, and another will wear the beard full because Christ did, let the first ask no questions for conscience sake.

HAPPINESS.

Some sagacious person has truthfully observed, that, "Health, Wealth and Happiness, are the three common pursuits of man." This we believe is the great pursuit of all who enter this world, yet Alas! how few, how very few, confess that they have found real happiness.

Many indeed, are possessed with health and wealth and yet lack this coveted prize, happiness. It must be acknowledged that mankind has the capacity of being happy, and that it is possible for him to contribute to the happiness of others, and yet few are really happy, some indeed fancy themselves so in the hoarding of wealth, others look for it everywhere. The poor loath their own portion and envy the happiness which they imagine, is the boon of the rich. The rich, who are possessed of unbounded wealth sigh, as they look upon the dwellings of the poor, and say "they are happier than we."

Wether we question the inmate of the palace, or the occupant of the most miserable hovel, the reply is the same "not happy." And why not happy? We will not affect to answer unanswerable questions. This, however, we observe by the way, that the belief of a Being infinitely wise, powerful, and good, the faith in an all ruling Providence contributes to the happiness of man in an eminent degree. Without this their is no real happiness, in short the Christian is eminently happier than other men, whether he is rich or poor. Without faith in God, and a belief that Providence superintends the whole chain of events, man must necessarily be in a state of anxiety, he is daily subject to calamities and distressing events. But the Christian man or woman believes that nothing can come to pass without the direction of divine goodness. In the midst of sickness and calamity the Christian can live a life of joy and happiness, if he meets a reverse of fortune, if he loses his all of this world's goods he still can be happy; he not only enjoys the present good, he looks far beyond the vicissitudes of this transitory life, the glorious reward to the righteous is, constantly kept in view. He is happy to know that life is of short duration here, only a moment of time compared to that never ending eternity of unceasing bliss and unalloyed happiness, joyfully he anticipates the time when this mortal must put on immortality," when all worldly temptations must cease. He knows that the eternal purposes of God must be fulfilled, calmly he looks upon the closing scenes of his short life, in perfect peace and happiness he bows his head in death, he passes over the Jordan of death, his immortal soul wings its flight to that haven of rest, to regions of immortal glory. There! yes there, in yonder celestal mansions, arrayed in white and shining garments, his tranquil soul will enjoy sweet communion with its Maker and its God. How sublime, and how animating is the thought. Will not the Christian overlook all temporary cares, and ever center his thoughts to that inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. But how different with the man, who though he possessed health and wealth, knows that he is totally excluded from any happiness beyond his present existence. He does not anticipate a future and more glorious state after death. His happiness is not real even here, and suddenly and unexpectedly, the terrible realites of eternity are upon him.

Oh! what agony of soul. What unspeakable terror will seize him as he sees his doom approaching. Can mortal tongues tell, can mortal hearts feel the solemnity of that moment. Oh what direful shrieks will be heard when he hears the terrible voice of God pronounce the soul rending sentence, "Depart from me, ye cursed into everlasting fire." "Depart," oh what horrible anguish will pierce the soul when that irrevocable word is pronounced, it will not be depart to a world of sensual pleasure, such as he once inhabited, but to regions of eternal despair and everlasting punishment.

We would then most seriously exort all who are in pursuit of happiness, listen with earnestness to the sacred commands of God, and do not for the sake of such fleeting happiness as this world affords forfeit the enjoyment of perfect happiness in the celestial world on high.

A Collection of Lively Stones.

Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. 1 Peter, 2:5.

To prepare for the erection of a structure, intended to be set forth as a world's model, and to defy the inspection of all the universe; what a scrutinous selection, and immense collection of material must be required! How rich a field must that be, or how great and precious a treasure hid in the field, that is sufficient for such a work. A treasure is a collection of precious things. If stones, can any stone excel a lively stone? Whatever the object that is to represent a constituent of that "spiritual house," even a stone which neither animal, vegetable, nor spiritual life, must of its lifeless, dormant state, awake, revive, come forth, be collected in, join in, correspond in size, shape, consistency, and become subject to the great master builder. How could we then, who claim or profess to constitute and represent such a "spiritual house, an holy priesthood," how could we, I say, then be in any degree indisposed to be often collected together, "to offer up spiritual sacrifices."

The duties of the holy priesthood are daily, they are frequent, and they are very sacred. Can we who offer up the sacred sacrifices, be negligent of his duties at times? No, no, and to whom does this apply in our priesthood? Ye, says the text, and it is the church the apostle addressed here, and not any particular part, such as the clergy alone, but all ye who are as lively stones, built up into a spiritual house. Hence it now appears why we cannot be recognized as components of the spiritual house who forsake the assembling of ourselve together as the manner of some is, and can one dare to be indiffent to a position in the offering up of sacrifices "acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." Who has himself sanctified things to be offered, which are equally richly possessed by rich and poor, by high and low. No one need be seen to offer up a turtle dove or a young pigeon, by those who offer bulls and goats, simply because they are not rich like their neighbor. Then see how gracious and how kind is our Great High Priest, and how impartial is the great Master Builder of the spiritual house we are honered and called to be components. Should it be our lot however to require a dressing in order to fit the honorable place that He has assigned us, will we resist and finally be rejected, and cast away, or will we count it an honor to pass through the hands of a dresser, submitting to his will and command and attain unto a position high and nigh "the head of the corner?" In trying to fit a stone, and well nigh ready to pass it for perhaps the best shaped one of a large number, only that it is for this reason to occupy a very conspicuous place, a few more gentle taps, and behold a rend least expected and rending the stone quite useless and rejected.

Lively stones. In the life of a stone is implied first a will, the power of choice; choosing to be collected or not collected. And if collected, a disposition to submit to the requirement of whatever law or order governing the great work in which it is employed. We are sometimes lost in wonder and surprise, that we cannot more appreciate that greatest of favors that our kind Father could in His providence confer upon us, namely the power of free moral agency.

In the life of the stone is implied secondly, the power of bringing into effect, the object of choice. To choose to have a position in the "holy priesthood," or to be a "follower of the Lamb," is one thing; but to make use of the means prescribed and provided is quite another. To lay hold aright, and execute the proper powers in the hold are too, very different. Demas was doubtless in the right way when he accompanied St. Paul. (Philemon 24,—Col. 4: 24.) But see him two years later having deserted the apostles, through love of this present world, and gone to Thessalonica. 2. Tim. 4: 10.

In the stone itself is implied, steadfastness, stability and strength. "None of these things move me," should be a motto inscribed upon a Christian character, as lasting as the inscriptions found in the modern Oriental dissoveries. It is said, that in the secret chamber of the conspirators of darkness, is located a massive stone emblematic of that remarkable reservedness and trueness to the great WE, that characterize members of that craft. Let us keep a fair view of the Chief Corner Stone, once "disallowed and rejected;" but now having become the head of the corner stone. Let us so imitate his character, and so live of and by Him, that we may become partakers of his nature, having escaped the corruptions which are in the world through lust."

It is true, a stone is metaphoric of hardness and insensibility; but in the case of Nabal it is said that "his heart died within him and he became as a stone." 1 Sam. 25: 37. But his heart having died he could not have represented a lively stone. Oh, for a live heart in us, as components of that spiritual house—hearts filled with brotherly kindness and charity; a heart that can be elicited in sympathy, and that can send forth a tear to mingle in those of the afflicted brother, sister, friend or foe,—hearts great and bold who, like Bunyan, can pass hard by the lion, seeing he is in chains,—hearts that like that of St. Paul's, a great propelling power through danger of every kind. "Perils of waters, perils of robbers, perils by his own countrymen, perils by the heathens, perils in the city, perils in the wilderness, perils in the sea, perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger, in thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." Oh! for more invitations; nay more such real stones.

Danger of Half-Knowledge.

The pretice of taking advantage of the early morning for travelling is a necessity in the East, in order to get the full benefit of the cooler hours of the day, and to have time for the rest and repast at noon, when traveling would be intolerably oppressive, and often dangerous. But while this is the unvarying practice when proceeding day by day on a pilgrimage, it is never done on the first day of a departure. On that day, the the party does not leave untill within a few hours of sunset, and often pitches its tent the first night within sight of the place which it has left. This was our uniform experience. The custom, which has all the authority of a law, is very ancient, and allusion to it can be discovered in Jewish writers at least a century before Christ. The reason in which it appears to have originated was the very simple one that it, on the evening of unloading the baggage, it was found that anything of value had been left behind, or anything indispensible to the journey unprovided, there might yet be time to run and procure it. This custom illustrates one of the most beautiful passages in the history of our Lord. When Joseph and Mary were on their way back to Jerusalem, on the first occasion of their visit with Jesus to the Temple at the feast, they discovered, when halting at sunset, that their wonderous child was not in the company.

This fact had long been used as a stock objection with infidels, and with interpreters who dwell on the border-land of infidelity, and it has even been picked up and appropriated by Strauss, as casting a doubt on the reality of the entire narrative. Was it credible, it has been said that our Lord's parents could have taken a long day's journey, and never once have inquired for a child so deserving of their love? This is another instance of that sceptical quarrelling with the Scripture narrative which has its origin in half-knowledge. Joseph and Mary, it is probable, were only a few miles distant from the city when they made their painful discovery. We saw Jerusalem on the first day of our encampment on our way southeastward.—Dr. A. Thompson.

A Mother's Counsel

Mary Clarke, wife of the learned Adam Clarke, was the mother of six sons and six daughters; and the love she bore to them would astonish many in these days. To one of her sons, she wrote the following instructive words: "Do nothing carelessly, and then, I venture to say, that, with the ability you have, you will do most things well. Be exact in all you do, nor let the least matter pass you unexamined. In your reading, too, investigate your subject, and be not satisfied with skimming on the surface of things, nor make an attempt to grasp the whole, without attending to every part in order. Paying attention to particulars, as well as to generalties, will by degrees make you a habit of mental observation, which at the same time will deepen your knowledge. But endeavor to gain healthy wisdom. Do not forget to bear you needs and your heart in private before God, that he may grant you his grace, and direct all your future path in life."

Where Beauty is Found.

Beauty is not found where vanity sits as a queen upon the uplifted head. She is not found where envy and scorn looketh through the eye. Her dwelling place is not upon the pouting, scoffing or idle talking lips. Neither does she live in close alliance with a fashion twisted and deformed lady. In all this satan mars the "human from divine."

But she may be found where sweetness of temper walks in smiles; where an amiable disposition sheds a radiance upon the cheek, she lingers long. In those glancing eyes expensive chastity in the soul, she may be found. In that voice so full of sympathy and love for the suffering her steps may be heard.

In the "form divine" where humility, submission and all the Christian graces thrive together in harmony. Beauty is at home. Virtue is her wreath of fame and religion her crown of Glory!

Did you ever consider the significance of the names of the places connected with the early career of Jesus Christ? He was born in Bethlehem, in the house of bread. He was brought up at Nazareth, the place of shrubs and sprouts. He is a tender shoot out of the stem of Jesse. He agonized at Gethsemane, the oil press. "He trod the wine press alone, and of the people there was none with him."—Dr. John Hall.

To Delinquents.

The time is now here that all who have not yet sent us their subscription should at once do so if possible. We of course promised to wait and have done so willingly, but any one who is able to pay at all, can surely by this time raise the small sum of one dollar and a half. We have a paper bill that should have been paid before now, and must be paid soon. If our patrons will not pay us soon, we will be obliged to borrow the money and pay interest for it, which seems unfair, when we have at least $1200 that is honestly due us. Now brethren this is really a fact, and you surely do not want us to suffer in this way. Please think of this matter. It is surely a small matter to raise $1.50, and we are inclined to think that many neglect it on account of it being so small a sum, but you should remember that it amounts to considerable with us. We want to pay our debts as every Christian should, and this we can do if our patrons will pay us. We mean this only for those who can pay. If there are any who cannot really pay they can feel assured that we will still freely wait on them.

There are some who owe us for hymn books, and we would be much pleased, if it is possible for them to do so, to remit at their earliest convenience. J. B. N.

A Visit to Altoona.

As is known by some of our readers these appointments are filled by the ministers of the adjoining congregations in turn, but as under present arrangement the number is not great enough to have services every Sunday it is expected that these turns will be filled by such as are further away. On last Sunday, it seems, there was no regular minister to fill the appointment and a request was sent to us. Accordingly on Sunday morning we took the train for that purpose. Perhaps there is no calling in life that is so effected by surrounding influences as that of the ministers. We in this case have not reference to the day or perhaps week before, but to the time immediately preceding the labor of preaching. Taking a seat in a well filled railroad coach with the pleasure of enjoying a cool morning breeze under ordinary circumstances would not have been considered unfavorable to religious musing and holy thoughts, but the condition in which we found our coach on entering was calculated to generate quite an opposite train of thought. We had entered uninviting coaches before, but this one seemed to be an exception to all others and it was not a smoking coach neither. Part of it was excusable as far as the passengers were concerned but we were made to wonder even at this, that so respectable company as the Pa. C. should not make provisions for such exigencies and not outrage the senses of a whole coach of passengers for hours when a few minutes labor might remove the cause. But there was another kind of pollution in the coach for which the passengers were not excusable, we mean, the large puddles of tobacco filth in the aisle. How men who claim to have even ordinary breeding can be guilty of such an outrage on the fine sensibilities of ladies cannot be solved by modern etiquette. The appearance alone was extremely disgusting but the stench arising therefrom greatly aggravated the insult to common courtesy. To meditate profitably on a sermon, in such an element is more than we could manage to do, and we felt greatly relieved when we reached the point of our destination.

At or near the station we were met and conducted to the house of a sister whose name we cannot now remember, where we were pleasantly entertained until the hour for services. We are glad to say that the prospects at this place are getting quite hopeful, that the congregation is respectably large, circumstances considered, and still increasing. On this occasion we had quite an encouraging congregation who gave due respect to our efforts. In the afternoon we met with the Sabbath-school where we were much pleased to see the number of children present and the interest manifested, by officers, teachers and scholars. We were told, by the Secretary, that there were in 60 scholars present besides teachers and spectators. This is certainly encouraging when it is remembered that it is the outgrowth of a very small beginning. After the recitations were through, we were called upon to deliver a short address which we did with pleasure, notwithstanding it is a difficult matter to address and at the same time command the interest of so young an audience. We were favorably impressed with the school and cannot help but believe that if the golden opportunity is made use of the result will be favorable. But it will require earnest and careful labor in connection with a favorable and godly influence exerted by the members. Example, in a place like this will accomplish more than precept. Especially should this be so with those who lead in this important work. Children are close observers and naturally expect to look to their teachers or advisors as examples proper to be followed. If they are disappointed in this, confidence is lost and as a result, an indifference to the teaching. However, we have no such apprehensions in this case as all connected with the school seem to be in earnest and desirous of accomplishing good.

The members in this place are kind and sociable and with them we spent a pleasant and, we hope, profitable Sunday. At 5:50 P. M. we again took the train for home. On entering the train, although the coach was about the same, we found ourselves in quite a different element to that of the morning, showing that much of our enjoyments in this life depends on the society and surroundings in which our lots are cast. Our mind was also in a different frame. While going up we had the heavy responsibilities of preaching burdening our mind. This duty we had now discharged and we felt free. Our mind was unburdened for the time, a condition that is realized by such only as have felt the pressure of ministerial duties. Our homeward trip was exceedingly enjoyable and our meditations were of the lovely character. Everything by the way seemed to show forth the goodness of God. On our arrival home we learned that family had just returned from the James Creek Church where they informed us they had a profitable waiting before the Lord.

STAND FOR TRUTH.

SELECTED BY ANNIE J. BOOK.

Stand for truth and stand forever
Give not up the right—no, never!
Bravely battle if assailed,
Think how Right has oft prevailed.

Stand alone if others cower;
Fail not in the trial hour;
Yet the victory will be
On the side of truth and thee

O! be brave, be firm, be wise,
Here alone true manhood lies;
Men who stand when thunders rattle
Quitting not till after battle.

Welcome, welcome, hate and scorn
Ye are of foul envy horn;
Rail and rage, O graceless band
Still the firmer will we stand

Dearer far the sense of right
Than the smiles of power and might,
Yes, we'll stand for truth forever,
Yielding to the foeman never.

"How shall I get rid of my habit of using Tobacco?"

Thousands propound this question, and thousands try to solve it by well-nigh innumerable expedients. During twenty years of Anti-Tobacco work, we have witnessed the struggles, sometimes the agonizing struggles of multitudes to rid themselves of this despotic habit.

Some who have an "Iron Will" break this habit square off, play the man, and have comparatively but little trouble.

Some try to break it off by degrees, use less and less, and this tampering method sometimes succeeds.

Some resort to substitutes. They use gentian root—they common red plantain—chew chamomile flowers, various spices, boneset leaves, the bark of wild hickory, tarred rope, stale tobacco, and every thing almost upon which they can lay their hands; some have been cured by a fit of sickness—a fever perhaps has given them an utter aversion to this bewitching poison, and they have repressed the uprising appetite and it has never become their master again.

Some good men impressed with the idea that the habit is a Sin, a sin against God and nature, make it a matter of prayer, and God, they believe, gives them strength to renounce it, claiming that he heals the sick now who call upon him, as in Apostolic times.

Some, of a supercilious turn, wag their heads, boast they can "give it up any time," but never do, and die in their sins.

Some, even ministers of the gospel, under the pressure of reform drop the habit and say nothing about it—they are dumb converts.

Some, more generous, more noble, on renouncing it, gladly make it known, others listen to their story, copy their example, and the reform goes on.

For any man to renounce a long indulged, tyrannical habit is no trifling piece of business. General Grant with five hundred thousand men at his beck, conquered the rebellion but can General Grant conquer his cigar?

The enquiry is being constantly urged upon us, "How can I get rid of Tobacco?" We answer once for all, we have no confidence in the prescriptions of quackery, and have but little confidence in antidotes, our own or any other, unless a man is a Man and has a will of his own.

We say to all who consult us: 1. Resolve, "live or die" that you will use no more tobacco in any form. 2. Use a nervine, gentian root or red plantain, a short time to brace up the relapsed nerves. 3. Excercise the glorious attribute of a moral agent, free will, have a mind of your own and play the man. 4. Look to God, our Savior, lean upon him with all your might, and you will come off conqueror and more than conqueror. "We speak that we do know and testify," etc. G. T.

Finding a Girl in the Bible.

An English town missionary a short time ago related a remarkable incident which may interest many readers of the Wesleyan. There was a lodging-house in his district, which he had long desired to enter, but was deterred from so doing by his friend who feared that his life would be thereby endanged. He became at length so uneasy that he determined to risk all consequences, and try to gain admission. So one day he gave a somewhat timid knock at the door, in response to which a coarse voice roared out, "Who's there?" and at the same moment a vicious-looking woman opened the door and ordered the man of God away. "Let him come in, and see who he is and what he wants," growls out the same voice. The missionary walked in, and bowing politely to the rough-looking man whom he had just heard speak, said, "I have been visiting most of the houses in this neighborhood to read with and talk to the people about good things. I have passed your door as long as I feel I ought, for I wish also to talk with you and your lodgers." "Are you what is called a town missionary?" "I am, sir," was the reply. "Well then," sit down and hear what I am going to say. I will ask you a question out of the Bible. If you answer me right, you may call at this house, and read and pray with us or our lodgers as often as you like; if you do not answer me right, we will tear the clothes off your back and tumble you neck and heels into the street. Now what do you say to that? for I am a man of my word." The missionary was perplexed, but at length quietly said: "I will take you." "Well then," said the man, "here goes. Is the word girl in any part of the Bible? if so, where is it to be found, and how often? That is my question."

"Well, sir, the word girl is in the Bible, but only once, and may be found in the words of the prophet Joel, III. 3. The words are, 'And sold a girl for wine that they might drink.'"

"Well," replied the man, "I am dead beat; I durst have bet five pounds you could not have told."

"And I could not have told you yesterday," said the visitor. "For several days I have been praying that the Lord would open me a way into this house, and this very morning, when reading the Scriptures in my family, I was surprised to find the word girl, and got the Concordance to see if it occurred again, and found it did not. And now, sir, I believe that God did know, and does know what will come to pass, and surely his hand is in this for my protection and your good."

The whole of the inmates were greatly surprised, and the incident has been overruled to the conversion of the man, his wife, and two of the lodgers.—American Wesleyan.

Her Silence Saved.

"I remember," said a young man, "being in company with several thoughtless girls. Among them however, there was one exception; a serious, quiet, and beautiful woman, whose religious opinions were well known, and whose pen had for a long time spoken eloquently in the cause of truth and virtue through the columns of the village paper. Suddenly I conceived the thought of bantering her on religious subjects, and with the fool-hardiness of youth and recklessness of impiety, launched forth with some stale infidel objections that none but the fool who saith in his heart, 'There is no God,' would venture to reiterate. The flock of silly goslings about me laughed and tittered, and I, encouraged by their mirth, grew bold, and repeated my innuendoes, occasionally glancing slyly toward the principal butt of all my fun. She did not seem to notice me at all; but she did not smile, did not look away, and did not look at me.

"Still I continued my impious harangue, thinking that she must refute something, she would not surely hear her own holy faith held up to ridicule by a beardless boy. The snickerers around me gradually began to glance toward her. Her face was so quiet, so even solemn in its quiet, that seriousness stole over them, and I stood alone, striving by my own senseless laughter to buoy up my fast sinking courage.

"Still she never spoke or smiled—scarcely moved; her immobility grew awful; I began to stutter—to pause—to feel cold and strange—I could not tell how. My courage oozed off; my heart grew faint—I was conqured.

"That night after I went home, in reflecting over my fool-hardy adventure, I could have scourged myself. The sweet angelic countenance of my mute accuser came up before me in the vision of the night; I could not sleep Nor did I rest till some days after, I went to the house of the lady I had insulted and asked her pardon. Then she spoke to me, how mild! how Christianly! how sweetly!

"I was subdued, melted down; and it was not long after that I became, I trust, an humble Christian, and looked back to my miserable unbelief with horror.

"Her silence saved me. Had she answered with warmth, with sarcasm with sneer, or with rebuke. I should have grown stronger in my bantering and more determined in my opposition. But she was silent, and I felt as if my voice was striving to make itself heard against the mighty words of an Omnipotent God! O! how often would it be better, if instead of vain argument or out dispute, the Christian would use the magic of silence!"—Selected.

Attention in Prayer.

A pious Jew while on a journey, perceived that the hour of the evening prayer had arrived. He stopped, and prayed to God. Lost in his meditation, his heart lifted heavenwards he did not reply to a nobleman who, passing that way, stood still and saluted him. Enraged at the Jew's apparent rudeness, the nobleman waited until he had finished his prayers, and then angrily addressed him: "Wretch! why didst thou not return my salutation? I have a good mind to punish thee for thy incivility." "Friend," the Hebrew replied, "If thou wert standing before thy king and spoke to him, and one of thy friends passed thee and saluted thee, wouldst thou leave abruptly the king and turn to thy friend?" "Certainly not; I would not dare do such a thing." "Now," said the Hebrew, "judge if have I done right or wrong in not returning thy salutation. I stood before the King of kings, the Almighty Creator of the world, offering to Him my prayer of supplication; how dared I leave Him and turn to thee?" "Thou hast done well," the nobleman said; "go thy way in peace."—From the Talmud.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

MANNERS FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

In silence I must take my seat,
And give God thanks before I eat;
Must for my food in patience wait,
'Till I am asked to hand my plate,
I must not scold, nor whine, nor pout,
Nor move my chair or place about.
With knife, or fork, or napkin flug, must not play, nor fuss, I sing.
I must not speak a useless word,
For children must be seen, not heard.
I must not talk about my food,
Nor fret if I don't think it good.
My mouth with food I must not crowd,
Nor while I am eating speak aloud.
Must turn my head to cough and sneeze,
And when I ask, say, "I you please."
The table-cloth I must not spoil,
Nor with my food my fingers soil.
Must keep my seat when I am done,
Nor round the table sport or run.
When told to rise, then I must put
My chair away with noiseless foot;
And lift my heart to God above,
In praise for all his wonderous love.

The Faithful Boy.

Gerhardt was a German shepherd boy; and a noble fellow he was, too, although he was very, very poor. One day he was watching his flock, which was feeding in a valley on the borders of a forest, a hunter came out of the woods and asked:

"How far is it to the nearest village?"

"Six miles, sir," replied the boy, "but the road is only a sheep-track, and very easily missed."

The hunter glanced at the crooked track, and then said:

"My lad, I am hungry, tired, and thirsty. I have lost my companions, and missed my way. Leave your sheep, and show me the road. I will pay you well."

"I cannot leave my sheep, sir," replied the boy. "They would stray into the forest, and be eaten by the wolves, or stolen by the robbers."

"Well what of that?" replied the hunter. "They are not your sheep. The loss of one or more wouldn't be much to your master, and I'll give you more money than you ever earned in a whole year."

"I cannot go, sir," rejoined Gerhardt, very firmly; "my master pays for my time, and he trusts me with his sheep. If I were to sell my time, which does not belong to me, and the sheep should get lost, it would be just the same as if I stole them."

"Well," said the hunter, "will you trust your sheep with me while you go to the village and get me some food and drink and a guide? I will take good care of them for you."

The boy shook his head. "The sheep do not know your voice, and —" here Gerhardt stopped speaking.

"Sir," said the boy, slowly, "you tried to make me false to my master. How do I know you would keep your word to me?

The hunter laughed; but he felt that the boy fairly silenced him. He said; "I see, my lad, that you are a good, faithful boy. I will not forget you. Show me the road, and I will try to follow it myself."

Gerhardt now offered the humble contents of his wallet to the hungry man, who, coarse as they were, ate them gladly. Presently his attendants came up, and then Gerhardt, to his surpprise, found that the hunter was the Grand Duke, who owned all the country round. The Duke was so pleased with the boy's honesty, that he sent for him shortly after, and had him educated. In after years Gerhardt became a very rich and powerful man, and he remained honest and true to his dying day.

Honesty, truth, and fidelity are precious jewels in the character of a child. When they spring from piety they are pure diamonds, and make their possessor very beautiful, very happy, very honorable, and very useful. May you, young readers, wear them as Gerhardt did! Then a greater than a Duke will befriend you, for the Great King will adopt you as his children, and you will become princes and princesses royal in the Kingdom of God.

Cookies on the Lower Shelf.

Some one asked Charlie whom he liked to visit best—Aunt Jane or Aunt Mary?

"Oh, Aunt Mary of course," said he, "'cause she keeps her cookies on the lower shelf."

Last Sabbath when I heard the Rev. Dr. S. preach, I thought of dear little Charlie's longing for cookies, and they put away on the upper shelf, or locked securely up. Dr. S. never took but one. The sermon and the prayer were all for grown up people. Not a sentence meant for the lambs, and nothing that would feed them. Some of them, oh! looked so hungry and tired. They were so uneasy: kept looking at the clock and wishing the meeting would ever stop. "He never even prayed for little boys and girls," said Charlie, when he got home, "and I don't like him a bit."

Ah, Rev. Doctor, you missed a chance to please the Master and feed the lambs.

Last Sabbath I sat near a Sunday School class of bright boys, and I think their teacher must have been one of the Aunt Janes. I know that her cookies, if she had any, were on the upper shelf. She asked questions from a book—they didn't believe in the uniform series here. Then she told what Scott and Henry and others taught, and when she had gone over all the questions in the book, she took Barnes's Notes (I know the dear old man would feel sorry, even in heaven, if it were possible to see his book used thus) and she filled up the time in reading from that. Such a rustling and looking into Sunday School books, and looking at the clock, and playing, and nodding, I never want to see again.

Be earnest, be faithful, be serious, but be cheerful and wide-awake. Love those dear little fellows, and let them know it. Please next Sunday give them cookies, or something fresh and good, and not any more dry, stale bread.—Sunday School Times.

Seeing the Point.

A boy returned from school one day, with the report that his scholarship had fallen below the usual average. "Well," said his father, "you have fallen behind your month have you?" "Yes, sir." How did that happen?" The father knew, if his son did not. He had observed a number of cheap novels scattered about the house, but he had not thought it worth while to say anything until a fitting opportunity should offer itself. A basket of apples stood on the floor, and he said: "Empty those appies and take the basket and bring it to me half full of chips. And now," he continued, "put those apples into the basket." When half the apples were replaced, the son said: "Father they roll off; I can't put in any more." "Put them in, I tell you." "But father I can't put them in." "Put them in! No, of course you can't put them in. Do you expect to fil a basket half full of chips, and then fill it with appl s? You said you didn't know why you fell behind at school, and I will tell you. Your mind is like that basket; it will not hold more than so much, and here you have been the past month filling it up with rubbish—worthless, cheap novels." The boy turned on his heels and whistled, and said, "Whew! I can see the point."

A Little Hero.

A gentleman, while passing through a street in New York, heard a child's voice from the basement, crying, "Help! help!" He ran in and found a little five-year old boy holding a bed-blanket around his sister, two years younger, who had caught her clothes on fire, and the little hero had succeeded in putting out the flames. The boy, in answer to the question why he wrapped the bed-blanket around his sister's burning clothes, said his Ma had told him that was the best way to put out fire, and as to why he cried "Held! help!" that he was afraid he could not do it, and wanted some one to help. He was then asked why he did not leave his sister and run into the streets and cry help. He answered with tears in his eyes, "No, I never would have left her. She was my sister. Had she burned up, I would have burned too."—Child's World.

—Of all the graces that adorn and dignify the human character amiability is perhaps the most prominent. Discretion and good nature are the material ingredients of this valuable quality.

—Be kind to those who are bending beneath the weight of bitter cares, and weary years of time.

—Meekness is a virtue by which a man may know a Christian better than by his name.

—He who has no money is poor; but he who has nothing but money is poorer.

—Temptations and trials are necessary as teachers.

—To seek the redress of grievances by going to law, is like sheep running for shelter to a bramble bush.

Correspondence.

Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

MEXICO, IND., Aug. 30, '74.

Dear Pilgrim :—

After wiping the tears from my eyes caused by reading Uncle Henry's article in No. 34, I take up my pen to drop a few thoughts that are passing through my mind.

Some think it not right that our brethren publish periodicals because our old brethren did not, but then who would not wish to read such articles as that just referred to? I do for one, because I know something about such bereavement, and such words bring the case fresh to our minds and cause us to set new resolutions—yes they do us good.

Then there is another article in the same No. that is worth any person's while to read, viz: Bro. Rosenberger's article on education. The whole article is made up of good reasoning and strong evidence on the side that he assumes to defend, and then there is nothing that those of adverse minds could take any offense at, unless they would be so presumptuous as not to be willing to allow others to defend their own principles.

Then again, we think the editors are worthy of commendation on account of their publishing all questions fairly, pro and con, no difference if they really meet their approbation or not. Some editors are too much inclined to make their paper their own medium, but if a paper is to be a church paper it should give all a hearing, and by so doing we are able to judge of the tenor of the brotherhood at large, and thereby a paper may become the medium of much good.

If some think there are some things published in our paper that should not be we would now suggest a remedy. Just take up your pens and produce something better, and my word for it, the good will always come first, and if there is enough good kept ahead there will be no cause for articles of not much merit appearing. By so doing you will do good in a two-fold manner. First, your good article will do good by it being read, and then it may keep out of the paper what you would think should not be published.

Again others think that the publishing of papers is just a speculation, such may or may not be the case, we do not know what it costs to publish a paper, but we are aware that it costs considerable, and surely they should live at their business just as well as at anything else. One thing we do know, that none of our publishers seem to be parsimonious, from the fact that they give time, until such time that persons can pay, and give free to those who are not able to pay, that thing itself creates confidence in our brethren of the press. And if they are willing to wait until we can pay, we ought to pay when we can surely. That is a better chance to get a paper than to take a political paper, for they have to be paid in advance generally, and some of our brethren who take political papers, pay more for them than it would cost to take the Brethren's paper, and read them too, and then argue that it is not right to take the Brethren's papers. What inconsistency! Now brethren let us "work together for good." It is not stipulated how we shall work—only for good—any means that we can employ that will work for good would be THE MEANS to employ.

There is much to be learned by reading the productions of our brethren,—good sermons we read frequently, good advices, very instructive lessons on various topics, any of which if we would put into practice we might grow better as we should in days and years. Many persons or members isolated from the main brotherhood are comforted by the visits of our papers by which means they can keep their minds freshened in the things that pertain to their eternal welfare.

But there are still other ways to do good. We can do good at home in our families, among our neighbors, &c. And in fact if we were always as ready and willing to do good as opportunity is afforded, there might be much more good done.

It might be interesting for the readers of the PILGRIM to know that the cause of the Lord is not at a standstill in this part of God's moral heritage. There has been during the summer several additions to the church, and the churches in general seem to be increasing slowly but steady, and the members seem to manifest great sincerity in the cause of Christ. Whenever there is a call for aid for the suffering they come forward at the call and comply with a cheerful hand. It may be that during the ensuing year we may all be tried as to our liberality, for it seems that in some parts of the country suffering will be inevitable unless relief comes from some other source. Incessant drouths, grasshoppers, chinch bug, hot winds and such like plagues have been more frequent this season, it appears, than ever before in this country. Old settlers say that there has been the least rain fall in this part of the country (Miami Co., Ind.) this season than ever before known, yet the crops are such that there will be plenty and to spare. Corn is rather under an average, but other things are almost if not quite average. The health we think is rather better than common this season of the year,—but few deaths, and what are, seem to be mostly among the little folks. J. B. LAIR.

Dear Pilgrim:—

As I did not have an opportunity of going to my own church this Sabbath, I concluded to go that of another persuasion, as I had but a short distance to go but I did not enjoy the services. The first thing done was to hold a collection. This looked to me like breaking the Sabbath as we are commanded to remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy. For the sustenance of our bodies we have six days in which to labor but many of the ministers who preach for salaries make the Sabbath the day in which they earn all their living, and to make it worse in many instances they rob their hearers of both their money and religion. They are made to pay money for that which is not food for the soul.

The minister to-day told his hearers that they need not expect to be saved by their works as some people do. If their who any expect to be saved by their works put them out from among you, have nothing to do with them. Christ never intended to put people in such a predicament as some do, in order to obtain salvation. All that he wants is to have people pour out their hearts in supplication and prayer to God and he himself will do the work. Oh, how inconsistant is this half truth doctrine. Truly, should we beware of false teachers. It is heart rending to think of the many precious souls that are deceived and led away by the craftiness of men.

LYDIA CLAPPER.

Yellow Creek, Pa.

Dear Pilgrim :—

As I am far away from my former companions I will pen a few lines to my dear brethren and sisters to let them know that I am still among the living. I, formerly had the privilege of going to church and hearing the word of God preached every Sunday but enjoy it no more as I do not get to meeting more than once a month and sometimes not more than once in two months, but God has still favored me above thousands who cannot enjoy even the privilege that I do. Notwithstanding our isolated condition I am still trying to serve the Lord and am determined to continue to put my trust in him who has said; "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." God is always ready to help in every time of need.

There are but a few brethren and sisters in this district, scattered around like stray sheep, but thanks be to God we have one to look to who is ever able and ready to come to our assistance in every time of need one who is able to save even to the uttermost.

I have had many trials and difficulties to encounter since I came to this place and now some of my sisters have been scoffed at on account of their plainness of dress, but we mind none of these things knowing that the time is coming when God will bring us all to account, when justice shall not linger, when every idle word will have to be accounted for. Let us think a moment on what Christ did for us, how he suffered and died that we might have life. If all this was done for our sake should we not be more watchful, more prayerful and ever hold ourselves in readiness to obey all his commands so that when he comes to gather his jewels home, we may be among the number? A knowledge of these thing affords great consolation to the child of God and should bear us up under the most trying circumstances.

MARRIED.

HAMBRIGHT—BRENEMAN.—On the 25th of August, 1874, George Hambright to Miss Fanny Breneman, at the house of the undersigned. Both of Lancaster Co., Pa. WM. HERTZLER.

DIED.

RITCHEY.—In the Hopewell arm of the Church, Bedford Co., Pa., August 6th, 1874, Tobias, infant son of brother Samuel and Betty Ritchey, aged 4 months and 2 days. Funeral occasion improved by Leonard Furry. LYDIA CLAPER.

SWARTZ.—In the Hopewell congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., September 7th, 1874, Christina Swartz, aged 86 years, 7 months and 6 days. Funeral discourse by John S. Rush and the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. DAVID S. CLAPPER.

BILLHIMER.—In the Fairview congregation, Ind., June 23rd, 1874, Matison M. son of Isaac and Salome Billhimer, aged 4 years, 3 months and 9 days. Funeral services by Isaac Cripe and J. W. Metzgar. ROBERT ATCHISON.

NOFFSINGER.—In the Hurricane Creek District, Bond Co., Ill., July 9, '74, our old and much esteemed brother, Eli Noffsinger, aged 80 years and 5 days. Funeral services by the servants of the church. J. H. GOODMAN.

MOWERER.—On the 19th of August, in Upton, Franklin Co., Pa. sister Hannah, wife of —— Mowerer, aged 79 years, 10 months and 4 days.

Sister Mowerer was an affectionate and devoted mother, and a sister in the Church. Her prayers and labor were not in vain. She had the satisfaction of seeing all her children, and many of her grand-children, consecrating their life to God. One of her daughters preceded, or went before her some seven months, to the spirit land.

Her comfort, when dying, was the assurance of a glorious immortality, in having kept the faith.

The occasion was improved by Eld. John Shank, Henry Coons, Jacob Price, the writer and others, from Rev. 13: 14.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Brethren of Wild Cat District, Ind., intend to hold their Lovefeast on the 21st of October.

—The Warriorsmark Congregation Blair Co., Pa., had two accessions lately.

—Bro. Isaac Billhimer's address will be changed from Pettit to Edna Mills, Clinton Co., Ind., after the 15th of September.

—The latest news from Topeka, Kansas are that the Indians are becoming troublesome. Sixteen citizens have been murdered by the Indians since the sixteenth of June.

—Bro. Joseph Zahn says the wheat crop here was an average one, the oats crop was remarkably good, corn, potatoes, &c., are (to use the general term) splendid, we hear the farmers say they never saw such a general good prospect for corn as the present.

—There lives in London a sect who believe that no medical aid should be called in when one of their number is sick, but prayer and good nursing should be relied on, and this only. They interpret literally the injunction of the apostle James to call in the elders of the church, to pray and to anoint with oil, and they not only interpret this injunction literally, but they regard it as containing their whole duty in the matter, and as excluding any resort to the aid of medicine.

—Bro. D. F. Good says: On the 23rd of August, the Church at Antietam made a choice for a Minister and two deacons. The lot fell upon Jacob Snider Speaker; and David Newcomer, and Benjamin Stoufer, for deacons. All were installed to their different offices.

We still have accession to the church by Baptism.

—From Bond Co., Ill., by J. H. Goodman. The season with us (till within a few days) has been very dry and hot. Corn and oats poor owing to drought and chinch bugs, wheat is very good, Irish potatoes poor, sweet potatoes good, grapes a full crop, apples and pears middling plenty. Considerable threshing done here. Wheat yielding thirty-four bushel per acre, twenty and twenty-five bushels are common this season. No additions to the church lately.

—We had lately two additions to the James Creek Church. One of them says, that when young he labored for our now old and respected Elders Peter and Christian Long. Though since then he has been isolated from the society of the Brethren yet there were impressions then received that finally resulted in his conversion. Truly may it be said, a good example is never lost.

—In the vicinity of New York, and over a wide extent of country, a severe drought has prevailed for some time. The pastures are drying up, the leaves are falling from the tress, and the springs and streams are showing the want of rain. In Philadelphia there is a scarcity of water in the Schuylkill, and the chief engineer of the Water Department has issued a circular requesting economy on the part of citizens in the use of water; the fountains have been stopped and licenses for water carts to sprinkle the streets have been revoked.

—From Muncie Co., Ind., by R W. Branson, we have the following: The health in this neighboorhood is not very good at present, cases of chills and fever, are very plenty, there has been several deaths around here in the last month.

We had plenty of rain in the fore part of the season, to bring on the crops very rapidly, and to perfection. The small grain was tolerably good, some fields of wheat made thirty bushels per acre. Flax was very good, it made from nine to fifteen bushels per acre. Oats very good, some fields made fifty bushels per acre. The Blackberry crop was also very good.

The Apple crop is tolerable good, with the exception of a few trees that have the bitter rot. The Apples on these trees are not worth anything only to feed hogs or cattle.

The Peach crop is the best I ever seen, many trees are broken to the ground, loaded too with the nicest of peaches. They are going into market at $1.50 per bushel.

The corn crop is tolerably good, although the Chinch bug, and dry weather is drying it up very fast. Some of the farmers are cutting there corn up, they think it will do better to cut it up than let the Chinch bug kill it.

Seeding has commenceed, there was a good deal of wheat sowed in last month, but it is so dry that it will not do much good till it rains. There will be a pretty large crop sowed. Potatoes are tolerable good.

—A counterfeit twenty dollar note of the Merchants' National Bank of New York has been discovered at the Treasury Department sent there for redemption. It is so well executed that it passed undiscovered through the hands of several counters before being detected. The Comptroller will add this series to the already lengthy list of national bank notes to be called in for cancellation, the rule being to call in and abolish by cancellation the whole issue of each denomination of a bank that is successfully counterfeited.

IDENTITY OF THE REFORMED WITH THE REFORMED DUTCH CHURCH.—A peculiar case, and one of considerable interest to the Reformed Church of this country, is on trial at Hackensack before Judge Bedle. When the Reformed Dutch Church dropped the "Dutch" out of the name of the denomination six or seven years ago, the Holland churches took offence, and many of them are dissatisfied. Rev. Mr. Wust, pastor of the Holland Church at Lodi, rebelled against the degree, and persisted in styling his church the Dutch Reformed. He denied the authority of the Particular Synod and Classis, because they had changed the name, and said he could only recognize the "Reformed Dutch" Classis and Synods. After endavoring to bring the parties to terms, the Classis appointed a new Consistory, or Board of Trustees, and a committee, with Rev. Dr. Gaston, of Passaic, as Chairman. Dr. Gaston called upon Mr. Cook, one of the old Trustees, and demanded the key of the church, so that the new Trustees might be installed, but Mr. Cook positively refused to give them up. Dr. Gaston then procured the assistance of two or three men, broke open the doors, entered the church, and put the new Consistory in possession. The new Consistory then commenced suit against Rev. Mr. Wust and the old Consistory for the full possession of the property. The decision is looked for with interest by other congregations.—N. Y. Times, —From O. W. Smith of Altoona Pa. we have the following: On Wednesday morning Aug. 26th Mr. John Kerr, boss on the repairs, on the P. R. R. at Bells Mills, was killed with the cars. They were shipping cars at the time—the train was uncouppled, and stood about four feet apart. Mr. Kerr was in the act of passing through between them, and when he was about half-way through, the train came together and caught him. He was dragged the length of three cars before he could be relieved. His death was quick and sudden. He was killed before his own door, and in the presence of his little daughter. Hard was the trial, no doubt, to his family of such an unexpected death, but God's ways are not as our ways, and His will must be done, let it come in what ever way it may. He leaves a wife and a family to mourn his loss.

On the morning of the 28th at 9 A. M. his remains was conveyed to the grave yard, when his funeral was preached in the Presbyterian church, by Mr. Dickson of the M. E. Church from the following words. "Lord make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it, is that I may know how frail I am." (Psalms, 39: 4.)

Mr. Kerr was a member of the M. P. Church, and had been a boss on the P. R. R. at Bell's Mills, about 9 or 10 years. The Co. made him a present of a Metalic Coffin, which cost about one hundred and seventy five dollars. It was a beautiful Coffin but it matters not what kind of a coffin we are buried in, if we are only prepared when death comes.

On the same day that Mr. Kerr was buried, Mr. David Hunter, who had been at Mr. Kerr's funeral, went home and eat his dinner, and went to his work at Fostorian, which was digging a well. M. Hunter went down in the well to dig and Mr. Ketterman staid out side to windlas up the dirt, and while Mr. Ketterman was in the act of drawing up a bucket full of dirt, the bucket got loose from the rope and fell back in the well and struck Mr. Hunter on the the head and killed him. Both these mournful events took place not more than two miles a part. Mr. Hunter remarked when Mr. Kerr was buried, he wondered who would be the next one. Little did he think that he himself would be the one. It was not more than two hours from the time Mr. Kerr was buried till Mr. Hunter was killed in the well. On the 30th of Aug. at 10 A. M. his body was conveyed to the same place, and his funeral preached in the same house by Mr. Mathers of the P. Church from the following words. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1. Thess. 4: 14.)

Mr. Hunter was a member of the P. Church. Both these funerals were attended by a large number of people.

Western Crop Prospects.

—o—

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 19—I came to this city from Chicago over the Rock Island Railroad to Bureau and Peoria, and thence by the way of Perkin, Jacksonville, and Alton. This route lay nearly through the center of the western half of Illinois, a section of country devoted chiefly to the production of corn, although it furnishes in the aggregate a considerable quantity of wheat, and fattens for the Chicago and Eastern markets a large amount of stock. The first corn I saw after leaving Chicago was suffering greatly for the want of rain; the leaves were curled up, and some of the lower ones were already dry and yellow. Without rain the yield will not generally be more than one-half a crop, and I doubt if it is not already to late for rains to do the most of it much good. I did not see a single field of upland corn along the whole rout until I approached the Mississippi River that was not suffering from the effects of dry weather. Some of it has entirely dried up, and at least half of it has already stopped growing.

I spent Sunday in the country five or six miles south of Bureau. The yield of corn in that vicinity will be less than half the average. In the bottoms of the Illinois River, where it is generally very wet and corn was planted late, are to be found the only really promising fields. The absence of rain has also dried up the streams in the pastures and destroyed the grass, so that the farmers find it difficult to provide either feed or water for their stock. Some have already begun to cut up the corn and feed it to their cattle while others are obliged to drive their stock several miles to water.

The wheat crops in all the sections I passed through has been exceptionally good this year, and the amount shown was much greater that for several previous years. Potatoes need more rain and the gardens are very dry. The price which farmers in central Illinois are receiving for their corn this year is from 50 to 100 per cent higher than that which they got a year ago, so that those who kept a portion of last year's crop and those who gather a fair crop this year will be no worse off than they were twelve months ago, and I am told that the increased acreage will probably bring the aggregate yield of corn this year nearly up to that of last.

If the reports received in St. Louis from Kansas and Nebraska are to be trusted, the grasshoppers or locusts are doing much more damage in those states than they did earlier in the season in Iowa and Minnesota. Instead of flying over the country and alighting here and there as they get hungry to devour a field, they seem to move eastward at a regular rate per day, destroying every green thing as they go. They have not, I believe, reached the western borders of this state yet, dispatches from Kansas City to-day report that they are confidently expected there within a few days at the farthest. The ravages of these pests in Kansas and Nebraska are, as in Iowa and Minnesota, confined, thus far, to those sections of country that have been recently settled and are still sparsely populated. This fact causes the aggregate loss to be much less than it otherwise would be, but does not prevent great individual suffering among those whose farms are devastated. Hundreds of families are leaving Kansas, and I hear that the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad is bringing the sufferers East at half price.

How Newspaper Postage is to be Prepaid.

WASHIGTON, Sept. 6.—Third Assistant Post-master-General Barber has gone to New York to devise the best means for carrying out the act of Congress in relation to the prepayment of postage upon newspapers and periodical mail from the office of publication which goes into effect on the 1st of January, 1875. This law gives a wide discretion to the Postmaster-General in all respects save as to the mode of payment which is required to be "by a special adhesive stamp, to be devised and furnished by the Postmaster General, which shall be fixed to such matters, or go to the sack containing the same, or upon a memorandum of such mailing, or otherwise, as the Postmaster-General may from time to time provide by regulation."

It is evident the law did not contemplate the stamping of each paper, as it provides they shall be "weighed in bulk," and payment of postage made per pound. Neither can the stamp be affixed to the bag, as in most cases other mail matter goes therein. The most feasible method of carrying out the law appears to the department to be the use of receipt books and stubs, the receipt to be torn off and given to the publisher, and the stub, after the necessary memorandum is made, to be stamped with the requisite stamp or stamps, and retained by the Postmaster."

POETRY.

TO AN OLD CHURCH.

A SONNET.

BY WESLEY.

Hail time-worn edifice, thy furrowed walls,
Have often echoed back the fervent calls
Of holy men by heavenly zeal inspired;
Yea, in the garb of purity attired
They poured down thine aisles the healing tide,
Which from the open tomb of Christ doth glide,
Apprising man of mercy's boundless store,
Wrought out by Him who man's transgressions bore.
Thou standest a record of the love which thrilled
The hearts which erst thy crumbling altar filled;
Whilst from their lips rolled up their songs of praise,
Commingling with the angels' ardent lays;
Seraphs the holocaust of love applaud,
And bear its odor to the throne of God.

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

The Intermediate State of the Dead.

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.—Rev. 6: 9.

Some time ago we commenced an article on the above subject in reply to an article which appeared in No. 18 of the present volume, and by the grace of God we will try and finish it, and submit our thoughts to the reader.

One very important point in considering this subject is this, as the Revelator figures extensively in this subject it it very necessary to notice very particularly which he speaks of, the soul or the body. If we accept the idea as some do that the soul and body remain together, we will not get very far in the matter until we swamp. The text says, "I saw the souls under the altar, of them that were slain for the testimony that they held." As this is not the only passage that bears on this subject we conclude that there is a separation of the soul and body, and bring up Paul as a witness in the case. "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that while we are at home in the body we are always absent from the Lord: We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and be present with the Lord. 2 Cor. 5: 6–8. Paul here sees a separation of soul and body, and the Revelator sees it also when he speaks of the souls and those crying to be avenged, &c., and then speaks of the dead in the sea, the graves, &c. Then in Eccl. we find this: "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward." 3: 21. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit to God who gave it." This certainly establishes a separation, and we all know that the body is dead, and we have always, whether right or wrong, thought that when reference was made to the dead it was in reference to the body. Now we believe we are about ready to accept the position "that the soul immediately after its departure from the body goes"—not to its final destiny—"but to heaven or hell as the case may be." This may seem like presumption, but it is nevertheless our position.

We come now to the case of the rich man and Lazarus. The brother says, "this is generally accepted as a parable contrasting the different stations of life in time and eternity, without any reference to an intermediate state." Not just so brother, for the rich man remembers that he has yet five brothers on earth. From this we infer that it has direct reference to an intermediate state. Such being the case we find him in hell also. Whether hell here has reference to the grave or some other place we need care but little, for it does not change our position any either way, and at the same time we have Lazarus in paradise, and we find also "a great gulp fixed between." This makes their stations vastly separate, and while it shows their stations, it certainly shows the place of their several stations. Now in respect to the thief we have only one idea to offer. The thief received from Christ a special promise. What was that promise? "To-day thou shalt be with me in paradise." "To-day," certainly implies something. It fixes the time. If not what was the promise worth. If his soul and body both laid in the grave just as the other thief did what was he benefited by the promise? But we infer that his soul went just where Christ's did, and the other thief's went to where we found the rich man, or at least it went to a different place to that of the one that had the promise.

We nowhere find that hell is the final destiny of the wicked. But according to inspiration hell is now in existence, and it among other places must deliver its dead up to judgment. We infer then, and always have believed that it is the prison of the wicked in their intermediate state, and after it has served its purpose as such it will, with those that it held, be cast into "the lake of fire." This is the second death, or the final destiny of the wicked. Heaven in like manner, we think, is the resting place of the sainted dead. And as we nowhere find that they come from heaven to judgment, we conclude that they have judged themselves and need no judgment. Yet this is not their final destiny. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the old heaven and the old earth had passed away." There seems to be a new place prepared for the saints, as well as a new place for the wicked, for both places have passed away.

Now by way of recapitulation we will give a few ideas as our own private opinion, but which we thought we had got from the word of God.

We believe that in death the soul is separated from the body and goes either to heaven or to hell. Heaven not being any too good for those that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, nor hell too bad for those that have slighted Christ and his proffered grace, and the body returns to its mother dust. And at the sound of the last trump, the wicked shall all come forth to judgment. "And the sea gave up the dead that were in it, and death and hell gave up the dead which were in them," and after the judgment death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. The saints need not to be judged, from the fact that they have judged themselves. "Judge not that ye be not judged." This and like texts cause us to think that if we judge ourselves by the word of God, we will never come to judgment, for it is this word that we have now that will judge us all in the last day, if we do not judge ourselves by it. And another point is this, the saints are to reign with Christ a thousand years before the judgment. Will they reign with him all this time and then be called forth to judgment? We should think not. We now submit this to your judgment, whether it is worthy of attention or not.

The Great Contrast.

None but those who have had an experience in the divine life, can know how to contrast between the real advantages of that life, and the dissdvantages of an unholy career. To try to decide upon this question, knowing nothing but what can be supposed from observation, is as little likely to be done on safe and sure grounds, as for one unborn to judge of things only understood after many years subsequent to birth. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again." And the fearful condition of the carnally minded is such that the wonderous works of Almighty God go on, by them unseen as it were; the swift moments, few that are given them, pass uncounted, and unheeded by; the thundertones of that same word that has called others from the tomb, and that will call forth themselves, crying at the loudest gospel trumpet sound, unheeded, and unheard, while their fellows fall victims to sin and death, to rise never to shine in glory, and themselves all but sentenced to the fall at the next succeeding blow; and this all unseen, unheard, unfelt. Who then would dare to act upon their judgment and decision of the joys and real anvantages of the holy life, a life of light, liberated from darkness and blindness of death in sin, and the slavish bonds of iniqnity, and the captivity and imprisonment of ignorance; who are void of "all spiritual understanding.

Some of the advantages of a holy life over the life of the ungodly, are "a meek and quiet spirit in the former, which the wicked fleeth when no one pursueth." Another is the comfort of joying in the Holy Ghost, while the unregenerated is "without hope, and without God in the world." And "all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose," but "he that, being often reproved and hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed and that without mercy." The righteous have joys and comforts in "heavenly places," and the joys of the unholy, though innocent, are thwarted by the returning consciousness of the vanity of them, and more, they are marred by the fruits of time wasted and means squandered, that is not easily recovered, but often sensibly missed; while sacrifices made to God never, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver and whom He loveth He blesseth that he shall never want nor ask in vain, if so be that he is the Lord's. These are of the advantages over even those who believe and do not, who know their sad condition and know of the means of grace, but procrastinate, spurn the offers of bleeding mercy, awaiting "a more convenient season." And still greater are the advantages of the godly over those who believe not, put off the calls of the spirit of grace as a mere delusion,—as a petty notion of "old fogies," and such as are "biased of a book," and "do not understand the true philosophy of man's origin and destiny." Such are the reasonings of the most pitiable souls that I have met with. And they labor under the greatest disadvantages of all others, for what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and loose himself, or be cast away? Luke 9: 25.

There are literal losses, crosses, and even sore trials to endure for Christ's sake, but afterwards, no sooner than they have subsided, Oh, the sweet repose they bring, even here, and after a while "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." On the other hand,—no cross to bear, no crown to wear, and yet all the ills and real sorrows of this life, and the fearful horrible results of an ungodly life and society in the world, and Oh what in the world to come? Who will continue such a course? Who will not risk in finding joys and comforts in this holy warfare, that in the face of these considerations, exceed all the pleasures of this world, and having no escape of falling into the hands of the living God, and that unprepared, and when mercy is swallowed up in the consumation and the fullness of time.

For the Pilgrim.]

The Beautiful City.

I thought I would pen a few lines for the Pilgrim and try and make use of the time and talent that God has given unto me, that I in my weakness might encourage some poor soul to try more earnestly to gain the heavenly portals that enter into glory.

There are a vast number of cities in the world that are beautiful to behold. Go to the city of Philadelphia, and your eyes will gaze with wonder at the art of man. Go to the city of New York and behold the splendid earthly mansions. The buildings, the alleys, and the streets all made pleasing to the eye of man; you look with astonishment, yea, even with amazement, upon these great and beautiful cities. They look as if they might stand forever, but durable and grand as they may seem, they are perishable, and at some future day will crumble to the earth. Though they may be beautiful to look upon and pleasant to dwell in, they must pass away. But I have a city to tell you of that will not pass away. What is it called? Is its name Philadelphia or New York? No; it is Heaven. O what a beautiful name! Is the city as beautiful as its name? Yes, and more so, although Heaven has a sweet sound in the Christian's ear. The art of man has gone a great way since man was created, and when we read about the wonderful City that the Savior talks so much about, and the temple that the wise man built, we wonder at the wisdom that God gave him. But of this magnificent temple and the wonderful buildings that stood by its side, according to prophecy, there was not one stone left upon another that was not thrown down. Although forty and two years in building, its garnished walls are decayed or overthrown. But it was only a type of that beautiful City which is called Heaven, and what will it be to see the antitype! The antitype will shine in more splendor, it is more beautiful; it is more grand and sublime. The walls are salvation, and the gates are praise. The streets are as pure gold when it has gone through the refiner's fire seven times, brighter than the noon-day sun, or pearls of gold. The dimensions of the City is great, 12,000 furlongs square. The height, the length, and the width are equal. The foundation is all manner of precious stones, and God is the builder. How grand, how magnificent is the place! The human mind fails to comprehend its vastness. And what is it to be there? The glorious hope arises within us that some day we will be welcomed into the City. But we have gates to pass through before we can enter there. Death is the portal that will let you into glory. Do you dread this, my Christian friend? If you have been washed white in the blood of the Lamb, you can welcome death and shout glory in your dying hour, that is, if you have kept yourself unspotted from the world.

Dear brother, or sister, when you are about to turn back, think where you are going, and then look toward the beautiful City with an eye of faith, and stand upon Pisgah's top and view the beautiful City that lies beyond. Fall down, as did Joshua, and pray for more energy, that you may press on. These earthly cities are grand and wonderful, but sin, sickness, sorrow, pain and death are there. But not so in this beautiful City that John saw while on the isle of Patmos. There will be no sickness, sorrow, pain nor death there. Neither the cross of sin will be there, but thank God, in this holy City, the New Jerusalem, there shall be peace. The throne of God and the Lamb will be in it, and his servants shall serve him, and in this service shall never tire. Hence there is no need of night there to sleep and rest the brain, muscles, and limbs. There shall be no night there, no interruption of joy or eclipsing of glory, by the darkness of night, but one eternal day. It is a beautiful City. Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the good things that God has in reservation for those that love, obey, and serve him. If this earthly house of our tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building not made with hands, but eternal in the heavens. And this is not all. In this City is your darling child that is not lost but gone before, there to clasp hands with Jesus and to fall down and worship him who created it. Does this not encourage us? Will not this arouse some one that has become lukewarm to strive more earnestly for the kingdom of eternal glory, and enjoy the felicity above, where angels dwell, and where God our Father is. Behold the light of this City! How bright it is above the noon-day sun, for the glory of God does brighten it, and the Lamb is the light of it. In this light his servants shall see his face, and his name shall be written on their foreheads, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. Here in this life we wipe away our tears, but they come again, and the reason is because the cause of them remains. But in that beautiful City God will remove the cause, and the effect will cease. There also is the pure river of life, clear as crystal, flowing out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. And on either side of the river is the tree of life bearing twelve manner of fruit, and yields her fruit monthly.

Dear reader, these are some of the joys and liberties of the people of God, and can be obtained by obeying the Lord Jesus Christ, for he says, "Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have right to the tree of life and may enter in through the gates into the City." Rev. 22: 14.

NOAH AN EXAMPLE OF HOLINESS.

In the time Noah the world become filled with violence. All had forsaken the Creator and followed after their own lust. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was very great in the earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually and it repented the Lord that He had placed man on the earth, and it grieved Him at his heart. Thus had rebellious man forsaken the laws of God who hath created him, and placed him in the world that he might glorify his Creator. None was found true to God save Noah and his family. What an example of holiness! How sad it must have been to Noah to see the whole world in rebellion against the God of High Heaven, and himself standing alone as the true worshiper of God. Surely he must have been vexed from day to day at their wickedness, as was righteous Lot at the wickedness of the men of Sodom. All the influence, all the inducements of the whole world could not persuade him to forsake his Maker. God beholding the great wickedness of man, and that it was only becoming greater and greater, righteously passed judgement upon them which was to be a destruction of all flesh from the face of the earth by a flood of water. But God never forgets his people. He now remember Noah His servant. He commanded Noah to build an ark by which he and his family were to be saved from the destruction of the wicked which was finally accomplished.

Dear reader, has the spirit of God ever been striving with you? Have you ever been warned of the coming judgement of the wicked by the minister of the gospel or by the reading the word of God? Will you give heed to those friendly warnings and stand faithful like Noah amidst the vain inducements of a wicked world? To you it is promised that if you forsake your earthly associates for the sake of Christ, you shall receive a hundred fold in this world besides eternal life with all the sanctified in His kingdom of glory. Not so with Noah. He was alone. All his relations and friends had gone with the world in their wickedness. So will be be with you, dear reader, if you will open and welcome Him in while He is knocking at the door of your heart. O, do open and invite Him in before it is forever too late, before he ceases striving with you. If you do not, you will not be remembered like Noah in the destruction of the world. Your case then will be a deplorable one; your lamps will be gone out, and you will have no oil to fill them. You will be cast into outer darkness where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, to share the fate of the enemies of God.

Dear young readers, who are yet in the bloom of youth, now is the time for you to forsake the contaminating influences of a wicked world and enlist under the banner of king Immanuel, and like Noah prove a faithful soldier of the cross, that you may win the crown that fadeth not away. But in striving for the crown be sure you strive lawfully, for only such as strive lawfully have the promise of winning that crown. The Scripture says, many shall strive to enter Heaven but shall not be able. Perhaps because they are serving the goddess of fashion more than the God of Heaven. Then dear reader let us lay aside those things, and like Noah worship God in spirit and in truth, for such only can worship Him acceptably.

Soft Answers.

It is a remarkable fact, that one half-hour's summer sunshine deflects the vast mass of the Britannia Tubular Bridge more than all the dead weight which could be placed upon it. What a tribute to the might of gentleness?

That school-child made a good reply, who said that meek people were those who "give soft answers to rough questions." But how far the world is from taking the scriptual standard, and concerning meekness a valuable quality we may learn by a common use of the word. Who would like to have said of him, as of Moses, that he was "very meek?" Something mean-spirited would be the popular acceptation; nobody would understand the words to express any enviable virtue, if used in the degenerate conversation of to-day.. And yet, how does the giver of all blessings signalize the meek? They are among his specially blessed—"they shall inherit the earth."

A gentleman came to Sir Eardley Wilmot in great wrath at an injury he had suffered from some persons highly in worldy position, and was considering how he could best show his resentment. "Would it be manly to resent it?" "Yes, but God-like to forgive it." The idea had an instantly soothing effect, and he left that interview thinking no longer of revenge.

It is related of Anthony Blane, one of the earliest converts made by Felix Neff, that when he was struck on the head by an opponent of the troth, he said, "May God forgive and bless you." The other exclaimed in a fury that he would kill him. Some days afterward Anthony met this man in a narrow Alpine road, and fully expected to be struck again, but, to his amazement, a hand was outstretched with the heartfelt words, "Mr. Blane, can you forgive me?" The soft answer to his blow had softened his heart, "breaking the bone.'

Does not Sir Matthew Hale seem the greater man, when we recall his reply to Cromwell's angry speech. "My lord justice, you are not fit to be a judge." Hale had refused to lend himself to some arbitrary action, and his only answer to the Protector's words was. "Please your highness, it is very true." His great upright soul was also crowned with humility; and a source of many of the hard answers which create life's angry altercations is pride.

On merely worldy grounds there is great wisdom in soft answers; for the speaker is so apt to win the day, and gain his own object in the end. DeQuincy tells of himself, that when traveling once on the roof of a coach, he fell asleep from weariness and weakness, being at the time in bad health, and lurched against another passenger, who awoke him with much surliness, and complained morosely of this invasion of his comfort. DeQuincy apologized, said he was unwell, but would do what he could to avoid falling asleep for the future. Nature would not be coerced, however, and he was soon slumbering again; when he felt the arm of his surly neighbor passed around him to prevent his falling, and in all the stages of his journey thereafter he acted with the tenderness of a woman toward the invalid.

Much practical philosophy lies in the saying of one little boy to another. "Don't speak so cross; there's no use in it." Truly no use for anything beneficial or pleasant, but much use for the inflaming of discord and establishment of malice. Especially in domestic life is the sharp answer of Satan's choice engines for the creation of all uncharitableness. And those who can refrain from it under provocation have achieved a great victory over themselves. One of the most tried and most holy women that ever acted thus, as described by her celebrated son, Augustine: "She had learned not to resist an angry husband, not in deed, only, but even in word. Only when he was smooth and tranquil he would give an account of her actions, if haply he had taken offence. In a word, while many matrons, who had milder husbands would in familiar talk, blame their husbands' lives, she would blame those wives' tongues. and they, knowing what a choleric husband she endured, marvelled that it could never be perceived that Patricus had beaten her, or there had been any domestic difference between them." And how closely the meek spirit is allied of that of the peacemaker in the next beatitude we may gather from Augustine's further words: "this great gift, also thou bestowest, O my God, on that good hand-maid of thine, that, between any discordant parties, when hearing on both sides most bitter things, such as swelling and undigested choler causes to break forth, she never would disclose aught but what would tend to their own reconcilement." Short-lived would be the strifes of the world did every body act like Monica.

There are a few sweet, placid tempers to whom the "soft answers" comes comparatively easy; but with most persons, it must be the fruit of resolute self-control and self-conquest of a habit of mind produced by watchfulness and prayer. One can sympathize with the passionate school-boy, who, pondering on this subject, asked another: "What soft thing is very hard?" and explained his meaning thus: "If it is not a hard thing for a fellow to give soft answers when he's right down vexed, then I don't know where you will find anything that's hard."

But if the school-boy learns the lesson, the man will have less difficulty in putting it into use. "The beginning of strife is as one that letteth out water," and the soft answers will always enable us to fulfill the following injunction: "Leave off contention before it be meddled with." Yet how easily we justify ourselves in wrong doing, prompted by the demon Pride! How quickly does the sharp retort leap to the lips, how clever we deem ourselves when the thrust (probably as poisoned as we would make it) has been given! We do not remember that this, like other human temptations, was met and conquered by our Great Exemplar; we do not consider Him who endured such contradictions of sinners against himself," who, when he suffered, he threatened not," although the twelve legions of angels stood ready at his call.

GO TO JESUS.

Just now we think of some of our kind friends who have recently been heavily oppressed on account of bereavements. A daughter or son has lost a kind father, a wife, a kind husband and a dear child. To part with those who are so closely allied to us by the ties of nature is one of the saddest occurrences of this life. That last lingering look at the death-form of a dear one makes a wound too deep to be soon healed without the oil of consolation. And this we may have, and that too from various sources. It affords us a slight relief to narrate our bereavement to our intimate friends. They, too, may give us words of consolation that will, for the time at least, ease the pain of sorrow. But there is a friend to whom we can go at such a time that can give us more consolation than any earthly friend. That friend is Jesus. Just now we can think of John's disciples. How sad they must have felt when they heard that he was beheaded. And what did they do? They took up his body and buried it and then went and told Jesus.

Christian friends, it is our privilege to do the same when our friends die, and indeed, it is our duty to go to him with all our sorrows and disappointments in this life. Ah, yes, this is a glorious privilege, and we rejoice to know "that we have a High Priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, who is touched with the feelings of our infirmities and was in all points tempted like we are, yet without sin." No one on earth has ever experienced sorrows as bitter as his, and now we have the glorious privilege when in sorrow and trial of laying our heads on the breast of him who was our partner in sorrow and trial. What a glorious privilege! Surely the saddened heart rejoices that Christ was man as well as God. Take humanity from the person of Christ and our condition would be a deplorable one. But not so. Jesus feels our griefs. A certain writer beautifully expresses this thought in the following language: "There is not a single throb in a single human bosom that does not thrill at once with more than electric speed up to the mighty heart of God, You have not shed a tear or sighed a sigh that did not come back to you exalted and purified by having passed through the eternal bosom."

The Home and Hope of the Christian.

"How happy every child of grace,
Who knows his sins forgiven
This earth he cries is not my place
I seek my home in heaven."

The child of God knows that this earth is not his home. He looks beyond this vale of sin and sorrow, with an eye of faith and a bright anticipation to that period of time, when he shall be released from sickness and sorrow, pain and death, and from the manifold temptations that cross his pathway here, and then be translated, into a brighter and happier sphere, where there shall be nothing to mar his peace, but where his weary soul shall recline forever in the bright sunshine of eternal bliss. Oh! what a lively hope inspires the breast of the Christian. He can say with the apostle Peter. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. To an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away. 1 Peter 1:24. And though he be called to eat the bread of adversity, or drink the waters of affliction, he feels within himself that though this earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, he has a building of God, an house not made with hands eternal in the Heavens. 2 Cor. 5:1. Paul says, there is a crown of righteousness laid up, not for him only, but for all those that love the appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ. Yes brethren and sisters, there is a crown laid up for us, such as monarchs never wore, which we shall be permitted to wear if we prove faithful to the end of our pilgrimage. As the crown is not promised in the beginning, nor in the middle, but at the end of our race, let us not be weary in well doing, for in due time we shall reap if we faint not. Those of us who are yet young, both in years, and in the service of our Master, let us remember the vows we made, before God and men, namely, that of renouncing satan, and all his pernicious ways, and to live faithful to the Lord until death. Oh, let us be led and guided by the counsel of God, while we live, and afterward he will receive us home to himself in glory. And you my young friends who have not yet named the name of Christ, let me entreat you out of love to seek the Lord. It is written, that the hand of God is upon all them for good that seek him, but power and wrath is against them that forsake him. Ezra 8:22. What is your hope of the future and where do you expect to take up your abode if you are called from the stage of action, in the condition that you are now occupying? Forsake your evil ways, and put your trust in God, for blessed is he that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope is in the Lord. The Lord giveth grace to do his will and to become an heir of the Christian's home in glory, therefore this moment come, and at once begin while life's sweet moments last. Turn to the Lord, forsake all sin and he will forgive the past.

Hearkening to Strange Voices.

BY JOHN KNISLEY.

Dear readers of the PILGRIM, let us be very careful and not hear any strange voices. If our first parents were driven out of the garden for hearkening to a strange voice, and lost the life they had in God, and the sin hung over the human family for some 4,000 years, and then there was nothing on earth to bring that life back again, how careful should we be. All the wealth, and all the blood on the earth from that day to this could not have restored that life back to Adam's race until Jesus brought it back: Read John 6: 63. The word is spirit and life, and we cannot have life without obeying the word. Our first parents lost that life for disobeying one word. O, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation. Heb. 2: 3 O how careful ought we to be, being in a very dark age and having many more inducements held out to us than had our first parents. Thousands now say it makes no difference. If it had made no difference in eating the forbidden fruit, it might make no difference in us following and hearkening unto strange voices, and if all voices are right that we hear in this day and time, we need not the word to give us life, and God can't be our judge, nor is the word of God our judge at the resurrection, but the doctrine of men or the strange voices will be our judge. O, let us not hearken unto any of them, but let us all cling to the truth and that will make us free and then we will be free indeed.

Dear reader, I believe that we get the same life in Christ that our first parents lost in the garden, and if we will let ourselves be led away through the lust of the flesh and the pride of life, we will surely lose it as did our first parents, and who will bring it back to us? None. We must hunt it and seek for it ourselves, and where do we think to find it? I say where we lost it, there we must find it again. If we have done anything to offend our God, none but God is injured, and we can settle with him, but if we have hurt any by not walking orderly we must first settle and become reconciled to the members or person that we have injured,—make it right, let it cost what it may. If it be to our own child, our side companion, our neighbor, or our neighbor's child, make satisfaction and then come to God and settle with him, and we will find the life again, and as long as we have the life we get by obeying Christ, what a pleasant life it will be. It makes families and neighbors happy, and it makes the whole world happy. Let us all live in Christ, is my prayer. Amen.

Resisting the Spirit.

To force the human being to see, feel, repent, believe, and be saved, would be assuming the authority of changing the essential principles of his creation and the nature of mind, and reduce him into the state of a machine which is overcome by a certain quantity of physical force, superior to that resistance which would be the natural effect. The human being cannot be operated on in this way because it is contrary to the laws of creation and nature, nor can the Holy Ghost work on them with an irresistable power, as power operates on the machine, since men and women are made free agents through the atonement. They may therefore and generally do resist the Holy Ghost, and the whole revelation of God bears unequivocal testimony to this most dreadful possibility and most awful truth.

How often has the sinner banished the during of the Holy Spirit from his mind until God has sent him strong delusions that he should believe a lie! Dear brethren and sisters, this solemn warning does not only reach the unconverted. Paul exhorts his Thessalonian brethren to "quench not the Spirit," and if it was necessary for him to warn his Thessalonian brethren, how much more necessary it for us in these last and latter times. Brethren and sisters let us never Quench nor grieve the Holy Spirit.

REPROACH.

Reproach is "shame, opprobrium, infamy, disgrace." Christ and his cause have always been objects of reproach. Even by the expectation of a Redeemer long before his advent, men exposed themselves to ridicule and scorn. And when he did come, his birth, his servant form, his poverty, his company in contrast with his great mission, exposed him to the vituperation of his enemies. Nor has the offense of the cross ceased. Jesus and his cause are still objects of hatred and dislike to many.

History and experience demonstrate the fact that there has not been an age or country in which the people of God have not had their most praiseworthy conduct, deeds, and institutions slandered and mi-represented. How appropriate does the language of the pious psalmist, uttered thousands of years ago seem to the toiling but too often derided Christians of to-day. With him they cry, "reproach hath broken my heart;" "because fore thy sake I have born reproach;" and "the reproaches of them that reproached thee have fallen upon me."

—Whether we work with our head or our hands, it is all one in the eyes of God, who keeps account of everything that is undertake in his name.

—While you provide for things honest in the sight of men, let your chief care be, not to be rich in the world's estimation, but to be rich in the estimation of God—to have a good hope through grace of enjoying the everlasting inheritance which is laid up in heaven for all believers.

☞ How to send money.--All sums over $1.50, should be sent either in a check, draft or posta. order. If neither of these can be obtained, have the letter registered.

☞ When Money is sent, always send with it the name and address of those who paid it. Write the names and post office as plainly as possible.

Run Short.

We are sorry to say, of our last issue No. 37, we run short of about 75 copies. We cannot account for, it unless it happened through a miscount either at the mill or the one that wet down the papers. We are always sorry when such a mistake occurs, as we know all wish to have their papers, but occur they will occasionally, notwithstanding our care to avoid them. To avoid any further trouble we inform our readers that of No. 37 we have no copies on hands and therefore cannot supply such as have received none.

The Almanac.

As yet we have not received much copy for the Almanac. Those who so are anxious to have it filled with good reading matter should assist in making it good. It frequently so happens that those who criticise most, help least. This should not be. If all would play critics we would have nothing to criticise. All those who have something good should send it along at once so that we can get to press as soon as possible. We know that there are ministers whose names have not yet been sent. We hope that all such will be attended to either by themselves or others interested in having a fair representation of our ministers.

A Sunday at the Bethel.

On last Sunday morning we drove out to the Bethel Church, James Creek congregation where we met a goodly number of brethren and sisters, and enjoyed quite a pleasant waiting before the Lord. At the close of the services there was another applicant for baptism, one too, we least expected, but such are the ways of our Heavenly Father who, sometimes opens the hearts of those whom we may think most effectually closed to the power of redeeming grace.

It was an occasion of much rejoicing especially to his companion who, a few weeks before came out on the Lord's side. We fondly hope that the work commenced in this family may grow until every member of it may be brought under the influence of the spirit of grace and be made willing to accept and follow out the humble teachings of Christ as revealed in the Scriptures of truth.

At this place, we lately built a house for worship and as a result the members of the neighborhood seem encouraged and the good work is going forward. Our prayer is that this house, set apart for the worship of God, may form a spiritual resort to which many yet unborn—unregenerated—may go and receive the true principles of regeneration and have their souls fed with the bread of life.

PULPIT SUPPLY.

In one of our exchanges, we find the following advertisment: A Presbyterian minister whose week days are employed in literary work is ready for an engagement to PREACH for some Church in or near New York, either for a year or otherwise. Equally ready for Presbyterian, Congregational or Reformed. Address at once &c.

This strikes us as being a little novel and rare. He being a Presbyterian minister, we are made to wonder, if he should be called by a Congregational Church, whether he would obligate himself to preach Congregational doctrine, or by a Reformed Church, Reformed doctrine. If a man had served a regular apprenticeship at jobbing, printing and bookbinding and then put out the following card we would not think it strange: "A young man who is now out of employment is ready for an engagement to labor for some firm in New York. Equally ready for jobbing, printing or bookbinding.

This would be looking at the thing from a purely secular or business stand point and would be justifiable on the part of the one seeking employment, but to turn the holy calling of preaching the gospel into a secular business for the purpose of earning a livelihood is sacrilegious. If this gentleman is a Presbyterian minister he should be one from principle and no circumstances in life or stipulated amount of money should bend his concience sufficently to allow him to preach a doctrine which, in many respects, essentially differs from that of his own. These things are purely the outgrowth of a great abuse of the Christian ministry, changing it from a special calling of God, through his own Church, to that of a secular business or profession acquired with the same purpose and intent as that of any other worldly calling, having the same object in view, that of making a livelihood. Men that have no regard for professed principles should seek some other calling and not for the sake of pottage, degrade the holy ministry. The true ministers calling is to preach the gospel and not please the people or to cater to the wants of any sectarian creed for the sake of obtaining employment.

OUR PAPER.

We have been receiving a number of encouraging letters from our patrons, showing that our labors are appreciated, and that the prospects for the future are encouraging. Some say, "If you continue to conduct your paper as you are now doing, you may expect a much larger list from this locality next year." We are glad to hear this. We need your support, and by your aid and the help of God, we will make our paper more than ever worthy of your support the coming year. We have in view a number of improvements, but have not yet come to a definite conclusion as to what they shall be. In fact our paper comes so far short of our ideal of what it should be, that we sometimes become almost disgusted with it, but under existing circumstances we are doing the very best we can. If we had a circulation of some five or six thousand we could put out a much better looking paper for the same price, but unless our circulation is considerably increased it is hardly possible for us to enlarge very much or make any very great improvements. We can not however feel satisfied to enter the new year without some improvements, and our patrons may therefore expect a paper somewhat increased in size and improved in its general appearance. About the middle of next month we will issue a paper which will be a sample of what it will be the coming year. We think some of changing the form, and if our readers have any suggestions to make in reference to this matter they will be thankfully received and considered. While we shall make an effort to enlarge and improve the external appearance, there shall be no change in our motto save to intensify its import. We shall labor to cleave closer to the "ancient landmarks" as set forth by Christ and the apostles, and in this particular especially do we want improvement. By "ancient landmarks" we do not mean the habits and customs of our early Christian fathers any further than they correspond with those which are more ancient—those which Christ and his commissioned apostles made while in this wilderness world. It is to be feared that many are losing sight of these, and accepting those of more recent date, hence the necessity of searching for the old paths and walking therein. We earnestly hope that this may be the object of all who contribute to our columns, that every essay may have a pith and power that will promote ancient Christianity. In short we would like to give to the Brotherhood and the world, if it were possible to do so, a large paper brim full of animation and power.

The Original Man.

There are some of our brethren laboring to prove that man was created, originally, as it was intended he should continue, and that all after trimming and shaping is marring the creature. What was the original design of God relative to man's bodily organization is not our purpose to discuss We are told that he was created in his own image—in his own likeness did he make them. But what that likeness was, we nor no other set of men are able clearly to show.

That Adam and Eve were perfect types of the human race we have not the least doubt, and had they remained pure and uncontaminated from sin, perhaps the artificial covering of fig leaves would never have been needed. But by sin the if has been ruled out and with it, the perfect bodily organization. Sin discovered his nakedness and to hide it artificial means were resorted to. Was this marring the image of God? If it was, it did not cross his intention as he not only sanctioned it but himself made clothing for them. When men's hair commenced growing to an unmanly length we are not told, but that it did grow, and that too, longer than he intended it should remain, is a fact so evident that none can deny. If so, when we cut or trim the hair to a seemly length are we marring the creature? According to the let alone theory we are but as the clothing of the body and the trimming of the hair has the sanction of God, these things are ruled out and the theory centered on the beard. This, by some strange freak of providence, has been made inviolate, like the hump backed cow of India it dare not be touched.

Just what kind of a beard a man would have who would at no time, from childhood to manhood, touch it either with shears, knife or razor, we are not prepared to state, but we would suppose it to be rather fine and dwarfish, as it is a thing that bears cultivation remarkably well, the oftener it is trimmed and pruned the better and stronger it grows, just like every other part of the body, it needs development, and oftentimes it requires considerable culture to raise a full beard, so full that some of our brethren would feel like letting it stand. We throw out this idea from the fact that we have noticed that those who advocate the full beard measure so strongly, generally sport a pretty fine looking beard themselves and nodoubt occasionly shape it up a little by marring or cutting the corners.

"Marring the corners of the beard" is a subject upon which philosophers as well as theologians disagree, but it undoubtedly embodies the idea of trimming or shaping and if so it is certainly a difficult matter to know how much or where the trimming should be done, whether it should be made a matter of custom, fashion, taste or for convienence. We are rather inclined to the latter idea as the body is not the man but the house, and as the occupant is greater than the thing occupied, it should subserve to the wants and the comfort of the occupant. Comfort, conveinence and cleanliness are three conditions in life which God allows us to enjoy and to wear a long full and cultivated beard on the upper lip we are not sure, always corresponds with the idea of comfort, conveinence and cleanliness especially is this so with persons of slovenly habits. It is not our purpose to argue this question either pro or con but would like to see a better position taken by those who wish to argue a full beard than upon the grounds that because man have naturally had beards, they should be so worn. Sin has greatly disarranged the works of nature and many things that appear natural to us are abnormal monstrosities.

SWEETLY SING THE LOVE OF JESUS.

—o—

Sweetly sing the love of Jesus!
Love for you, and love for me;
Heaven's light is not more cheering,
Heaven's dews are not more free.
As a child in pain or terror,
Hides him in his mother's breast,
As a sailor seeks the haven,
We would come to him for rest.

Softly sing the love of Jesus!
For our hearts are full of tears,
As we think how, walking humbly
This low earth for weary years.
Without riches, without dwelling,
Wounded sore by foe and friend,
In the garden, and in dying,
Jesus loves us to the end!

Gladly sing the love of Jesus!
Let us lean upon his arm.
If he loves us, what can grieve us?
If he keeps us, what can harm?
Still he lays his hands in blessing
On each timid little face,
And in heaven the children's angels
Near the throne have always place.

Ever sing the love of Jesus!
Let the day be dark or clear,
Every pain and every sorrow
Brings his own to him more near.
Death's cold waves need not affright us,
When we know He has died,
When we see the face of Jesus
Smiling from the Other Side!

GEORGE WILSON.

Some years ago Mr. Gallaudet was walking in the streets of Hartford; there came running to him a poor boy, whose intelligent eyes fixed the gentleman's attention. The boy inquired, "Please, sir, can you tell me of any one who would like a boy to work for him, and learn to read?"

"Whose boy are you, and where do you live?"

"I have no parents, sir," was the reply, "and have just come from the work-house, because they would not teach me to read."

The gentleman made arrangements with the authorities of the town, and took the boy into his family. He soon acquired the confidence of Mr. Gallaudet by his faithfulness and honesty. He also learned to read, and was allowed the use of his master's library, whereby he made rapid progress in the acquisition of knowledge. It became necessary, after awhile, that George should leave Mr. Gallaudet, when he was apprenticed to a cabinet-maker in the neigborhood. There the same integrity won for him favor. To gratify his inclination for study, his kind master had a little room fitted up for him in the upper part of the shop, where he gave his leisure time to his favorite pursuit. He made rapid attainments in mathematics, in the French language, and in other branches of learning.

After being in this situation a few years, as he sat at tea with the family one evening, he all at once remarked that he wanted to go to France.

"Go to France!" said his master, surprised that the apparently contented and happy youth had thus suddenly become dissatisfied with his situation; "for what?"

"Please, sir, will you ask Mr. Gallaudet to call?" continued George, "and I will explain."

His kind friend was invited accordingly, and at tea-time the apprentice presented himself, with the manuscripts in English and French, and explained his singular intention of going to France.

"In the time Nepoleon," said he, "a prize was offered by the French government for the simplest rule for measuring plain surfaces. The prize has never been awarded, and that method I have discovered."

He then demonstrated his problem to the surprise and gratification of his friend, who immediately furnished him with the means for defraying the expenses, and with letters of introduction to the Hon. Lewis Cass, then the American minister to the court of France. He was introduced to Louis Phillippe, and in the presence of the king, nobles, and plenipotentiaries, this youth demonstrated his problem, amid the plaudits of the court. He received the prize, besides the valuable presents from the king.

He then took letters of introduction and went to the court of St. James, and gained a similar prize, offered by the Royal Society. He then returned to the United States. Here he was preparing to secure the benefit of his discovery by patent, when he received a letter from the Emperor Nicholas himself, one of whose ministers had witnessed the demonstration at London, inviting him to make his residence at the Russian court, and furnishing him with ample means for his outfit.

He complied with the invitation, repaired to St. Petersburg, and became professor of mathematics in the Royal College, under the special protection of the emperor of all the Russias.

One to-day is worth two to-morrows. Boys, use your spare moments well. Had George Wilson been an idle boy, spending his evening in the streets or bad company, he would have never stood "before kings."—Moravian.

Open Hearts and Ready Hands.

One day a teacher said to his class, "Boys, you can all be useful if you will. If you cannot do good by great deeds, you can by little ones."

The boys said nothing, but the teacher saw by their looks that they thought he was mistaken. They did not believe that they could be of any use. So he said:

"You think it is not so, but suppose you just try it for one week."

"How shall we try it?" asked one of them.

"Just keep your eyes open and your hands ready to do anything good that comes in your way all this week, and tell me next Sunday if you have not managed to be useful in some way or other," said the teacher.

"Agreed," said the boys, and so they parted.

The next Sunday those boys gathered round their teacher with smiling lips, and eyes so full of light that they fairly twinkled like the stars. He smiled, as he looked at them, and said:

"Ah, boys, I see by your looks that you have something to tell me."

"We have, we have," they said all together. Then each one told his story.

"I," said one, "thought of going to the well for a pail of water every morning to save my mother trouble and time. She thanked me so much, and was so greatly pleased that I meant to keep on doing it for her."

"And I," said another boy, "thought of a poor old woman whose eyes were too dim to read. I went to her house every day and read a chapter to her from the Bible. It seemed to give her great deal of comfort. I cannot tell how she thanked me.

A third by said, "I was walking along the street wondering what I could do. A gentleman called me, and asked me to hold his house. I did so. He gave me five cents. I have brought it to put into the missionary box."

"I was walking with my eyes open and my hand ready, as you told us," said the fourth boy, "when I saw a little fellow crying because he had lost some pennies in the gutter. I told him not to cry, and I would try to find his pennies. I found them, and he dried his tears and ran off feeling very happy."

A fifth boy said, "I saw my mother was very tired one day. The baby was cross, and mother looked sick and sad. I asked mother to put the baby in my little wagon. She did so, and I gave him a grand ride round the garden. If you had only heard him crow, and seen him clap his hands, teacher, it would have done you good; and oh, how much brighter mother looked when I took the baby indoors again."—Rev. Dr. Newton.

An Interesting Letter No. 3.

WORTHY FRIEND:—

On the 4th of this month, brethren A. D. Garber and his companion, Daniel Yount and his companion, and Joseph M. Cline, all of Augusta Co., Va., passing near here en route for their meeting, to be held near Cartersville, Cumberland Co., Va., had heard that it was my desire to see and converse with some of the Brethren, and they arrived here about 10o'clock that day; dined with us, then bade us adieu about 2 o'clock p. m. For some time, I have been quite anxious to meet some of these people who verily seem to be earnest and pure followers of Jesus Christ as I have plainly seen described in the Bible. I must heartily confess myself well pleased with this whole party as true and favorable representatives of the Brotherhood. I don't think I have spent a happier day since the subject of religion (which has been for some years) has exercised me. This passage of Scripture, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," was silently, but strikingly verified in them. "See how these Christians love one another," cannot be said of all members these days and times. In this little party, by the "oil of joy" in their modest and christianlike countenances, and their faithfulness and love for each other, I was forcibly reminded that they, in heart, were true brothers and sisters of the same Heavenly Family. I conversed a great deal with them, and asked them a number of questions necessary to be answered, which they did with all satisfaction. While for some years my plainness was odd in this fashionable community, after examining their uniform dress, I saw that theirs was even more odd than mine. The "caps," cape and collarless necks and bonnets were a novelty to me. I know such "modest apparel" is scriptural. We had some talk upon the "cap subject" particularly. It pleases me to announce that the signs of the faithfulness of the Brethren, so recently here, did very much attract me to all of them; and if nothing unforeseen presents, I have at last concluded to become a sister in that church, by being immersed by Trine Immersion, then try, by the help of God, to be faithful. I shall write to Mr. Jno. M. Cline, of Mt. Sidney, Augusta Co., Va., by first mail, and inform him of my conclusion as to the time of my immersion, and if it suits him or any other of the Brethren to come here in the next three or four weeks, then it is expected to take place, and if they like, my family have agreed that they may preach here upon that occasion. For some years I have earnestly desired to find the worship which closely corresponded with the word of God; and since I have very deliberately and with full satisfaction been providentially led to my choice, I thank God for it; and my heart-felt desire now and henceforth is, that I may never cease to try and "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness; giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." A few months since, a pamphlet upon "Trine Immersion," was directed to me by an unknown person. The hand of God was clearly discerned in this thing. I then saw advertised the "Perfect Plan of Salvation" and the "Historical Chart of Baptism." I purchased and examined them to my satisfaction. They are by J. H. Moore, Urbana, Champaign Co., Ill. I recommend them to all as being worthy of a careful and serious examination. I have been having my copies of the pamphlets read, and the circulars advertising their place of sale sent to my acquaintances far and wide. In all good things everywhere I strive to do all I can at all times. I must say that not only pure religion has deep interest to me, but I continue to earnestly desire and feel the importance of good education amongst the Brethren. The large majority I believe to be very pious and consistent Christians; and for this thing, they should be supported and encouraged in that medium for enabling their light to shine more extensively and with less feebleness abroad. Amongst strangers, education is the means to pass them resolutely onward and upward, till they become "valiant for the truth."

I well nigh forgot to say that it cost me a great struggle to join a church in which I had no acquaintances and no such place of worship near me. In one sense of the word it did really seem that I was bidding a painful adieu to my most particular friends and relatives. Words are inadequate to describe the emotion it long cost me; but cost what it will, my firm resolve is to essay to be faithful and conscientious even should it result in martyrdom. These are by no means idle words; for in all things I "ponder the path of my feet," then I am immovable by any worldly motives. My faith and patience have been so long and deeply tried that I have grounds to write the foregoing. For some years I have been daily and seriously searching the Scriptures to learn God's will towards me, and upon this Rock I am at last settled. I have great consolation in Jesus Christ.—"In the multitude of my thoughts within me their comforts deligh my soul." "My mouth shall show forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; for I know no the numbers thereof. I will go in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only. Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: O God, who is like unto thee! Thou, which hast showed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me again, and bring me up again from the depths of the earth. Thou shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side." He is faithful that promised. "Good and upright is the Lord: therefore will he teach sinners in the way. The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way. All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimony. What man is he that feareth the Lord? him shall he teach in the way that he shall choose. His soul shall dwell at ease; and his seed shall inherit the earth." It does seem that my spiritual sufferings have been like unto Job Jeremiah and Abraham Some years ago I doubted the power described in the Bible that was had upon these persons; and finally I doubted much of God's "power and might" with any one. The result was that His hand was laid upon me to teach me the truth of his wonderful works and ways; and where I was once blind, I now see, and I can truly say, "Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself. O God of Israel, the Savior" "Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is The Lord." "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen, that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me." I know His "power and might" now, and often tremble for thoughtless persons in view of this thing. I must conclude this theme for the present. I shall ever desire the faithful and daily prayers of all God's people; for when we would do good, evil is present with us. "Take heed when ye think ye stand, lest ye fall. "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation. Satan goes about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, or entice from the way. This is Sabbath morning, and now as I am and have long been exercised as to the proper observance of that day, I have concluded to write something upon the subject. We are commanded to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." I am often pained to see so much disregard for this command. I often see and hear of social visits being made upon that holy day, and when meeting, instead of conversing upon sacred matters to the edifying of one another, the news of the day, neighborhood gossip, farming matters and various kinds of business affairs are allowed to engage the hours of that day. This should not be so, especially with those who are on the Lord's side; for we should strive to become examples to all around, and let our light shine in all respects. In the 58th chapter of Isaiah, it reads, "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy day of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." In the New Testament, 12th chapter and 12th verse of Matthew, it says, "It is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days." Unless necessity requires it, no traveling, no social visits and no worldly conversation should be indulged in upon the Lord's day. Pure motives and excellent reasons actuated me to express myself in the foregoing plain words upon the subject of the Sabbath day. I address it to all whom it may concern, and hope they may heed my feeble words and those of the BIBLE. Some may say, but that is to straight laced for me. I add this in reply: In the beginning of 1870 I was deeply convicted upon the abuse of the Sabbath day as well as various other things. I accordingly strove to heed the counsel of God in all respects. When I first began and for a long time, practiced the habit of refraining from speaking my own words, and finding my own pleasure, it was to me as a 'straight jacket;" however, I resisted the devil, and he fled from me after a sufficient effort and continued practice. Should we happen in worldly company on the Sabbath, we should neither introduce nor encourage any worldly conversation beyond what we cannot profitably avoid. Under all circumstances, we must strive to be patient, yet obedient examples in any and everything To one who posses a small share of love and knowledge of the Savior, this course would be quite a strait indeed. To make it become pleasant and easy, we must think of Him much during the week days. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him to them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine with the Lord of hosts in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

NOTES OF TRAVEL.

BY W. H. BAILEY & WILLIAM SCOTT.

Dear Pilgrim :—

A few lines for you, it being some time since I wrote you anything. I left home on the 13th day of August to attend to appointments. 14th at Clearfork on Coal river, at 11 o'clock, brother William Scott of Mercer addressed us from the text, "Lay aside every weight and sin that so easily beset," to an awaiting and attentive congregation. Thence we went down Coal river, 40 miles, to the neighborhood of Peytona, preaching twice a day for two days to large congregations, it being the first time that the Brethren ever tried to preach in this part of Boon Co., W. Va. Good and lasting impressions were made I hope.

Thence, Aug. 16th, to Bro. James Whittens, Lincoln Co., where we were refreshed by the kindness of his family. 17th, preaching on Sycamore at 11 o'clock to a multitude of people who heard and saw strange things this day, for while singing the concluding hymn, five or six persons came forward and gave their hands. One of them was Francis Fisher, wife of Bro. P. A. Fisher. They were then asked the usual questions and then all immersed in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This being the first time a great many ever saw the like, it seemed strange. Meeting at candle-light again, house crowded and good attention. 18th preaching on Skerry, congregation large and good order. After preaching we went to where there was water, and as many as were ready were baptized as before.

Thence back to Sycamore, found a good many awaiting us on the water-side where we again administered the ordinance of baptism. Here there was much rejoicing over sinners that had repented.

Thence to brother William Stowers an afflicted brother whom we annointed some six weeks previous. Some of our rich brethren could lend to the Lord by sending brother Stowers some money, as the family is in needy circumstances. His address is Griffithville, Lincoln Co, W. Va. Taking our leave of the needy, but christian family, we started for Upper Falls Coal, Kanawha Co., where we arrived, at one o'clock, at the house of brother and now sister Fisher's. No preaching to-day, 20th. Next day, 21st, preaching at Wm. Whites at 11 o'clock, good attention and general interest. Three o'clock at brother Fisher's. Next morning attended to the marriage ceremony of one of their daughters. Thence to brother Starriel Meadon's, meeting at 11 o'clock, raining heavy, but the people came, some of them being very wet.

Here we closed and in company with brother J. H. Starkey, who had met us, we started for the Capital of this State, arrived at the going down of the sun, and here we preached at the residence of brother Stakey's to a congregation, mostly Methodist, and we told them what first caused the devil to dread immersion, which the reader will find under that heading in another place. Left the Capital city next morning homeward bound, where we arrived after three days travel on horse-back. Found all well thank God.

Dear Pilgrim:—

On the 3rd. inst. our quarterly church meeting came off, and among other business was that of administering baptism to four persons, and despite secret societies, one of the great drawbacks to our church, 3 of the 4 were men. There was at the same time two received by letter. Am sorry to say that one sister was expelled from the church for disobedience. We are always made to feel sorry when any have to be disowned, but such is nevertheless the case. While some are casting in their lots with the people of God, others become contaminated with the world and yield to the lust of the flesh, and then of course we must hold them as "heathens and publicans."

The church also concluded to hold a Lovefeast, the Lord willing, commencing on the 3rd day of October, at the church House near Mexico, to which place persons can arrive by rail from the west at 10: 40 A. M. and from the east at one o'clock P. M. the day of meeting if any do not want to come sooner. The usual invitation, especially to ministering brethren. Meeting will commence at 10 A. M. J. B LAIR.

Dear Pilgrim:—

I drop you a few lines to let you know how we are getting along down here in the south. I will say the health of our country is good at this time, but we had an unfavorable season. The wheat crop was not much over half a crop, oats about half a crop, corn is tolerable. We are still living here as in a lonely land. There are now twelve of us members here. So far we have been living as a band of brethren in deed. On the fifth we had a Lovefeast. Bro. Abraham Garber, Joseph Cline and Daniel Yount were our speakers. There was one added to the Church by baptism. Some others seem to be seriously wrought upon. We had a large and attentive congregation, we truly can say, the harvest is great but the laborers are few. Is there no ministering Brother that feels that he could live and labor in this part of God's moral vineyard? We plead and beg and pray for some one to come over into Macedonia and help us. There can be homes had here for as many as feels to come, land ranges from four to ten dollars per acre. There often can be two or three thousand acres bought adjoining. The most of the land in the country can be bought. Why do brethren in the northern states pay such high prices for land when it in the south it can be had so low.

Church News.

Bro. Brumbaugh:—

Perhaps a little Church news will be of interest to your readers. We, the Brethren of the Bear Creek congregation, are progressing slowly. We now number about 47 members, have three speakers and three deacons. We have preaching every Lord's day which is generally well attended. We had our Church meeting on the Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August—pretty well represented by the members and the adjoining churches. The meeting went off pleasantly, all being in love and union. Two precious souls made application to become members of the Church. The Church next considered the propriety of holding a Lovefeast this fall, and it was decided to hold one notwithstanding our accommodations are poor, as we have no church-house to hold it in. The meeting will be held at Bro. Amos Stutzman's house 3½ miles east of Morrisonville, Ill., on the 26th and 27th of September. W. B.

(Remainder crowded out.)

Dear Pilgrim:—

I will give you a few items of news.

Our church here is still slowly moving onward. We have meeting nearly every Sunday at different points in the district. There are at present seven speakers and six deacons in the district. Yesterday was our Church meeting to make preperations for our approaching Lovefeast which will be held, the Lord willing, on the 26th day of this month. I do hope that we may have a pleasant waiting before the Lord. Then, we should all be made to rejoice that we yet have those glorious privileges extended, that we can have Communion seasons where we can be revived again and to go on our way rejoicing.

D. D. SHIVELY.

Dear Pilgrim:—

I desire a few lines in thy columns concerning the death of our dear mother as she has many relations in Pa. Ohio and some in Minnesota. Her father, Daniel Fiant and his wife Saloma Fiant, emigrated from Pa. to Indiana when she was but four years old. She was born in 1812, was married to Philip Dice in the year 1833 and in the year 1870 they emigrated to Mo. She was a member of the church for about 40 years, was loved by all who knew her. She departed this live June the 5th 1874. Disease, Typhoid fever. She was sick four week lacking three days, suffered very much but bore her afflictions with Christian patience, two weeks previous to her death she was anoiuted in the name of the Lord, she was resigned to God's will and said there was a better place for her. She leave six children eleven grandchildren to mourn there loss. Four of the children are members of the the church. Funeral discorse by Eld. D. Hendrix.

DIED.

BLICKENSTAFF.—In the Fairview congregation, Ind., August 15th, 1874, Owen Edward, infant son of Isaac I. and Mary Blickenstaff, aged 1 year and three months. Funeral service by the writer and others.

ULTY.—Same day, same neighborhood, and near the same time, Sarah Bell, infant daughter of friends John and Catharine Ulty, aged 4 months and 9 days. Funeral services by the same, from 1 Peter 1:24. ISAAC BILLHIMER.

FRY.—The wife of brother Samuel Fry departed this life on the 5th day of Sept. 1874, aged 30 years.

She died on her thirtieth birth day. She leaves a husband and three small children to mourn their loss. Funeral services by brother I. Fisher and D. Balsbaugh, to a large concourse of people. J. B. LAIR.

ZUG.—Near Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., August 30th, 1874, Ellen W. daughter of Joseph and sister Mary Zug, aged 9 years and 3 months. Disease, croup.

The day before her death she told her mother that she was going to heaven. My prayer is that the grace of God may help us to prepare ourselves, that when the time is here that we have to leave this world, we can say as this child, "I am going to heaven." Funeral services by D. Garber and Samuel Greybill in German, and John Gibble in English, from 1 Peter 1: 24, 25.

SNOWBERGER.—In the Snake Spring Valley district, Bedford Co., Pa, Sept. 13th 1874, Elder Andrew Snowberger, aged 72 years, 5 months and 29 days.

His disease was dropsy, of which he suffered severely, and at times intensely, for upwards of a year, the greater part of which time he had to pass in a sitting position, and in which posture he calmly breathed his last, almost unnoticed, as though he was falling into a natural sleep. He bore his suffering with an extraordinary degree of patience and resignation. Not a murmur escaped his lips. He often expressed a desire to be relieved of his suffering, but always qualified his expressions with the words: "But as the Lord will so I will be satisfied," and: "The Lord knows best what is good for me," and similar expressions. He leaves a sorrowing wife and 12 children (3 sons and 9 daughters) all, members of the church, (two of the sons being ministers,) 59 grand-children and 5 great-grand-children to mourn their loss. Two sons and 11 grand-children having preceded him.

The subject of the above notice lived in the bonds of matrimony with his wife, whose maiden name was Rosanna Snider, a little over 50 years. They were both members of the church for 48 years. He served as visiting brother about 17 years, and in the several degrees of the ministry over 30 years, having been ordained and served as overseer of the church a little over 2 years. Funeral occasion improved from Rev. 14: 13, by elders John W. Brumbaugh, Jocob Miller and Jacob Steel.

DANIEL SNOWBERGER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The time of holding the Communion Meeting at Milltown (Eld. D. Kellers Congregation) bas beeo changed to the first and second days of October.

—Eld. D. D. Shively of La Place Ill. says: "I have just been informed that this morning—Sept. 13— Eld. John Wine breathed his last. By his death the Church has lost a faithful member and the community a good citizen. Obitnary will be sent."

—Our friend Benjamin Garber (son-in-law of Eld. James Lane,) Germany Valley, this county, died very suddenly one day last week. He was a young man of considerable promise and was cut down in the midst of a vigorous manhood. He leaves a wife and one child to mourn their untimely loss.

—We are informed that a man from Kansas says the grasshoppers were so numerous that they so darkened the air that the sun could not be seen for three successive days. This seems a little thick for us. If any of readers of this state have facts we will be glad to record them. Tell us how they come, what they do and how long they stay.

—Bro. J. B. Hershberger of Liberty Va. says: Our arm, Bedford Church, was organized about 18 months ago, with a few members, under the oversight of Eld. Peter Nininger of Botetourt, and now numbers over one hundred members, with five deacons, and two speakers in the first degree. Some twelve additons in the last four months, and others seem to be counting the cost notwithstanding we are in the midst of Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians.

—Bro. S. C. M. of Brooklin Iowa sends us the following sad account: A man a few miles Southeast of Brooklin undertook to commit suicide by inflicting a dangerous cut across his throat, arm and bowels. The cut was so deep that his entrials vearly nearly came out. At first he resisted an effort to sew them up but afterwards changed his mind. It was not known why he committed the rash deed. He was still living when last heard from.

—Eld. Daniel Nehr's address is changed from Rossvillle Ind. to Salem, Marion Co. Ill He says: "Our present ministry consists of Eld. Daniel Nehr assisted by Eld. Jacob Ulery, Henry Harshberger and Andrew Nehr, two last, in the first degree of office. David Shinafelt and John F. Nehr are our deacons. Our young and insolated Church is slowly increasing in members. We have during this year, received three by baptism and six by letter—have some 40 members in all."

—Read the account of Bro. H. D. Davy's misston to Kentucky. This shows that the press may be made the pioneer in the great missonary work as it was the PILGRIM that first preached in Bro. Fitzgeralds family in Ken. Also read Julia A. Wood's interesting epistle. Here, too, the PILGRIM first introduced the primitive Christians, and then followed Bro. J. S. Moore with his theological hammer, then were sent then personal harbingers. Hundreds of such instances might be recorded. Brethren and sisters, labor and pray on, we shall yet reap if we faint not.

—After a considerable drouth the heavens have at last overspread with dripping clouds and we are now having a very seasonable rain. Many farmers stopped seeding on account of the dry and dustiness of the ground. The work will now commence again and be completed as rapidly as possible.

We have had fully an average season. The wheat, in places, was a little thin but on the whole, the crop was good and of a number one quality. The oats was short and under the average but the corn will be very good.

—From Washington Co. Iowa: This was a very dry and hot summer. Lately we had a good soaking rain, so as to soak the ground for plowing and filling up our wells. Crops generally good except potatoes which we think will come yet.

Fall pastures promises to be good. The grasshoppers that there is so much talk about through Kan. and the western part of Iowa are still at their destructive work robbing thousands of families of their beasts. Many, we hear are leaving their homes and land in search of work and provision, while we in Eastern Iowa are still blest yet with plenty and also some to spare for the needy. We, so far, had no grasshoppers in Washington Co. We would say to those contemplating coming west stop in this country and see us, 5 and 7 miles west of Washington.

HENRY ETTER.

Grace Hill Iowa.

—From S. C. Miller of Poweshiek Co. Iowa we have the following: This has been, with us, a very hot and dry summer—long spells between rain but generally plenty when it came. We have been blessed with a bountiful harvest of wheat so much so that I think, brethren who have not paid for their PILGRIM should do so now. It is not pleasant for agents to dun them for it. Our corn prospects are remarkably good. Surely we should be thankful to a gracious God, who has so abundantly supplied our temporal wants and who is quite as willing to supply our spiritual wants if we love and obey him.

I am glad you think of starting a bookbindery as I wish my papers bound. I have two Vol. of the PILGRIM I wish bound. I will also see how many of the brethren have papers to bind. (If all interested would get to work in this way we could soon determine whether or not it could be advisable to start a bindery, Ed.) I hope you will make the PILGRIM for 1875 as interesting as possible. I would be pleased to have our Church paper consolidated and have a larger paper.

We also feel favorable to consolidation and think, have done our part in that direction, but consolidation or no consolidation if our readers and agents will work right well for us and the Lord will, they shall have a larger paper for 1875.

The Famine in Asia Minor.

FIVE THOUSAND PERSONS DEAD OF STARVATION IN ONE DISTRICT—DEAD BODIES LYING IN THE STREETS.

Rev. Dr. Clark, of the American Board of Foreign Missions, has received a letter from Rev. J. O. Barrows, of Ces area, dated July 10, in which he gives some thrilling details of the terrible famine now prevailing in that region. Mr. Barrows writes:

"While at Yozgat, which is eighty or ninety miles north of us, I witnessed the ravages of the famine, which is very severe, and also beyond toward Angora. Many vilages are entirely deserted. In some, one or two or three or four families or parts of families remain. In the district of Songarlu, (which is beyond Yozgat, and in which city there is a Protestant church, as many as 5,000 persons have died of starvation. But the horrors of this famine are undescribable. Many people have subsisted on grass for several week and then died. Beggars have flocked to the cities, and there many have died because they could not get a morsel of bread. Old men, mothers with babes at their brests, young men that have become children, young boys and girls half naked, begging, crying fainting, dying—this is famine. Beggars have flocked to our doors; we have given what we could, and are still doing the same; some relief has been afforded by contributions of friends in Stamboul and other places, but it is only a drop in the bucket. Mr. Farnsworth has made a long tour among the famine-stricken people, and given from friends in Stamboul some $500, and perhaps by this means 500 people will be kept alive, but multitudes are dying and will yet die. The people of this country give but little with rare exceptions, the more wealthy Moslems give nothing. Selfishness reigns. Every man lives for himself. The Mohammedan religion is a religion of selfishness. If a man does any good deed it is that he himself may be benefited. There is no public spirit—no love to man as such. But what this famine is can be known only by those who see it. We say so many have died. These statistics are cold things. Famine is the going out in utter darkness, wretchedness, and death of all that goes to make up of human life. You find a little half-naked girl of eight or ten years sitting in some corner of the street crying. What is the matter? Her father and mother are dead, or have abandoned her. She has not a friend or one to care for her on earth; she has nothing to eat. She pleads and reaches out her bony hands to every passer-by; or perhaps gets enough during the day to buy one piece of bread. This kind of life lasts a few weeks and she is picked up by those who have been ordered to bury the dead that they may find in the streets. When in Yozgat I heard a cry of children in the crowded streets before me. I looked and saw three little girls. The oldest was perhaps ten or eleven, the second six or seven, and the youngest three or four. The little one wanted to be carried. The oldest one was too feeble, but finaly bending down took the little one on her back. The other child clung to her ragged clothes and so they went on, all crying togther. But such a sight! It made an impression that I believe will never be effaced from my mind. These children were so poor that the flesh which covered their teeth was a mere skin, and as they cried the expression of their countenances was something more sad and pitiable than I had conceived possible before. These three were left clinging to each other, dying together with no one to care for them. One learns hereat such a time as this that the tender mercies of the wicked are indeed cruel. One is forced to exclaim, Oh, God, what will the end be! why must there be such a terrible suffering! But God is good and man is sinful.—Advent Times.

—Bramwell was a plain preacher, and to some extent an uncultivated preacher; but he was full of faith, and zeal, and his ministry was attended with marvelous power. He was preaching in a little village, on one occasion, and the German minister, Trubner, was induced to go and hear him. Trubner was a very cultivated scholar, and a profound critic; and when some of Bramwell's friends saw him there, they said, "Alas! alas! for poor Bramwell; how Trubner will criticise him!" Precious little did Bramwell care for him, or for all the philosophers under the sun. He preached, and set before his audience the everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ; and when Trubner went out of church, one of his friend said to him, "How do you like him? Don't you think he wonders a good deal in his preaching?" "Oh, yes, said the old Lutheran, "he do wonder most delightfully from de subject to de heart."

—A convention meets shortly in Bonn, Prussia, called by a committee of which Dr. Dollinger is the head. It will be composed of men belonging to different churches who desire "the grand future union of Christians," and who, on the present occasion will examine together the formulas of faith of the early ages of the church, as well as the doctrines and institutions deemed essential in the Eastern and Western churches prior to the separation.

POETRY.

The Vale of Faith.

BY WESLEY.

I pensively wandered adown a sweet valley,
Where flowers were blooming abundant and fair;
The birds in trees sang their anthems so gaily
For beauty and peace met for conference there.

A beautiful stream through the vale did meander,
Whose waves danced in the sun's golden beams;
The zephyrs of morn through the ivy did wander,
Like visions of love in a childs sweetest dreams.

No poisonous vapors pervaded it bowers,
No spirit impure desecrated its sod,
No mortal impenitent cull its sweet flowers,
Perfumed by the breath of a crucified God.

Its dewy retreat to my soul worn and weary,
Imparted a joy like to Heaven's own balm,
As fadeth the gloom of my fears dark and dreary,
Succeeded by faith's overshadowing calm.

A beautiful stranger attracted my vision,
His robes bore the impress of Heaven's bright glow,
Befitting the gleam of this valley elysian,
And pure the spangles of wind-driven snow.

I asked him the name of this haven of beauty,
Whose urivaled pleasures my senses did greet;
Said he "'tis the hire of diligent duty,
'Tis found at the great King Immanuel's feet."

ORIGINAL ESSAYS.

"Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight soul were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us." 1 Peter 3:20,21.

From the above text we understand that the ark and the flood were a figure, or type of baptism, which is somewhat plainer expressed in the Revised Translation of the text, which is rendered thus: "which in an antitype immersion, now saves us also." Campbell renders it thus: "The antitype, immersion, does also, now save us."

Now the antitype must have a similarity to the type or figure. I will now state my views, how the flood typified or was a figure of baptism. The apostle says: they were saved by water, as baptism now saves us. The antideluvian world, Noah and family included, represented the penitent sinner; and the water of the flood, the water of baptism. The Antideluvians were immersed in the water, Noah and family as well as the rest, and as Noah and family emerged from the flood, (having been preserved alive in the Ark) a new people, or new world, and the others were drowned; so the sinner, having repented, is immersed in water, and emerges therefrom a new creature, the old man being drowned. The sinner then is saved from his sins by baptism, as Noah and family were saved by water.

But some one will, perhaps say: was not Noah saved from the flood by the ark? Certainly he was, but this saving is not what Peter alludes to, when he says: they were saved by water; mark, by water and not by the ark. Well, from what then was Noah saved by water? Answer, from the sinful and corrupt people of the world, to live among which it must have been as unpleasant and loathsome for the few righteous souls, as it is for awakened and enlightened sinners, to live any longer in sin. So the saving of those eight souls by water was a figure of the saving of the sinner by baptism.

The passing of the children of Israel through the sea was also a figure of baptism. Paul says: "Our fathers were baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." See 1 Cor. 10:2. The Egyptians, including the children of Israel, represented the sinner; they all went into the sea, and the Egyptians were drowned and the Israelites came up out of the sea a new people and nation and were saved from the oppression of the Egyptians, as the penitent sinner is immersed in water, and the old man is drowned, and a new man comes up out of the water and saved from his sins.

But the posterity of Noah did not all remain righteous, neither did the children of Israel all remain faithful. But the Lord has always preserved a remnant, who did prove faithful; and I fear that there will be only a remnant of those who are baptized and saved from their sins, who will remain faithful.

For as the Israelities, and, no doubt, the prosterity of Noah, met with trails and temptations, so will those who are baptized into Jesus Christ also meet with such, and if we do not watch and pray and earnestly, strive against sin, and confide in the promises of God, we may be overcome and fall from grace and come short of the promised rest in the Heavenly Canaan, as the unbelieving and unfaithful Israelites came short of rest which was promised to them in the earthly Canaan. Let us then, brethren and sisters strive manfully, and not desire again to return to the fleshpots of Egypt, but look forward, with faith and confidence, to the great reward which is promised, if we overcome and hold out faithful to the end.

TO APOSTATES.

Not remembering of having seen many, if any, articles addressed to this class of our fellow beings, I am moved to drop a few remarks under this caption, hoping to comfort at least the tender hearted, sympathizing friends, if not the apostatized themselves. Dear friends that you are now freed from the power over you, which is vested in the church, is to you no source of real lasting enjoyment; for while you say within yourself, that this society shall not govern me, you say in substance that "this man Christ shall not reign over us," if so be that you so say of that society which is found upon the Rock Christ Jesus, or established upon his word and doctrine, as you have yourself professed it is, and which you must first, by substantial evidence prove not to be, and reasonably deny. And while you choose to ignore the shadow of her wings, and like Jerusalem "will not" be gathered together of Him as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, so long are you subject to the same awful denunciation. While yet you sojourned within, you oft rejoiced in your hopes, and when roaming in the cities of the dead, and while hearing "from the tomb the doleful sound;" oft did you in spirit lean upon the arms of your beloved, "the chiefest among ten thousand," with a will to submit yourself unto Him, reclining upon his word, and reposed in his promises, hence triumphed over all the fears and dreads of the corporeal dissolution, having a hope, a home, a treasure beyond. But while now you deny or reject the society of God's choice—no more under his mild and peaceful reign—no more ardent, and constant in His delightful services, and no more realize His comforting presence where once you was wont to meet in His name, so long have you before you a "certain fearful looking for of judgment and firy indignation, which shall devour the adversaries," instead of the comforting hopes you enjoyed while in the society of solders of the cross. No doubt under the various circumstances of all your class, all in a certain measure justify yourselves, while even some wish to add to their favor, and to the authenticity of their statement of things pertaining to their cases, by abuseful language against those with whom they formerly associated, and those who exercised in their respective duties in bringing about justice and just judgement. Those under charge of the higher duties and who are required to exercise themselves in council most, will be most severely censured and most misrepresented. This is the inclination of the apostate even as it is the inclination of the sparks to fly upward and of water to flow downward. Hence O, how little does it avail you, seeing the church knows it, and the world expects it, and again seeing that while one expects to be misrepresented it is harder to find the truth of such statements in him and easiest to discover the real whereabouts of him who blows the trumpet loudest. So then, take courage, you who have quietly submitted to the chastnings of that Father who "chasteneth every son whom He receiveth." Have you been found guilty of sin, of a carnal nature, suffer yourself to be "delivered unto satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. 1. Cor. 5: 5.

Have you withdrawn from the fold for the purpose of being permitted a privilege that the church of Christ did not allow you, then her disapprobation proves to you the error of your course; and if you persist on against the church and spirit of the word,—accomplish such design, hoping in the future and after such ends gained or lost, to be pardoned and reclaimed; then the language of the apostle to the Hebrews will apply to to you, which reads thus, "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, their remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgement and firy indignation which shall devour the adversaries." Heb. 10: 26, 27. Oh! what a fearful crisis is now awaited by those who are concerned about your welfare, and the welfare of those under your immediate influence,—waiting with that emotion of soul when filled with a sense of fears and hope mingled. If your object is to take revenge, you must remember that "we know Him that hath said vengence belongeth unto me, I will repay saith the Lord." Heb. 10: 30.

If you have taken this method to be allowed forbidden means to obtain ill gain and acquire wealth, Oh, "how hardly shall the rich enter into the kingdom of heaven." Better "make to yourself friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when you fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations." Luke 16: 8. If you have attained to this state through mere stubborness, remember that such is as iniquity and idolatry. (1. Sam 15: 23.) And that the time of ignorance of the idolatry "God winked at, but now commandeth all men every where to repent." Acts 17; 30.

Oh! return then, ye erring ones, take courage in this that when the apostles found one who was baptized with the same batpism that you was bapt zed with, and for all that they told him that his heart was not right in the sight of God, and perceived that he was in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity, yet could comfort him with this hope, receiving advice that he should pray God if perhaps the thought of his heart might be forgiven him. Is your condition worse than his? He requested of the brethren to pray for him. Oh, friend have you done so much? Have you come this nigh? Oh! come that we may forgive you, as we pray our heavenly Father also to forgive us.

The Berlin High School.

We are happy to be able to announce to the friends of the enterprise that the local quota, of thirty thousand dollars, has been subscribed by the brethren and fr ends within the limits of Berlin congregation. Besides this amount we have nearly six thousand dollars on the book from other places, especially from Elklick congregation. As may be anticipated our next concern is, to raise the remaining sixty-four thousand, and our mind is being much exercised upon the most expeditious method by which this great work can be accomplished. And as we believe from evidences before us, that other brethren and sisters are contemplating the work, we desire through this communication to solicit their further advice and suggestions.

In addition to what has already been subscribed we expect to secure from ten or fifteen thousand dollars more in Somerset county, making from forty-five to fifty thousand dollars in this county. The above amount will be secured by personal visits and solicitations. It will require much time to raise the balance in the same way, as it will be necessary to travel over a large territory. Of course it will only be a matter of time but, time you know is precious. It would be very pleasant for us to travel over the entire United States, to solicit patronage for our school, but i would be more pleasant to do so after the school has been established and in operation. Hence, we have thought of a "skimming" process, by which the cream might be gathered. With this cream, perhaps, the school might be put in operation, and afterwards the whole brotherhood could be thoroughly canvassed. A note upon this subject from brother J. M. Zuck, of Lebanon, Ohio is just in season. It is as fololws:

A SUGGESTION.

"The school enterprise should have the hearty support of all who are friendly to the same. A good cause will suffer as much and perhaps more from the neglects of its friends than from the opposition of its enemies. Indeed the term success always has associated with it the idea of opposition, of difficulties and obstacles to be overcome. The greater the obstacles surmounted the greater the success.

The chief obstacle to overcome at this stage of the work seems to be the raising of $100,000. If the friends of the cause were so minded, they could, it seems to me, remove that difficulty in a very few weeks. It may be months before the authorized agent can get around to see all. In view of this, how would it be if some such plans as this were adopted to expedite matters and get up at once a little healthy competition in the much neglected duty of giving. Suppose generous brother A. should signify through the Companion or Pilgrim, or both, that he is willing to subscribe $1,000 on a certain condition—say that nine others will volunteer to do the same within a certain specified time. Brother B. who is quite rich may feel able and willing (Lord loveth such) to give $5,000. His condition might be that four others will give the same. Brother C. might not be able to offer more than $500, but if he can induce nineteen others to do the same, his influence will be worth a good round sum. Brother D. whose heart is bigger than his purse, may have but 25,50 or 100 dollars to spare, but he, no doubt can find a large class of brethren in the same perdicament, and who will respond to his appeal with that readiness and generosity which usually characterize those whose hearts have out been wedded to this world's goods."

We can approve of this plan and should be much pleased to have the endowment raised in the way proposed. But whether it be done by this method or by another, we have one request to make to every friend of the cause of higher education among us. And we make it earnestly, hoping, too, that it will be responded to with a promptness worthy the friends and purons of a noble cause. We want to hear from the friends of the school; want to know who they are; where they are and how many they are. And our request is, that each and every one of them, brethren and sisters, will invest at least one sent in a postal card (a letter would be preferred) and write to us, giving the sentiments and feelings of the writer, and the prevailing sentiments in the community in which he or she lives. It appears to us that among a people who could be prevailed upon to contribute sixty thousand dollars to a purpose, there ought to be a respectable number who would volunteer their donations and at least some who would tender their services collecting the offerings. In our estimation an excellent beginiug has been made; a good location has been selected, a subscription headed by thirty-six thousand dollars, with an organization to prosecute the work. Let us now go manfully to work, and push the enterprise to a speedy consummation. If such an institution is needed and desired among us, now is the time when it may easily be established. And, so far as our individual influence is concerned we feel like saying, Now or never! Brothers and sisters, please let us hear from every one of you who is favorable to the institution contemplated, and that right soon. Address me at Berlin, Somerset County, Pa.

REFLECTIONS.

Those of us who are in the least careful noticing the lapse of time, the consequent rapid change of the seasons; and that all around us is subject to decay, cannot fail to see how obvious the truth,—that the frailty of man, and the perpetuity of God's promises is the greatest contrast the universe presents. We need not unfold the record of ages, we need not read the rise, progress, and ultimate decay of oriental greatness, we need not refer to the melancholy history of Jerusalem,—"the city of the great King, to convince us of the appropriateness of the proclamation of Isaiah,—"All flesh is grass and all the goodness thereof is as the flowers of the field. The grass withereth, the flowers fadeth, because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it; surely the people is grass. The grass withereth the flowers fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever. (Is. xl: 1, 6, 7, 8.) Let us for a moment meditate upon the rapid changes that have taken place within our own recollection. Little less than a twelvemouth ago the earth was covered with its mantle of snow, frozen fetters bound the streams; nature, as it were, for a while, suspended her productive power; but soon genial Spring came and dispelled the gloom of winter. Summer was rapidly ushered in, and almost imperceptibly it comes to an end; already the foliage of the forest assumes an autumnal tint, and soon the cold, chilling winds, freighted with the first white harbinger of winter, will again whistle at our doors, and all nature snare in the circumstances of the cold, rigorous season of winter. While we have thus been meditating upon the changes of a few short months, what remembrance of other and more serious changes have been brought to our minds! What adverse changes have befallen mankind! Wealthy cities, which a year ago were rich in architectural beauty, have been robbed of their attractiveness by the raging elements, and hurled with all their grandeurs to the dust.

Millions of accountable beings who, a year ago, with a bright future before them, have passed away. Some with sanguine hopes and spirits gay, started into life with prospects of a long sojourn here, have been hastily ushered to the realms of eternity. Others too, who having by years of labor, prepared for a long and gratifying stay upon the earth, thinking they would now enjoy the fruits of their labor have suddenly exchanged, time for eternity. How suggestive of the scriptual declaration, "bodily labor profiteth little" Others too, who had only entered upon the stage of existence, like the flowers of summer, have quickly passed away. So it is with man and all his greatness —transitory, and destined to speedy dissolution; everywhere we see written in unmistakable letters, by the hand of time, "Passing away." We see it in the falling leaf, that was once so beautifully green now changed to variegated tints, lossing its slender hold from the branch it falls trembling to "mother earth." We see it in the drooping flower that once refreshed our senses with its delightful fragrance, it withers away. We see it in the fast decaying trees, that has stood for centuries the lord of the forest, once the tall, mystic, living oak, now the barren, leafless, decaying habitation of insects and worms. We see it in the trembling form that totters by, once the graceful ereet form of stalwart manhood, in the emaciated frame, the dimmed eye, the blanched cheek, and the wrinkled hands, this same being was once a father's pride, a mother's joy, once a smiling infant, a promising youth, once a stalwart, healthy man; the beloved husband of a faithful wife, the kind father of dutiful children, he now stands upon the verge of the grave, and suddenly he is no more. So it is with all things visble —perishable, fleeting, and like a shadow upon the wall, sooner or later all must be shrouded in oblivion.

But on the other hand how perpetual, how abiding the word of God. Through empires, kingdoms, cities, all the grandeur of this world, heaven and earth itself shall pass away, —the word of the Lord endureth forever. The promises of God are not yea, and nay, but they are yea, and amen. God Promised unto old father Abraham many things and they were all fulfilled. God promised unto his people a Savior, whose name should be called Wonderful Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace, and the promise was verified by giving his only child Jesus, as a ransom for us all, Many soul cheering promises has God given us, He has promised to be with his people even unto the end of time, palms of victory, crowns of glory, mansions of eternal rest, and everlasting peace and happiness, is promised unto all who obey the requirements of his saving gospel. How gratifying then for us to know that the promises of God never fail.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away but my word shall not pass away." Let us then have faith in the promises of Jesus, live a life of obedience to the commandments of God, and eventually enter through the golden gates into the city of God.

Life A Mighty River.

Life bears us on, like the current of a mighty river. Our boats, at first, glide down the narrow channel through the play fulmurmurings of the little brook and the windings of its borders. The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads; the flowers on the brink seem to offer themselves to our hands; we are happy in hope, and we grasp eagerly at the beauties around us; but the stream hurries us on, and still our hands are empty. We are animated by the moving picture of enjoyments and industry which passes before us; we are excited by some short-lived disappointment, but our energy and our dependence are both in vain. The stream bears us on, and our joys and our griefs are alike left behind us; we may be shipwrecked, but we cannot anchor; our voyage may be hastened, but it cannot be delayed; whether rough or smooth, the river hastens toward its home till the roaring of the ocean is in our ears, and the tossing of the waves are beneath our feet, and the land lessons from our eyes, and the floods are lifted up around us, and we take our last leave of the earth and its inhabitants, and of our further voyage there is no witness but the Infinite and Eternal. And do we still take so much anxious thought for future days, when the days which have gone by have so strangely and so uniformly deceived us? Can we still so set our hearts on the creatures of God, when we find, by sad experience, that the Creator only is permanent? Or shall we not rather lay aside every weight, and every sin which doth so easily beset us, and think ourselves henceforth as wayfaring persons only, who have no abiding inheritance but in the hope of a better world, and to whom even that world would be worse than hopeless, if it were not for our Lord Jesus Christ, and the interest we have obtained in His mercies?

The Delay of Our Criticism.

As our essay in No. 34 of the PILGRIM has undergone several criticisms, we in our efforts to vindicate humble gospel truth feel somewhat impressed with the necessity of a review of said criticism, and as such is looked for by the readers of the PILGRIM, we feel it our duty to say that a review is being prepared. Its delay is occasioned by the present throng of duties with which we are at this time surrounded.

For some time we have had two times of service each Lord's day, besides funeral labor. As the above labor falls exclusively upon us it necessarily occupies time, both in actual labor and in thought.

There is a good deal of illness with us, some in our own family. We have just returned from a visit to our old grandmother Hartsaugh Wyandott Co. Ohio, of whom we had received notice that on walking out one eve she slipped and fell, breaking her hip-joint. Unfortunately she died before our arrival. She was about 81 years old, and the wife of Isaac Hartsaugh, the old house-keeper in the Honey Creek church. Her burying clothes she had previously prepared, instucted the friends to put her in a very plain coffin, and if they could, to get Bro. John P. Ebersole to preach her funeral (as he had preached grand fathers funeral about 20 years ago) to do so, but he being to Iowa on a visit could not secure his services.

Having filed our sixth argument in our former essay, in essay No. 2, we shall present our seventh and eighth arguments, closing with a friendly review of our dear editors criticism. Essay No. 3, will contain a review of Brother Zuck's criticism also of Bro. Sharp's, closing with an address to the Berlin eldership. We feel a loss in this delay, hence we shall mail them as early as we can, but as they go before a criticising world (to which we have not the least objection) we cannot consent for them to leave us until we have sifted and carefully weighed each thought. We expect our views to be objectionable in the sight of men, but we do not want them to be objectionable in the light of the scriptnre.

We feel that our arguments have had advantages taken of them. 2, The writers departed from them the subject which we endeavor to treat. 3, They used illogical reasoning each of which we shall prayerfully seek to point out in minute detail.

Church News.

POTTSVILLE, PA., September 14, 1874.

Dear Bro:—I will give you a little church news. I moved here last Spring from Montgomery Co., Pa. Wife and I were baptized last January. There has been a number baptized here this Summer, 17 in this district since Spring, and more are expected before long. Dear brethren and sisters, we ought to live as if each day were our last.—Serve the Lord while it is day for the night cometh when no man can work. We ought to be more ready to return good for evil, and to bless them that curse us and do good to those that despitefully use and abuse us. I feel so poor, and come short so often. Pray for me that I may hold out to the end.

Eld. Samuel Gettle is dead. He was also in our district. Brother George Smith is still alive and well. I heard him preach to-day.

JOHN R. CONRAD

Our Lovefeast will be at Cherokee Washington Co. Tenn. the Lord willing on the 10th and 11th of October. A general invitation to all and especially to ministering brethren. F. W. DOVE.

DANIEL SNOWBERGER.

DIED.

GARVER.—In Germany Valley, Huntingdon Co., Pa., September 10, 1874, Benjamin Garver, aged 27 years, 7 months and 6 days. Funeral services by John Spanogle.

KING.—In the Maidencreek Church, Berks county, Pa., Sept, 8th 1874, Bro. Jonathan King, aged 73 years, 8 months and 25 days.

CRINDLE.—In Flatrock, Green Spring district, Ohio, September 28th, 1874, sister Susannah Crindle, aged 77 years, 9 months and 27 days. Funeral services by the writer.

STONER.—Also in Black Swamp district, Ohio, June 28th, 1874, friend Jacob Stoner, aged 72 year, 3 mo. and 10 days. Funeral services by the writer.

NOAH HENRICKS.

COFFMAN.—On the 15th inst., in Quincy, Antietam Church, Leonard Coffman, aged 28 years 6 mos. 14 days. Funeral services by Bro. Abram Goliy, Mr. J P. Anthony (U. B.) and the writer from Ps. 62:8.

JOHN ZUCK.

FRY.—In the Hopewell branch, Bedford Co., Pa., Sept. 15th 1874, Maria Fry, daughter of brother Abraham and sister Fry; aged 18 years, 6 months and 19 days. Funeral services by Eld. Jacob Steel and others, from Luke 8:52.

SIMMONS.—In the same congregation Sept. 16th, 1874, Ella Mirtle daughter of William Simmons; aged 2 years, 11 mos. and 4 days. Funeral services by John S. Rush and the writer from Heb. 13:14.

HENRY CLAPPER.

HESS.—In the same church, friend Geo. Hess, son of Brother George Hess, on the 8th of Sept. 1874, aged 23 years and 20 days. During his illness he became alarmed about his soul and wanted to be baptized, but it could not be done as he was too weak. Another warning for those that put off from time to time until forever too late. Funeral services by the Brethren.

JEREMIAH ROTHERMEL.

MILLER.—In the Hopewell church, Bedford Co., Pa, Sept. 6th, 1874, sister Margan Miller; wife of brother Archabald Miller, and daughter of brother John and sister Dillinger, aged 22 years, 4 months and 8 days. Funeral services by Eld. J. W. Brumbaugh, J S. Wineland and others. Text, John 14:2,3.

(Companion please copy.)

BOCK,—On the 11th inst., near Shady Grove, in the Fallingspring Church, sister Susanna Bock, aged 78 years, 1 mo. 25 days. She was a consistent follower of the Lord, and was anointed in the name of the Lord, shortly before she died. May her example of piety, and love, long be remembered. Funeral services by the brethren

MULLEN.—In Manor Church Md., on the first inst., sister Elizabeth Mullen, wife of Bro. Henry Mullen, aged 55 years, 9 mos. and 16 days. Disease consumption.

She suffered much in the last stage of her sickness which she bore with Christian resignation. On the 3rd inst., her remains were interred in the Manor graveyard in the presence of many relatives and friends. Funeral services by Eld. D. Long, assisted by Bro. Joseph Long and Bro. Simon Long from 1 Thess. 4th chapter, from verse 13 to the end of the chapter.

JACOB REICHARD.

RITCHEY.—In Waterside, Bedford Co., Pa., Sept. 12th 1874. Sammie, infant son of Bro. Andrew and sister Ruey Ritchey, aged 1 year and seventeen days. Funeral occasion improved by Bro. J. W. Brumbaugh, from these words: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after that the judgment." Heb. 9:27.

NAN A. REPLOGLE.

WALKER.—On the 28th of July 1874, near Bloomville, Ohio, in the Seneca Church, sister Elizebeth, wife of Bro. Stephen Walker, aged 47 years.

Sister Walker was afflicted for many years but always bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude. In her death the Church has lost an exemplary member, her husband an amiable and effectionate companion and her children a kind and loving mother. Funeral services by Elder John Brilhart from Hebrews 4:9, to a large concourse of relatives and sympathizing friends.

MARY ROOK.

TEETER.—In the Yellow Creek branch, Bedford Co., Pa., Sept. 18th 1874, sister Elizabeth Teeter, widow of the late Isaac Teeter, aged 80 years, 11 months and 14 days. Occasion improved from 2 Cor. 4: 17, 18, and the 5th chapter, first 4 verses by Daniel Snowberger and the writer.

The subject of the notice suffered a good deal for nearly four years and a half. She often wished to go home to Jesus, yet patiently waited, without complaining, till her time came. Of her it can be truly said a mother in Israel. Her husband, a deacon in the Church, preceded her about 37 years ago.

LEONARD FURRY.

(Companion please copy.)

VANMETER.—In Logan Co., Ohio, Aug. 24th. 1874, brother Henry Vanmeter, aged 76 years, 5 months and 7 days. Disease, abscess of the liver. He leaves a companion, sister in the Church, and 7 children, and some grand-children to mourn their loss. Funeral preached by Eld. Jos. N. Kauffman, and brother M. Swauger, from Rev. 14: 13.

PLANK.—In Union township, Logan Co., Ohio, August 21st, 1874, David, son of friend Samuel W. and Elizabeth Plank, aged 1 year, 6 months and 23 days. Funeral preached by friend Warich (Omish minister) in German and by the writer in English, from Matt. 18: 3.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Those of our agents and friends who have responded to our call for money will please accept our thanks, and we will be pleased to extend the same courtesy towards many more soon. Who shall they be?

—The book binding project seems to be favorably received, and we are encouraged. That we should have a bindery to bind up the thousands of volumes of our periodicals that are being preserved for that purpose is evident, and we shall push the matter as fast as circumstances will admit.

—If our readers have anything they wish to sell, they should have an advt. in the Almanac. This will be the largest edition ever issued by the Church, and therefore makes an excellent medium for advertisers. 1 column, $30.00, ½ col. $16.00, ¼ $10.00, ⅛ $6.00.

—A new meeting house will be, the Lord willing, dedicated to divine service on Clover Creek, on the 18th of October. This house is some 8 miles down the creek from the old meeting house at Brumbaugh's.

—H. F. Rosenberger of Allentown, Pa., who had been west, prospecting has returned, much pleased with his visit, but in consequence of the hot winds, the great drouth, and the ravages of the grasshoppers, has abandoned the idea of locating there.

—R. W. Branson of Muncie, Delaware Co., Ind., says his health is still not very good but hopes for the better soon. It is still very dry but cool. The chinch bug is playing havoc with the corn and wheat. The peach harvest is good, selling at different prices, from 60 cents to $1.50 per bushel.

—Eld. A. J. Correll, of Craig, Holt Co., Mo., says: "Sept. 14, It has been raining for the last three days, and there has more rain fallen during that time than during the whole Summer. The ground has been soaked deeper than anytime since I have been in Mo.,—3 years and 6 months. The old saying, things come round every seven years is about being verified, as the creeks and springs will soon have as much water as they had seven years ago.

We are still making some preparation to build a meeting-house. We are slow but hope we may be sure. The Brethren may feel that we only think that we need a house, but you are mistaken as we know that we need a house for worship, and if you were here with us you would think as we do.

—Bro. D. K. Teeter of Sulphur Springs, Henry Co., Ind., under date of Sept 15, says: We are having at present a remarkable hot and dry time, and should it not rain ere long, water and pasture for stock will be among the things much appreciated and desired. Although the nights are cool and pleasant, yet the middle of the day is extremely hot and scorching, so that everything green is drying up rapidly. Our wheat crop, although some field are entirely ruined by the chinch bugs, was good, so notwithstanding that there is plenty of wheat and enough to spare in this locality. There is going to be a heavy corn crop here this fall, though the chinch bugs are also at work on it, but as the corn is generally early, they will perhaps not effect much this time. Apples and peaches are plenty, especially peaches of which there seems to be an immense amount, and the people generally are making arrangments to lay up for themselves a supply of this delicious fruit for time to come.

—Bro. Jeremiah Rothermel, of Reading, Pa., says, "I am a reader of the PILGRIM and like it very well if it would only come regular. * * * * (We hope it will come all right now—missing numbers sent. Ed.) I do not like some of the reading, have reference to the school—would prefer to have nothing said either for or against. I am afraid it will do no good, some of the members feelings towards each other may get hurt. I like to read of those things which bring us nearer together and gives us light out of the word of God, through which we all can and must be saved."

We kindly hope that our dear Bro with all such as hold similar views will wave their objections and exercise the spirit of forbearance, as we shall endeavor as far as possible to admit nothing to offend. So far, the spirit of examining the school question has been mild and very considerate, and hope it may so continue. There is no necessity of saying a word on either side to hurt the feelings of anybody.

In consequence of having a lot of correspondence, &c., on hands this week, we occupy a page generally given to essays. We are glad that our correspondents are awakening, and hope they will continue to keep us well supplied. The essays now on hands will be forthcoming.

What difference was there between the "Far Western Brethren" and the "Eastern Brethren" when Wolf and Hendricks were known as "Far Western Brethren?" Who can tell?

The Hill Valley Meeting.

On Saturday Sept. 19th, we, in company with wife and our little boy, took the train en route for the Lovefeast to be held in Hill Valley, Huntingdon Co. Pa. At Mt. Union we changed and got aboard the E. B. T. Narrow Gage road. We heard considerable about narrow gage roads but this was the first time we had the pleasure of riding on one and really, we were favorably impressed with the "little train." The engine is small but beautifully built and pulls its load, apparently, with great ease. The coaches are tastefully built having, for half the length double seats on one side and single on the other and then changed side for side. The road is well constructed and laid with the patent joint rail, thus making a level surface and avoiding much of the jar felt on passing over the old joint. The road is built by a corporation for the benefit of extensive Iron Works which they are now constructing at Orbisonia, a point on the road. It is also intended as a coal road, reaching the east side of the Broad Top Coal fields.

By the time we reached Shirleysburg we concluded we had received the worth of our money and got off. At different points along the way, our number was increased by persons on their way to the meeting, and we now had quite a respectable little company, but notwithstanding our number there were conveyances for all and some to spare. Sister Clark, formerly of the Pilgrim Office, had a conveyance in readeness for us which we accepted and in a short time had the pleasure of visiting her home for the first time, where dinner was prepared for us and where we spent a few hours quite pleasantly indeed. From here we were taken to the place of meeting but reached it too late for preaching, as the exercises were just closing when we arrived.

It will be remembered that this was the first preaching in this house and was what is generally termed the dedication. On entering the house we were agreeably surprised in beholding our esteemed brother and Eld. Christian Long of Adel, Iowa. There were also with him Eld. Robert Badger of Dallas Center Iowa, and parts of their families. We have met Bro. Badger for the first time and formed a very agreeable acquaintance. The first sermon, we were informed, was preached by Eld. Long followed by Bro. Badger. There were also present Eld. J. R. Hanawalt and his son from McVeytown. Eld. Jacob Mohler and Andrew Spanogle from Dry Valley, Eld. George Brumbaugh of James Creek and J. B. Garver of Lower Cumberland Pa.

The afternoon and evening exercises were largely attended and the new house filled beyond its capacity. At the close of the afternoon services it was announced that there were some candidates for baptism when seven came forward declaring their purpose to come out on the Lord's side. The congregation then repaired to the water side where prayer was made and the candidates buried with Christ in baptism.

The evening exercises were attended by a solemnity seldom excelled on such occasions, not only by the members but by the entire congregation, bating a small percentage. After meeting we were taken to the home of our esteemed brother, Seth Myers—lately elected to the ministry—where we, with many others, received all the care and comfort that kind hearts could suggest. On Sunday morning the weather looked unfavorable for meeting, there having been heavy falls of rain during the night but about eight o'clock the rain ceased and by meeting time the weather cleared up nicely. By 10 o'clock the house was filled and the congregation was profitably entertained by Eld. C. Long followed by Eld. J. R. Hanawalt. The afternoon was pleasantly spent in singing at the house of Eld. John Spanogle. Brother John has a taste for music and his family knows how to make it. There were also a number of other good singers present who took part. Why not every body learn to sing, it would be far better to sing away our leisure hours than to spend them as they often are in fretting and needless complaining.

In the evening we again met for public preaching, when the house was well filled with an attentive audience which was profitably entertained by Eld. R. Badger and others. On the whole, it was the most pleasant Communion season that we had the pleasure of enjoying for a number of years. All of the exercises bore upon them the impress of religious earnestness and we feel assured that all present who had a desire to grow in the divine life were not disappointed.

The new church is substantially built of brick, and pleasantly located in Hill Valley, 2½ miles south of Shirleysburg, on the premises of Eld. James R. Lane. It is surrounded by a lot of some 2½ acres and on it a beautiful grove, an excellent spring and a stream of water passing through it. By a little labor it can be made a most desirable Church location surrounded by a growing membership and good moral citizens. The house is within the bounds of the Aughwick Congregation and it is under the charge of our old and esteemed brother J. G. Glock assisted by Abraham Funk, John Spanogle, James R. Lane, R. Wakefield and Seth Myers. In this congregation resides our aged Eld. Andrew Spanogle whose days of active service are past. In his day he was a good and faithful soldier of Jesus and fought many a hard battle. Well may he lay his armor by and patiently await the summons to go to his reward which cannot be long. This church had, for a season, lingered under a cloud but that has now passed away and the sunshine of God's good pleasure is again casting its rays over it by the ingathering of a number of converts, and the prospects are now encouraging. Next morning were conveyed to the rail road where we met a number of others homeward bound, also our western brethren Long and Badger who are on their way eastward where they expect to attend a number of Lovefeasts with the brethren. They also expect to attend our Lovefeast at James Creek before returning home. By noon we reached home well pleased with our visit to the brethren of Hill Valley.

Improve Your Talents.

In the parable of the talents Jesus reminded those whom He addressed of the importance of preparing for his second coming by the improvement of the gifts given unto them. He represents himself as a man taking a journey and before starting, he gives to his servants a stipulated sum of money, which he designs they shall increase or enlarge in value. When he returned, in two of them his design was met, and in one, it was frustrated. There were two results but very widely different. Well done! good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord. What a glorious result! Enter now into heaven, the dwelling place of God and enjoy his presence forever and participate in his joys. But then that "Outer darkness," what a dark picture that represents! It represents nothing more nor less than the dark dungeon of hell, to which every unfaithful servant must expect to be condemned. This, according to justice must be the inevitable result that will follow those servants who suffer that which is entrusted to their care to be abused and neglected.

Reader, we are all God's servants. He has placed us in this world and endowed us with talents or capabilities which he designs we shall employ in his service. By talents we are not to understand merely money, but all that we have in this world is the gift of God and should be employed in such a way as will tend to his glory. Our intellectual abilities are gifts from God, and for these we will be held responsible whether great or small. The term talents as used in the Scriptures was metaphorical of our intellectual endowments, and as so much is dependent upon the use we make of them, it is certainly important that we consider in what manner they are being employed. Jesus says we shall serve the Lord with all our heart, with all our mind and with all our soul, all our powers either mentally or physically should be exercised in his service. Reader, are you doing this? Do you feel that you are the servants of God, and do you feel the responsibility resting upon you as such? Remember God will come to reckon with you shortly, and then will your fidelity to the sacred trust be tested. What will be the condition of that servant who has made no effort to employ his talents in the service of God? Ponder this question well. Ask your own soul every day, what am I doing for God? and what will be my final doom if I am reckless in reference to my duty? Away with every unjust thought and reasoning that would represent God as a rigorous and severe master. They sink the soul into a sullen lifeless condition. Whatever may be our allurements in this line, let us think of the doom of the unfaithful servant, and let this thought awaken our souls and deter us from unfaithfulness. That "Outer darkness," the thought of it should cause every soul to shudder. Let us reflect on the other hand of the unutterable joys that will be realized by the real Christian when the gracious Master shall commemorate his honest though feeble attempts of service with, "Well done thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord!

There is a class of individuals too, who fill the design of God in reference to them in part. They essay to be employed in his service, enter the church, and place themselves in a working posture, and then sit down with folded arms. Some complain of their talent that it is so small, even too small to talk on the subject of religion, to thank God and ask him for what they need, to read the Scriptures orally and raise their voice in prayer. These are all duties belonging to the Christian, and God has surely given all ability enough to perform them. It is true all may not be able to make a long and eloquent oral prayer, but a very few words from the heart are sufficient. And then too our abilities are enlarged by use. As long as they lie dormant they will not increase. We should be willing to employ our abilities, however little they may be in way of duty, or in any capacity that has a tendency to promote God's honor and glory.

In conclusion we cite the reader to the press as a medium through which our talents may be employed to divine acceptance, and if so, are there not many who are not improving them as they should? Brethren and sisters, think of this matter. He who has the ability to labor through the medium of the press has a wide field of operation. The minister may accomplish much, but when confined to this field of labor alone, its limits are narrow, and his audience small compared to that of the writer. This field too, is an admired one, and consequently the writer is in a position to accomplish a good work. There is a natural attachment to our papers, and as a conse quence gain the confidence of the reader. This is essential to successful christian labor. We are creatures of influence; we influence others, and others influence us, but the amount of that influence depends greatly upon the person from whom it emanates. The more confidence we have in a person, the greater control they can have over us, either for good or evil. Our papers sustain a relation to us similar to that of a friend. Persons become attached to them and, consequently they are, like an intimate friend, in a position to accomplish a good work. From these considerations it seems to us the writer is prepared to enter a wide field of usefulness. He is enabled to enter the secret chambers of the mind and mold it almost at will. Well has the poet said,

"But words are things, and a small drop of ink,
Falling like dew upon a thought,
Produces that which makes thousands,
Perhaps millions think."

This field, christian friends, is open before you, and if you fail to labor in it, will not God hold you responsible when he comes to reckon with you? May we not hope that our friends will be aroused to the importance of this matter and feel the responsibility that is resting upon them as laborers in the vineyard of the Lord.

The Lambs of God.

"My faith looks upon thee,
Thou Lamb of Calvary."

So sang Kitty. I called her to me with the question, "Do you know what is meant by the 'Lamb of Calvary?'"

"Jesus is called the Lamb of God in the Bible, and he was crucified on Calvary."

"But now can you tell why Jesus is called the 'Lamb?'"

"Because he was gentle?"

"Partly; but their is another reason; can you think?"

"No, auntie, and I wish you to tell me about it;" and she drew her cricket to my feet, and looked up, all interest and attention.

"You know long, long ago, when all other nations on the earth were idolaters and ignorant of the true God, and the Lord singled out one little nation to be his chosen people."

"The Jews?"

"Yes, you must remember that God was training them for a great work, and"——

"What work?"

"To make him known to the rest of the world."

"The Jews! Why they crucified Christ?"

"Some of them did; but you forget the disciples, who were the first preachers of the gospel, and the many who 'heard him gladly,' only a few of whose names we know—Mary, and Martha, and Lazarus, for instance who were all Jews. Well, God was educating this nation, and one of the great lessons they needed to learn was his hatred of sin. When their training began, they had just left Egypt, where many idols were worshiped, and sin was thought lightly of. But in God's sight, sin is so dreadful that death is the only punishment severe enough for it, and so he told the Jews. But in teaching them of his justice, he at the same time, taught them of his mercy, by accepting the lives of animals instead of their own."

"Sacrifice?"

"Yes; but do you think these animals' lives could really atone for sin?"

"No, and that has puzzled me; why did God have them offered so often?"

"To impress upon men that 'without shedding of blood there is no remission' of sin, and to keep that truth constantly before their minds; to make them feel more and more the dreadfulness of sin, and that even these sacrifices were not enough to atone for it, and so to prepare them for the one great sacrifice which would be sufficient, not only to take aways the sins of one person or one nation, but of the whole world—Jesus Christ. He is our Sacrifice, of which the old Jewish ones were types or figures, and so he is called the Lamb of God. And he was a perfect offering of sin, so that no more are needed. He gave himself! What exceeding great love must be in his heart for us! And how he says to us, 'I died for thee, canst thou not live for me?'"

"What shall we answer him?"—Watchman and Reflector.

Correspondence.

Reporter is wanted from every Church in the brotherhood to send us Church news Obituaries, Announcements, or anything that will be of general interest. To insure insertion, the writers name must accompany each communication. Our Invitation is not personal but general—please respond to our call.

Dear Pilgrim:—I desire through the assisting grace of God at your request, to communicate some items of church news, &c., for your pages to bear to the many homes where the many pilgrims are anxiously waiting for the news you bring on your wings. Some gladden the hearts of the saints, and not only so, but the Savior has said, "There is joy in Heaven among the angels over one sinner that repents, more than over ninty and nine just persons which need no repentance." But upon the other hand, the news of the death of a father, mother, husband, wife, son, daughter, brother or sister makes many sad hearts. The writer and the church in which he lives, has this year lost the elder in the ministry, and I sensibly feel that more of the care of the church is laid upon me. May the Lord assist me, by divine grace, first to rule well my family and all in similar standing, that we may be qualified to help take care of the church as the charge falls upon us. Thus are the Lord's ways; as one passes away another must take his place. I therefore feel to submit all in his hands, because he will do all things well.

We the brethren of the Shade Creek branch of the church announced a meeting some two weeks ago, on Saturday evening the 12th inst., in the Scalp Level meeting-house. We had expected two of our adjoining elders to preach for us, and continue our meeting until Monday, but being disappointed we did not have meeting on Sunday evening. On Monday we met in council where, to our joy, we met our expected ministers. We also soon learned there was an applicant for baptism, which makes about the eighth since our member meeting in June. So we do not feel discouraged though there are not as many as we might wish for, yet we are glad that our labors appear to be appreciated by some poor sinners.

The church assembled on the occasion joined in singing the 282d hymn after which brother John S Holsinger admonished us all acceptably, then bowed in humble prayer, after which, we the ministers of said district, made application for an additional speaker, feeling the truthfulness of Christ's words, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." Our request being granted, we proceeded to hold a choice in the fear of the Lord. We were admonished by our elder Joseph Berky to pray the Lord who knowest the hearts of all men, which of our brethren he has chosen to this work. The lot fell on our beloved brother Peter Knavel, who accepted his office in meekness and humbleness amidst many tears of sympathy shed by the saints. May we all keep in the valley of humility is my prayer.

A LETTER.

[The following letter was sent us by Bro. Wm. Hertzler with the wish that it might be published, hoping that it may be of some general interest to our readers. Ed]

JULY 4th, 1864.

BELOVED BRO. WILLIAM:

Since my ride with you on the top of the hay-ladders, many sorrowful thoughts passed through my mind. The inconsistencies of the Brethren in their proceedings at the last yearly meeting, together with ill health, and domestic trials, rendered me unfit to write to you sooner, and and indeed I am not sure I can write anything to-day that will be worth reading. Did you read the minutes of this year? Was there ever a flatter contradiction in principle than the III and VIII queries? No more of this, I want to write a few lines about the Jewish Tabernacle. It is such a wonderful type, and such a complete figure of Christ and His Church, that I will only speak of one article of the Tabernacle; perhaps at some other time I may write on the same subject. The relation existing between the Mosaic Economy, with its rites and ceremonies, and that which has succeeded it, is compared to that between a shadow and the substance which projects it. Colossians, 2:17. The relation between a shadow and the substance by which it is forecast is easily understood. A shadow gives us some idea of the form of the body with which it is connected. But we cannot tell by the shadow of a tree whether it is apples, pears, peaches, or what the quality or condition of the tree is. It only shows that there is a necessary connection between the tree and itself; and this is all it is designed to show. In spiritual things the shadow or figure shows all this and much much more. It gives not only a general idea of the glorious substance to which it stands related, but also the particular blessings which the substance includes. We cannot tell by the shadow of of a tree whether it bears fruit at all, nor whether it is red or yellow, large or small, scarce or abundant, ripe or green, sweet or sour. But the Jewish Tabernacle is a "shadow of good things to come"—a radiant, expressive type of Christ, with all the fullness, freeness and richness of His grace. All the different departments of the Tabernacle, and its various articles of furniture, have their special signification. When Moses erected the Sacred Structure, he commenced at the Ark, and stopped at the Brazen Altar, but in the order of worship they had to commence at the Altar and stop at the Ark. There was a deep reason for this, but I will pass it by for the present. We will consider ourselves strangers, on a visit to the Camp of Israel, and take a survey of the Holy Tent from the outside inward, and not from the inside out. First we come to the outer court: this is made by linen curtains which are fastened to pillars. The court was about one hundred and seventy-five feet long, from east to west, and nearly eighty-eight feet broad. In this enclosure stood the tabernacle. The Court had no covering, but the Tabernacle had. The Tabernacle was forty-five feet long and fifteen feet broad and high. Let us now go back and imagine ourselves standing immediately out of the linen curtain of the Court. The High Priest comes, separates the curtains, and beckons us to enter. The first object that meets our eye is the "Altar of burnt offering." To this Altar I wish to confine the remainder of this letter. The outer court represents the whole world. The Brazen Altar that stood at the door of the Court was under the open heavens, and could be approached by any one who was conscious of sin. Any one and every one might bring an offering and make atonement for his iniquities. None was excluded from its benefits. They could approach at any hour. The fire was ever burning, and ready for the victim on which was laid the sin of the transgressor. Levitieus VI. 13. This Altar was made of brass and wood. Had it been of wood only, the fire would have consumed it. Had it been of brass only, it would have been too heavy to be borne, for it was nearly five feet high, and nearly eight feet long and broad. Here we have a beautiful and appropriate type of Christ, who is the Altar and Offering, and the Priest. The brass and wood typify the Divine and human nature in our Savior. Had He been only human, the fire of God's justice would have consumed Him when He was "made an offering for sin." Had He been only Divine, His glory and Majesty could not have been borne. It would have crushed us into nothing. It would have driven us from Him instead of attracting us to Him. The brass protected the shittim wood from the action of the flames, and the wood made the Altar portable. Christ's Divinity is tempered and softened by being united to humanity, so as to be supportable to sinful man. The Brazen Altar was the first object they had to attend to in their worship, and if they neglected this, all else that they did was worthless. All the other vessels and articles of the Tabernacle were sanctified by the blood of the Altar. The burnt offering stood related to every other part of the Tabernacle, and all the service derived its value from the Brazen Altar. The atonement of Christ is the central object, in point of value and signification, of the New Dispensation. Were it not for the great atoning sacrifice of the "Lamb without spot or blemish," all our prayers would be as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal," and all our ordinances and forms of worship would be worse than useless. Christ was not laid on the Altar under the cover of the Tabernacle, but was offered up under the open heavens, a ransom for all. As the Brazen Altar sent the odor of the burning victim into the air, and was carried by the wind into every part of the Hebrew Camp, so the sweet incense of Christ's offering rose up to Heaven and was wafted by the breath of the Spirt to the ends of the earth. If we want to wash at the Brazen Laver, we must first offer our sacrifices on the Brazen Altar. The Laver also stood in the outer Court. These are the only two articles that were uncovered. When we feel our sins, and the wrath of God is kindling a very hell in our souls, we come to the Brazen Altar and receive the benefit of the great atonement. This includes repentance and faith, and is a public matter, if not in its process at least in its results. We cannot put a covering over the Altar. Neither can we hide the Laver. When we have repented of our iniquities, and by faith have offered up Christ we proceed to the Brazen Laver. This contains holy water. This was also sprinkled with blood, and the water it contained derived its efficacy from the Altar. It is the righteousness of Christ, the great burnt offering, that gives baptism its value. He whose sins were not consumed with Christ on the Altar, will come in vain to the Laver. Baptism is a public ordinance, with no shelter or covering save the firmament of God. It must be a wonderful case indeed where baptism in the onse is justifiable. Having now washed at the Laver, we pass into the Holy place. This was the first department of the Tabernacle itself. This was covered. Those who are baptized,—washed at the Laver of regeneration,—will have no more to attend to in order to enter the Holy Place, except pass through the vail. When persons are immersed we regard them as already in the Church, and if ind ed they are in, but they must yet pass through the vail, that is, they must receive the hand and kiss of the Comforter as a formal acknowledgement of membership. He that comes to the Laver without the benefits of the Altar, will remain in the outer court in a spiritual sense, that is, in his general character and spirit he will be worldly. The Laver has several other significations besides the one referred to, but I will not expatiate thereon in this letter. What I have said will give you something to think about.

Do you remember what you preached when you were last at the Hennes meeting-house? I will never forget it. You said you sometimes pass through spiritual conditions in which you are so destitute of comfort that your mind turns back to the "flesh-pots of Egypt," and you think of the "encumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick" which you "eat freely" in the house of bondage. Now brother William, I must ask you a question; when you feel such a sense of desolation, when such a cloud settles on the sun of your soul, can you always or generally refer it to any particular act of your life, or does it come without any consciousness of sin? We all have deep, dark valleys to pass thro', and only now and then a green, sunny spot, but it is much more difficult to dispel the darkness occasioned by sin than that which comes without our knowing how, or whence, or why. When our conscience convicts us of guilt, however trifling it may seem, the present is full of anxiety, and the future full of gloom and apprehension. To sin wilfully as specified by Paul, Heb x: 26, would leave us without hope. But that sin is one of a peculiar nature, and not likely to be committed by any of us. It was spoken to the Jews. They were accustomed to offer sacrifices daily on the Brazen Altar. These offerings were proper and valuable in their appointed time, but when Christ was laid on the Altar all the Mosaic ceremonies lost their efficacy. Paul said to the Hebrews that if they "sin wilfully," or reject the offering of Christ, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." They could not return to Judaism, and make use of the old offerings. They are without value. He that sins wilfully in that sense, must turn away from the Brazen Altar with the determination not any longer to have any confidence in the merits of its great, divine, eternal offering. But the Christian, when he sins, which he often does, instead of resolving to turn his back finally on Christ, or the Brazen Altar, is thankful that he can again return. The Israelites could return again and again, and make atonement on the Altar. So we can approach whenever we will. The atonement has no limit as to the number of sins, but it has a limit as to the character of sin. All sin can be forgiven, as far as the POWER and EFFICACY of Christ's blood are concerned, but there is one sin which will not be forgiven, because it is the sin against the Holy Ghost. Why will not this sin be pardoned? Because it is the Holy Ghost which convinces of sin, and when we sin against the Holy Ghost we can no longer be brought under conviction. However often a believer may sin, as long as he feels sorry, and sincerely desires to return to the great sacrifice, he can do so, for it is the Holy Ghost which begets this desire. To "sin wilfully" is to lose confidence in the essential merits of the sacrifice of Christ. This is the grand point to be unfolded to those who think there is no more mercy for them. I must close. Do you think you can find time to write to me? PLEASE PRESERVE THIS LETTER. We all send much love to you and the church in your house. My health is poor. Yours in bonds of love.
